Driving Position Made Far More Comfortable

Although the driving position in modern motor cars is far more comfortable in many ways than it was in older type vehicles, few make provision for an arm rest for the driver. The illustration shows a simple arm rest designed to hook over the window regulator of the door at the driver's side. It consists of a sheet iron bracket to which is attached a padded wooden strip to form the arm rest. The length of the bracket and the dimensions of the arm rest must, of course, be arranged to suit the car.—Popular Science Monthly.

The reason the back of the car gets so dirty under average circumstances, and especially when driving fast as on a tour, is that a vacuum is created behind it which pulls the dust and mud onto the body.

Community Building

Progressive City Sees to Its Attractiveness

While much emphasis is being placed—and rightly—on the advantages that Indianapolis possesses as a commercial and industrial center, which are many and obvious, not enough thought or effort is directed to making it attractive as a place of residence. The men who work here have to live here, and therefore the town must be a good deal more than a workshop.

While we have a fine start, there is much that might and should be done to increase the advantages that we already possess. We are richly endowed with churches, schools, libraries and art facilities, all of which make a strong appeal to those seeking new homes. We have our clubs, municipal playgrounds, golf courses and swimming pools and parks, and these are very important assets.

Valuable as they are, other things are needed. People like to live in comfort and amid beautiful surroundings. A campaign for the beautification of the city would yield rich returns. There should be greater care for our trees and a planting of new ones, even in streets supposed to be doomed to treelessness—certain of our business streets, for instance.

The campaign against the smoke evil will, just as far as it succeeds, contribute to both beauty and comfort—contribute very largely. For cleanness is an element in both. Dinginess is certainly not attractive. Nor is it sanitary. Beauty, cleanliness and comfortable living conditions are all the marks of a wideawake and progressive community.—Indianapolis News.

Rural Schools Urged to Beautify the Grounds

The Missouri state highway department urges each rural school on a state highway to beautify its school grounds with proper plantings and landscaping, and offers the services of a landscape expert to the schools for the preparation of suitable plans for planting flowers, trees and shrubbery, according to letters sent by the department to all county school superintendents in the St. Joseph highway division.

This move is a part of the highway beautification project started by the state highway department last year.

George L. Argus, engineer at the St. Joseph highway office, points out that northwest Missouri's wooded countryside abounds in native shrubs and plants that are unequaled for landscaping purposes, and they may be transplanted to the school grounds, and if a landscaping program is followed, surprising results at little cost can be obtained. Other desirable plants and flowers may be brought from home by the pupils.—Kansas City Star.

Modern Traffic Needs

The smaller cities of the country, even the small towns, need major street plans and other comprehensive plans as badly as the big metropolitan areas. Everywhere the increased use of the automobile, demand for traffic relief, for airports, parks and new and enlarged business centers is requiring enormous changes, particularly in the widening of streets laid out for a horse-drawn era.

Regional planning activity in the United States has materially increased, particularly in and about Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia and Washington. Many new county planning commissions have been established.

Scenery or Signery?

California is waging an intensive campaign against signboards that disfigure the landscape. There is a reason. Landscape is large in California's stock in trade for tourists.

So the slogan of the warfare on the boards is "Scenery or Signery?" And it seems to be an effective one. Public opinion is operating to compel elimination of obnoxious disfigurements to beauty. It is this force that has impelled two big companies, along with others, to cut out all their roadside displays except one or two of directional value to drivers.

"Scenery or Signery?" It is an all-inclusive suggestion. — Minneapolis Journal.

Remodeling Old Homes

Veneering an old house with face brick has been made a simple process. The contractor merely changes a few old-fashioned bays, etc., on the exterior and lays up the brick right over the old frame. Many builders are offering to finance the remodeling job, letting the owner pay a small amount down and the rest on convenient terms.

Brick Combines Well

Common brick meets all architectural demands for surface effects and type. It may be used in the best homes in combination with slate or tile roofs, copper and zinc gutters and down spouts, metal casements and sash, exposed oak timbers and plate glass!

Storks Avoid Great Britain

Storks are rare birds in Great Britain, and have always been so, but an ancient chronicler writes that in 1416 storks came and built their nests on the roof of St. Giles' church in Edinburgh, and, after staying a year, left to return no more. "And whither they flew," he writes quaintly, "no man knoweth."

Great Pleasure Palace Planned for New York

Looking ahead to television and the vast possibilities of radio as a medium of entertainment, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and a group led by the Radio Corporation of America will erect an oval building and a 60-story skyscraper covering three square blocks at a cost of $25,000,000. The site is between Forty-eighth and Fifty-first streets and Fifth and Sixth avenues, New York city. The opening is expected to be in about 1933. This radio center is to house four large theaters, one seating 7,000; a motion picture auditorium seating 5,000, another for musical comedy, one for legitimate drama and possibly a large symphony hall. The enterprise is expected to do much toward promoting all the arts in the range of electrical entertainment.

One fact uncovered by the census takers is the liking for long names. We often laugh at the lengthy names of royalty, but the fact is, we are just as bad.

In one house, out on West Jefferson street, the woman—after the enumerator had asked for her full name—replied:

"It's too long to tell you, and you haven't room enough on the blank to write it down anyway. But if you're curious, just look on the flyleaf of that family Bible—the first half of the page is me."—Los Angeles Times.

Throw a stone in a flock of dogs and the ones that are not hit wont say anything.

Friends or foes—give them the best you have got. Everybody knows just what that means.

But enemies ain't so bad after all. It's lots of fun sitting 'round watchin' them wear themselves out.

Already the song of the cricket and arguments of the katydids make us think of our local coal dealers.

A concrete example: You, stepping on a banana peeling and making an involuntary sitting on the sidewalk.

A smile from a friend means confidence and support. A smile from an enemy means "thirty pieces of silver."

A fair question: Where is the place to send a boy to get the best religious training, to a bible school or a prize fighting college?

Are we headed for more perilous times or just "the same old line?"

Why don't we sing, "It ain't a gon'a rain no more.

If you have any doubt about your interests being taken care of correctly in your community—hire a detective to detect what and where the matter is.

Do you want to see your friend succeed in life? Alright. Just make him believe that you really want him to fail and he will put it over human nature in just that way.

Small town ingredients: Band concerts, street fights, speeding cars, the other fellow's business, your business, our milk, new car, winter coal, hunting a job, what's the score, going to the fair, winter, gossip, credit, your wife, his wife, your old man's wife, law, town talk, cash and other things too numerous to mention.

Will Rogers says: "Why don't somebody print the truth about our present economic situation. We spent six years of wild buying on credit. (Everything under the sun whether we needed it or not.) And now we are having to pay for 'em under Mr. Hoover and we are howling like a pet coon." P. S.—This would be a great world if we didn't have to pay the fiddler.

Abe Martin in the Indianapolis News says: "A short while ago when ever' thing wuz goin' big the commonest remark goin' the rounds wuz, 'What this country needs is a good, stiff panic to bring people to ther senses. We're livin' too fast an' good.' Times may not be as good as they have been, but it's still purty hard to find a parkin' place. People may be hungry, but they've never before looked so stunnin' an' well groomed. An' we've still got to work fast if we want to git a reservation on a Mediteranean cruise."

It isn't fate that keeps people poor financially, unlearned educationally, ragged morally, stiff necked spiritually, broke socially, and wrecked physically. Its just a bad investment of their heads, that pays no dividends or interest, and which must be rated as a liability rather than an asset. The world always gives the guy a hand who uses his head to go ahead and who keeps his eyes on celestial stars instead of earthly stars.

Of course, to be liberal in views and make a human allowance for man's wayward traversities, we must think in terms of tolerance in judging a brother or sister who has been beguiled while basking in the sunlight of some illuminating personality and left the rails. To be exact, this life is full of things that make a fellow lose his head and we recommend much sympathy as we think of life as we all see it. Never-the-less there is a way out, up, and over every obstacle. In the least possible words, it isn't fate, it's pate, that makes our gait.

Governor Leslie is Very Enthusiastic Over the Indiana State Fair

Governor Harry G. Leslie, an ex-officio member of the Indiana Board of Agriculture, is very much interested in the progressiveness of the state fair and the manner in which it is being handled. He makes the following statements:

"The fame of the Indiana State Fair has become Nation-wide. Its equipment and premium list are unsurpassed by that of any other state. The scope of its interests attests the sagacity of its promoters. The Indiana Board of Agriculture has followed a consistent policy of expansion and improvement until every interest of the State is represented in the exhibit. This year's fair promises to surpass any previous year in quality and quantity of exhibits.

"The State's support of this institution has made possible adequate housing and no pains are being spared in placing exhibits where they can be shown to the best advantage.

"Education in properly emphasized, and boys' and girls' clubs are encouraged by liberal premiums. The girls school, conducted each year, during the fair, cannot be too strongly commended.

"The date, August 30th to September 6th inclusive makes it easy for every one to attend. Any one will be well repaid for time and money spent at this great exposition."

Secretary Says More Exhibits in Every Department of Indiana State Fair in 1930 Than Ever Before

E. J. Barker, Secretary-Treasurer of the Indiana Board of Agriculture, is very optimistic regarding the 1930 State Fair, which will be held from August 30 to September 6. He says:

"Prospects are very encouraging for the 1930 Indiana State Fair. More exhibit space has been assigned in the mechanical department than in previous years and more concession space has been sold than ever before.

"The interest in the live stock and poultry departments far exceeds other years.

"Cattle and horses are coming from all parts of the United States. Several of the best stables of Show and Saddle horses will be here, not only those of former years, but many new stables will be represented.

"The National Swine Show is being held in connection with the state fair and this will bring together the greatest swine show ever held in all history. We have entries from fifty breeders west of the Mississippi river and it will be a 'battle royal' between the east and west.

"Our race program is the best offered at any state fair and as good as is offered at any Grand Circuit meeting anywhere. Practically all the good Grand Circuit horses are entered here.

"The best program at night in front of the grandstand is offered that has ever been staged at the Indiana State Fair. Come and see it.

This program will be featured by running races, having just put in a complete lighting system around the mile track. This is a special feature, never before attempted at any state fair and is a novel feature that we believe will be appreciated by the general public. This is a day of entertainment under lights, which is proven by the success of baseball games, football, miniature golf, and similar events.

"The Indiana State Fair of 1930 is offering a total of $178,460.88 in premiums and purses, which is many thousands in excess of any other fair."

Stork Must Have Been Busy in Atlanta

So many babies—a record number—have come into the world recently at the Grady hospital in Atlanta, Ga., that this over-size crib was devised to accommodate some of them. As may be seen, it holds twelve of the little ones if they are packed in like sardines.

What the Long Drought Did to Ohio Corn

C. E. Lloyd of Washington Court House, Ohio, is here seen standing in a field of his corn whose condition is typical of much of the corn in the Middle Western states. At the right is Francis Dashiele of the weather bureau in Washington beside the empty rain gauge on the roof of the bureau building, looking in vain for clouds.

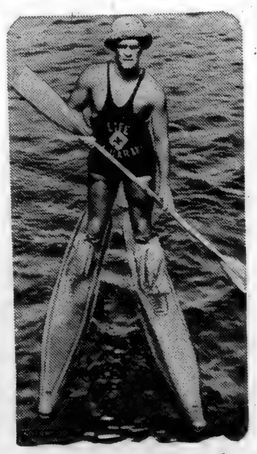
Dog Decorated for Heroic Rescue

Underwood & Underwood

Miss Jeannette Khun, chairman of the award committee of the Pasadena Heroic Animal foundation, awarding Don, a mongrel dog, with the gold medal, for his heroic act in saving the lives of his mistress, Mrs. Chivvis and her two children, in the tragic collapse of the St. Francis dam a while ago. At left is Chic Chivvis, the mutt's master. Other animals—birds, horses and even an ostrich—have been honored for heroism by Pasadena.

USES WATER SKIS



A new idea for life-guards at crowded beaches—Lewis Winston, star tackle of the Duke university football team, with his new Austrian water-skis, which he uses at the Cavalier Beach club near Virginia Beach, Va. The new system enables him to move faster while "running" out to save a person in trouble.

AMOS, A HERDSMAN CALLED OF GOD TO BE A PROPHET

LESSON TEXT—The Book of Amos.

GOLDEN TEXT—I heard the voice of the Lord saying, Whom shall I send and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I, send me.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Shepherd Who Became Great.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Shepherd Who Became Great.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Answering God's Call.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Work That Serves God.

I. The Call of Amos (1:1).

He was a herdsman and gatherer of sycamore fruit (7:14). As a herdsman his income was not sufficient, therefore, he supplemented it by selling sycamore fruit. He was not a prophet by succession, neither was he trained in the prophetic schools. He sat not at the feet of any great teacher. God called him from a humble life to stand before the kings. A prophet is one who forthtells more especially than foretells. His primary work was proclaiming God's message rather than predicting events to come.

II. To Whom Was Amos Sent (1:1)?

God sent him primarily to Israel, the northern nation. Though he was from Judah, his ministry was to be primarily to Israel. It was during the reign of Jeroboam II when the northern kingdom had reached its highest state of prosperity. This prosperity, as is usually the case, was accompanied with a condition of luxury, corruption, and gross wickedness.

III. Amos' Message.

1. Sins denounced (2:6-8; 6:1-6).

(1) Avaricious greed (2:6-8).

a. Sold the righteous for silver (v. 6).

The judge for a bribe of silver declared the innocent to be guilty.

b. Sold the poor for a pair of shoes.

The word "shoes" doubtless means sandals, the price of which was comparatively small.

c. Pants after the dust of the earth (v. 7).

The word "pant" means to eagerly desire. So avaricious had these men become that they even grasped after the earth which the downtrodden poor cast upon their heads in mourning their misery.

d. Turned aside the way of the meek.

These grasping rich men turned aside those who did not stand up for their rights.

e. Licentiousness (v. 7).

It was not merely the case of falling into sensuous sin but indulgence with a definite purpose of insulting God and dishonoring his holy name.

(2) Reckless security (6:1-3).

They were living in a "fool's paradise" and closing their eyes to the approaching storm of judgment predicted by the prophet. They regarded their city as impregnable. The strength of a nation is its righteousness, not its wealth and armaments.

(3) Luxury (vv. 4-6).

Their luxury expressed itself in:

a. Extravagant furniture (v. 4).

They had beds of ivory, which means perhaps wood inlaid with ivory.

b. Laziness (v. 4).

Many stretched themselves on their couches, living lives of indolence.

c. Feasted on delicacies (v. 4).

They bought what they desired regardless of its cost.

d. Adorned their feasts with music (v. 5).

They sang idle songs, even invented musical instruments for this purpose.

e. They drank wine (v. 6).

They drank from bowls, indicating excessive drinking. Though their feasts were adorned with refinement of music, they ended in drunkenness.

(4) They failed to grieve for Joseph (v. 6).

Joseph here stands for Ephraim and Manasseh.

2. The remedy proposed (5:4-9).

The prophet called upon them to return to God. He said, "Seek ye me and ye shall live." The implication is that while as yet the divine judgments are stayed an opportunity is offered for them to turn to God. "Seek" means applying for help. The time to repent is while judgment is stayed. In their turning to God they were to renounce:

(1) Idolatry (vv. 5, 6).

They were to turn away from the places of idolatry—Bethel, Gilgal, and Beersheba. God's judgment was to strike these places.

(2) Cease to pervert judgment (v 7).

Turning judgment to wormwood implies the bitterness of the perversion of judgment to the injured.

(3) Cease to dethrone righteousness.

Leaving off righteousness is thought to mean that unrighteousness was allowed to take its place. He now for the third time urged them to seek the Lord.

Praise the Lord

Good is the Lord—his loving kindness and his tender mercy are beyond all my thought! I will therefore praise him loudly, sweetly, with my whole heart, and with the buoyancy of ecstatic love.—Joseph Parker.

Trifles

"In conduct do not make trifles of trifles. Record the smallest action as being either right or wrong, and make a conscience of little things."—Spurgeon.

"Really, dear—its suds work like magic!"

"I SIMPLY can't understand why anyone still scrubs clothes. It is such a waste of energy. With this soap all I do is soak, rinse—and hang out a bright, snowy wash.

"Oh, yes—Rinso is quite safe. I trust my finest linens to its thick, creamy suds. In fact, I've noticed my clothes last longer since I've been using Rinso; they don't need to be scrubbed threadbare."

Lively, lasting suds

Even in hardest water, Rinso is all you need. No bar soaps, chips, powders, softeners. Cup for cup, Rinso gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps.

Great in washers, too. The makers of 38 famous washers recommend Rinso. And just try it for dishes, floors, walls, all cleaning! Get the BIG package.

MILLIONS USE RINSO in tub, washer and dishpan

TYPISTS. Everywhere, turn your spare time into money, at home or office. "Typists Tips" tells how. Mailed postpaid for $1. Stenographic Studios, Marion, Indiana.

Salesmen. Positions open at once. Big profits. No experience necessary. Marvel Burglar Alarm Mfg. Co., Box 216, Davenport Ia.

This Way Out

Elizabeth Ann's mother noticed her standing in the doorway holding the front door wide open.

"Don't do that, Elizabeth Ann," her mother commanded the little girl. "You'll let the flies in!"

"Oh, I'm not letting more in," replied Elizabeth Ann. "There are so many in the house now that I'm letting them out!"

TIRED WHEN SHE GOT UP

Strengthened by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Paul, Minn.—"I used to be as tired when I got up in the morning as when I went to bed. I had fainting spells and palpitation. Of course it was my age. I read a Lydia E. Pinkham booklet and started taking the Vegetable Compound three times a day. I am now a well woman. Three of my neighbors know what it did for me so they are taking it too. I will write to any woman if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help her as it did me. I feel like a young woman now and I thank you."—Mrs. H. C. Henry, 236 Fuller Ave., St. Paul, Minnesota.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Ernestine is hurt because Will insists he must take Poole, who is drunk, home and leave her in care of his friend, Tucker. It brings their first quarrel.

"Undress and get in bed," said Will. "What do you mean, sitting here, without more clothes on, in this icy room? Do you wish to harm yourself?"

She laughed. "You are concerned about my welfare, aren't you?" she taunted him, and for answer he seized her shoulders and gave her a quick little shake.

"Ernestine," he demanded, "will you do as I say?"

She stood trembling, fighting down the stupid well of tears, reaching out after her departing anger.

"Will,"—her voice was as low, as vital as his own—"I'm in such a rage that I have got to talk to you. You can't treat me this way. You can't leave me to the courtesy of strangers. You can't take me to such places—where there's drunkenness and immorality. You have got to be a better husband to me than that. I have given up everything for you—everything—

"When you are in bed, I'll talk to you," he answered, as he threw off his coat and went to the wardrobe and brought her her warm dressing gown, nightgown and fur-lined moccasins. He undid the fastening of her dress and before she could arm herself against him, he lifted it off over her head. The satin slip, the silken underthings—her body was like cold marble. In a moment, it seemed, she was in nightgown and dressing gown, in bed, and he was drawing off her gossamer hose and chafing her feet in his own cold hands until the mottled skin showed red with blood. Then he tucked her under the covers and brought a chair and sat down beside her, not touching her. Ernestine laughed again.

"If you really cared," she said, her eyes dark with anger and pain, "whether I were warmly in bed you might have come with me to see."

He was silent. He was very pale. Small beads of perspiration stood upon his forehead in the cold room.

"I am not likely to be ill," she said scornfully. "Don't be afraid of that."

Still he did not speak, but looked at her as though he were trying to arrange some momentous decision in his mind. He took a cigarette from his pocket with hands trembling so that when he lighted it he burned himself, and flung the match away with an angry exclamation.

"Ernestine," he said, turning to her, "there is one thing that I will never take from you. You are hysterical now, but no matter how angry, how sick or upset you are, there is one thing that you must never say to me. Never again. I won't take it from you."

He drew the smoke into his lungs with an effort at self-control, while she stared up at the blur of him, her dark eyes swimming with tears.

"I didn't know that you gave up anything for me," he said. "I thought this marriage was on both sides the satisfying of a strong need. I never asked you to make a sacrifice for me. At least, that is not the way I thought of it, and I don't think you did either. But if you made one, I will never ask you to continue it. Any time you want what you left you have only to put on your hat and go back and get it. This must be understood between us. You are under no compulsion to stay with me. If you gave up other things, it was because this was something you wanted more. Either our marriage was a gain for both of us, or it was a mistake."

"Why don't you go ahead and remind me that I proposed to you?" she said, too helpless in her own emotions to be sensible.

"Did you?" he asked coldly. "I thought the matter was spontaneous. I thought it was inevitable. Don't cheapen yourself with such a thought. But however it happened, it was not a sacrifice. I will not be sacrificed for. I don't want anybody to give up anything for me. Understand?"

There was a moment of silence, and he went on swiftly:

"It may be that before we are through with this business of marriage it will be really hard for us. I don't know that I'll ever be what your family considers essential in a husband—a good provider. I may never make more than a small living for us. Sometimes, like now, I feel such power in me that I could go out and take life by the throat. I feel at times that there are big things in me, Ernestine. But perhaps all human beings feel that way. There are other moments when I'm not even sure that I can hold the job I have. What then? Maybe there is worse ahead of us, instead of better. What of that? Do we love each other, or don't we? Are we married, or are we simply having a lovely time and will go home when the party is over? You can do as you like. I will not interfere with your actions, but neither will I come home and account for my own. If Mr. Poole is drunk and it seems necessary to me to go home with him, you must allow me the exercise of my own judgment. I didn't leave you unprotected. In reality, you left me."

"It wasn't only that." She was actually defending herself. "It was everything. Lillian and Loring coming in on us, and Mr. Pastano—"

Half weeping, still partly in the hold of anger, she told him all that Mr. Pastano had said to her. He listened attentively, but made nothing of it.

"What do you care," he exclaimed, "what that bully says? It's only a compliment. It's only a denial of his whole code of morals. The fact that you could sit in his dirty place and still be so clean that even he could see it, gives the lie to all he says."

"I don't understand anything," wailed Ernestine. "Only I was so hurt— I had to go off alone with them. You might have come with me. I was so happy, so thrilled, and then everything was spoiled without any warning. I can't adjust myself to things like you do—I don't understand. Of course I care what Mr. Pastano thinks. I don't want him to think you would take me out to associate with p-prostitutes!"

He sat on the edge of the bed now and held her hand and smoked another cigarette and thought about this. But they had come back into a calmer place. He began to reason with her in his steady voice, looking down at her with his kindled, intelligent eyes.

"You see, Ernestine, he's got the old line on things, and we, I believe, want the new. Pastano's morality and virtue are only for women. I've been there often, and he's made me very welcome. How unreal it is. Virtue a woman's prerogative, and a stone wall about her to insure it. A harem! You don't believe in walled gardens for wives, do you, Ernestine? After all, no man can protect his wife's virtue for her, if she is determined to throw it away."

"You think then that a husband has no responsibilities at all?"

"I didn't say that. Certainly he has responsibilities. He is to provide for her to the best of his ability. He is to share all his earnings and his honors with her. He is to shelter her and speak kindly to her and love her and not find fault. He is to be faithful in word and thought. He is to be natural in his relationship with her and avoid sentimentality. But also, she is to be a woman grown and unafraid, his equal, not a child for him to protect like a child."

"You are so hard," she wept, "so hard with me."

He bent and kissed her and pressed his face to hers. "It's life," he said. "We have to grow up. Life is hard."

Ernestine wakened next morning to find that the pain and confusion of the night before had vanished into a new and not unhappy perspective on her life.

For the first time she could see what a blow it had been to mamma and papa to have her living in Erie street, with no margin, no possessions, no possibility of restraint or economy. How difficult it was—perhaps for their sakes she ought to co-operate with mamma and papa to do something for them. Enough money for a decent flat—a small comfortable house—it would be so much easier for mamma.

But Ernestine felt again the cold wind on her cheeks, remembered vividly how she had wept, and how she had said, again and again, "I promise, Will—I promise." He had asked her for no such statement. She had done the bargaining. Whatever it cost—to her family or to herself—she would keep that promise to Will, and live on what he brought her until he himself told her to do otherwise.

Ernestine began to wonder if she would be as good a wife and mother as Elaine Briceland, when the time came that Will had made good.

She paused to consider this thought and smiled happily, for now she saw that for the first time she was entirely confident of Will's success. It had been as much longing as conviction before, but now she was sure. How hard he was! His hardness brought only admiration this morning, the practical respect of a practical person. "If you want to go back, you've only to put on your hat and do it!" She wondered how many men had the courage to take a stand like that.

She did not regret the quarrel at all. Her marriage had attained a new reality. She knew that she was not simply having a good time. She knew that she could not go home when the party was over. They had advanced from the honeymoon period into permanence.

In what way, here and now, could she make this new feeling practical, make it effective?

How would they meet the obligation of childbirth? Would she go home to mamma or to some hospital? They would have to plan without mamma if they were to be consistent. She understood that babies were frightfully expensive. She had read articles in magazines about them. Yet thousands of women with no more money than she possessed had babies. She would have to find out how they managed.

She would have to see a doctor, ask questions, answer them. She would have to find out the rates at different hospitals, under different conditions. And after she had investigated the matter and decided on her own plan, she would have to begin to save a definite amount every week, out of Will's pay, so that they might meet the emergency. That would be fun—to have money in her hand, when her time came!

She decided to say nothing to Will about this, until she knew. Like her mother, she must exercise her virtue privately and let results speak for her. She had a few dollars with which to open a savings account. There was a bank nearby, a branch of a downtown bank. She would get a metal coin chest for herself and Will.

Her mental activity now became physical, and she rose and dressed, kissed Will lightly on the cheek, and left a note on the dresser for him, lest he think she had taken his advice and gone home. Downstairs she found a box full of roses for her, and a card in it with a few words written in an erect elaborate script:

"To beg forgiveness for my rudeness, and to express the hope that we may be real friends some day.—L. S. Pastano."

Ernestine gave the roses to Mrs. Bennett without comment and went out.

Last April she had been a schoolgirl. Now she was filled with the solemn importance of wifehood and motherhood. The sweet air filled her with happiness. Her husband's face fled before her mind's eye, down the long curve of boulevard, an indignant countenance, fiery, strong. Her heart contracted within her at the thought of him and his love.

The visit to the doctor's was prolonged, but she reached mamma's house in time for lunch, and found the two women so full of Lillian's plans that she kept her own secret.

Determined to make the day complete she left early and set out for the long tiresome street car ride to the Northwest side. She was ashamed to realise how few were the visits she and Will had made to the little house where his mother and father lived. She was at her mother's house two or three times a week, but they had not been to see Will's mother half a dozen times in the months of their marriage. It was not intentional neglect, but it always seemed to work out that way, and Will had been as lax as she about spending his one day a week on that long journey.

Copper Mines of Chile Worked by the Incas?

What is now the world's largest known copper ore deposit was worked by the prehistoric Incas, judging by remains that have been found at and near the copper mines of Chuquicamata, Chile. Within the mine, primitive tools have been found from time to time, such as stone hammers and wooden shovels, as well as mummified remains of early Indian miners, one of which is now at the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

The ruins of Pucaro, an ancient fortified city destroyed by the Spaniards during their first invasion of Chile, are 25 miles from Chuquicamata. Ancient graves belonging to this prehistoric city have yielded bowls and other utensils of copper as well as bead necklaces made from brochantite and atacamite, minerals characteristic of the Chuquicamata deposits.

The Incas, reputed as pre-Columbian, America's best miners and metal workers, conquered this part of Chile about 1443, it is reliably estimated, and the old mines may, therefore, have been worked at least ninety years before the discovery of America.—Kansas City Star's Science Service.

Example of Colonial Type of Home That Has Many Pleasing Features

We are sure you will agree that this fine example of the colonial design is worth a second look, and don't overlook the floor plan with its center hall and large sun room off the living room. The entrance is one of the best colonial designs.

By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to practical home building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

There are many variations of the colonial type home, but the one shown in the accompanying illustration is about as near the true colonial as it is possible to get. The only variation from the colonial in this home is the addition of the sun porch at the right. Without this porch this home is exactly the type that will be found in so many New England villages.

This is a two-gable, rectangular house, 28 feet by 24 feet. On the first floor are the living room, dining room and kitchen, and on the second floor three bedrooms and bath. The entrance door is directly in the center of the house with the living room at the right of the hall and the dining room at the left.

The true colonial balance is retained in this house, there being two windows on either side of the entrance with three windows on the second floor in perfect alignment.

The living room at the right of the hall extends the depth of the house and is 23 feet by 11 feet 3 inches. Connected with this through french doors on both sides of an open fireplace is the sun parlor, which is 7 feet 6 inches by 16 feet deep. To the left of the entrance hall is the dining room the same width as the living room and 12 feet 6 inches deep. At the back is the kitchen, 9 feet 3 inches by 10 feet with a breakfast room adjoining.

Colonial stairs run out of the entrance hall to the second floor. There are three bedrooms, two at the front and one at the back and a bathroom all opening off the hall.

The house is built of frame set on a concrete foundation with a basement of the same dimensions as the house proper. An attractive feature of the home is the entry way, which is enclosed. The platform and steps of brick lead to it. For prospective home builders who want to get the greatest amount of space for their money, this design is good.

Many Good Reasons for Remodeling Old Home

Home modernizing appeals to owners of old homes from a number of different angles. Following are some of the reasons for modernizing which dealers have put before home owners.

The sale or rent value of an old home may be greatly increased by improving its appearance and equipping it with modern conveniences. The increased value is considerably greater than the cost of making the improvements.

People not able or willing to pay for the construction of a new house may have their old home modern in appearance and convenience for but a part of the cost of a new building.

Most old homes hold a hidden treasure—sound lumber and sturdy construction. The sound lumber in an old house is well seasoned. Architects and contractors often pay a premium for the lumber taken from old buildings for use in building apartments and other structures. Most old houses are of real good construction—a value that the owner would be wise in taking advantage of.

Many old homes have an unsatisfactory arrangement of rooms, doors and windows. These features can be made to the owner's liking by modernizing.

It is not necessary to do all of the modernizing work on a house at one time, although this usually is desirable. The owner can determine on the work he wants done and have it completed step by step as he is able to pay for it.

A nondescript type of house can be changed into a good architectural type, such as an English cottage, one of the colonial types or an adaptation of one of these styles.

A house may be modernized easily, without impairing the strength of any part.

Some owners of old homes want to keep them because of sentimental attachment. By modernizing they can retain that to which sentiment is attached and at the same time have modern conveniences and attractiveness.

Owners of some old homes would like to have them modernized because of their contrast to the modern houses which have been built around them.

An old home can be made absolutely new in appearance, with no indications that it has been made over.

Unused attic and basement space can be converted into additional bedrooms, dens, sewing rooms, playrooms, studios, billiard rooms or some other kind of special room.

Use Paint for Profit in Selling Your Home

Though about the least expensive item in home modernization, observes a writer in the Household Magazine, paint is one of the greatest factors in paying greater returns in satisfaction to the home owner or occupant or in earning actual profits in resale or rental value.

"Paint is refreshing, symbolic of cleanliness, and, to most of us, the embodiment of sanitation. Engines idle as we drive through streets of painted houses, but as we enter the unpainted districts, a heavy foot descends upon the gasoline feed. Did you ever try to rent or sell a house that needs painting? Then you know, or strongly suspect, that paint is just as good business for the house owner as it is for the merchant or filling station operator," advises the writer. "An ordinary roof shingle, sixteen inches long and one-fourth inch thick, will last about 25 years, but with creosote stain, a foundation of aluminum, it should last indefinitely." One man purchased a cottage for $2,500, spent $100 in painting, and sold it soon thereafter for $3,200. In these days when houses are not so scarce as they were back in war times," continues the Household Magazine, "tenants not only will not rent houses in bad condition but will not stay in houses if the owner neglects them. Agents may justifiably claim that tenants may move from neglected homes or apartments. Unpainted exteriors and woodwork are depressing. Depression stifles progress, breeds inferiority. Brightening of a home by paint stimulates similar improvement in appearance of the entire neighborhood, and thus increases value of entire real estate blocks.

Ideal Basement Height Placed at Eight Feet

Ceiling height did not matter in the old-time cellar, for no one stayed down there long enough to care whether the ceiling were too low or not. Now, with families planning and arranging to spend considerable time in their basements, a ceiling height of eight feet is none too high. One then has plenty of room for piping and more elbow and breathing room. Steel beams are another "thought" for the new basement. Wooden or steel posts take up room for floor support and if an owner wants all the possible room he can get from his basement he should consider using steel beams. More expensive, yes, but they give you more room.

The Woman Fate Chose for Him

By LEETE STONE

(Copyright.)

HARRY VALLON, after five years of signal success as a singer, suddenly made up his mind one night that he was tired of this life with its rigid requirements. He had saved money for a long time. So, as the generous applause of his audience that night died down, he resolved to drop from sight; to seek some sequestered spot of peaceful outline where he could fish, eat alone, sleep, woo solitude, and dream—principally dream.

Alice Revelle was a musical comedy actress who had but recently completed the drilling grind of a year's run in New York in a popular hit, and a six month's road tour. She, too, had been judicious in the matter of earnings; and she, too, was weary of applause, garish din, bright lights and artificial enthusiasms. So she decided to go somewhere and lie full length on a carpet of pine needles, and read for hours at a time something besides the sides of a part; somewhere where there was the trill of early morning birds and the scent of shy wild flowers.

Two persons who had arrived at a similar decision; one near the West coast and one near the East coast; just two lonely pawns on the checkerboard of life whom a for once benevolent Fate had decided to join, in spite of the fact that neither of them was aware of the other one's existence.

Fate, not merely coincidence, led them both to different renting agents in New England; Fate whisked them past each other one April morning on the same stretch of highway in separate motors; Fate ensconced them both in dusty, long deserted little cottages situated at opposite ends of a ridge that curved like a sharp scimitar above a gentle valley.

Swerving gracefully from end to end of the valley ran a stream that glistened like silver in the sun and genial warmth of May. Square in the center of the valley there was a country crossroad, with its usual wistful characterization of two or three tin mail boxes, perched on their round, rough posts. From this juncture one road ran by Harry Vallon's snug eyrie of dreams high in the pines; the other wound its way by the quiet retreat chosen by Alice Revelle.

A thousand and one ways, considering this fortuitous arrangement, that these two young and weary souls, seeking to weave a web of solace with the loom of solitude, might have met if there had been only Coincidence to reckon with. But Fate—dictator of marriages made in Heaven—bides time until the arrival of the moment psychological.

The natural, stereotyped method would have been for them to exchange casual greetings at the crossroad mail boxes where, by the laws of average, they should have met. Strangely enough, however, neither of them having parents living and but a few intimates, each had left behind no forwarding address for these weeks of blessed retirement from the world of responsibility.

The splashing cadence of the little stream lulled Alice to slumber early, and awakened her softly betimes in melodious harmony with the twitter of dawn birds. After light breakfasting she would hasten with one of her cherished assortment of romantic novels to the base of a great nearby pine where she would lie reading the entire day.

And that identical music of nature would serve Harry Vallon as the perfect accompaniment to his restless, yearning thoughts that kept him awake until far into the night. Thus he slept until very late in the morning. Then his habit was to follow down the stream with his rod and a few worms in the hope of a trout to fry for evening bite. It was seldom he caught one; but that did not matter, for Harry Vallon was a devotee of the philosophy of fishing rather than the fact.

It happened that one very torrid night in young July, Alice Revelle was unusually restless and sleepless. The song of the brook on its way to the sound and sea seemed to call her persistently instead of inviting sleep. So persistent was the summons that she rose, dressed and sought a little glen of streaming moonlight which was split in two by the relentless little stream that Fate had chosen for the quiver of Cupid's arrow.

As if it had all been humanly planned, Harry Vallon was there—who else? Sitting crosslegged on a huge flat rock. A frequent retreat of his, for there he found the peace and reserve that were later to carry him to the peak of a brilliant concert career. He was singing to himself, softly, in a vibrant baritone:

"Valleys or hills with their sunset or dawn;
Over them all your love carries on,
Down in the meadow or close to the blue,
Singing or silent—you, only you!
Life's richest blessings—you, only you!"

"Please, oh please! Sing that again, won't you?"

And Harry Vallon leaped to his feet and whirled to face the woman Fate had chosen for him.

President of the Indiana State Fair Predicts Another Big Fair

Mr. U. C. Brouse of Kendallville, President of the Indiana Board of Agriculture, which manages the Indiana State Fair, believes that indications point toward another big fall festival for 1930 from August 30 to September 6. He has the following to say about this year's Fair:

"I have been interested in the Indiana State Fair for many years, have watched it grow and improve during that time. Where there were once old, worn out buildings, there are now new and beautiful ones, making what is generally known as one of the finest state fairgrounds in the United States.

"The Indiana Board of Agriculture is offering to the public a large sum of money for premiums and purses, $173,460.88 in all. I understand that this amount is several thousands of dollars more than is offered by any of our neighboring state fairs. We again have the honor this year of holding the National Swine Show in connection with our fair, where $23,669.00 of the above amount will be paid out.

"This large sum of money affords an opportunity for the men, women and children to win a portion of this amount. There is a department for each member of the family, the livestock and agriculture for the men, the domestic arts, fine arts and culinary where the women will have a splendid chance to show their skill, and the many departments in club work for the boys and girls. Don't fail to see these wonderful exhibits in all these various departments.

"As Indianapolis is only a short drive on these good roads from all corners of the state, and the entire fair can be seen for the price of 50c, for adults, and 25c for children from 7 to 12 years, you should not fail to plan a visit to the Indiana State Fair for at least one or two days. If you do not wish to drive, see your local railroad agent, interurban agent, or bus manager for the special rates to the Fair and special excursions. There will be plenty of amusement for both young and old and the many beautiful exhibits are both educational and entertaining. There are Grand Circuit Races each afternoon, Horse Pulling Contest, Horseshoe Pitching Contest, Horse Show each evening, magnificant display, Hawaiian Nights, each evening, Dodson's Carnival shows on the midway. Don't forget the dates, August 30 to September 6."

Facts For Farm Folks
Written by AGRICULTURAL AUTHORITIES

PROF. JOHN M. EVVARD

USE A GOOD DAIRY SIRE

Did you ever hear of a successful dairyman who did not pay major attention to the daddy of the prospective cows of the milking herd? The answer is obviously "No".

Since the producing ability of the dairy cow is due in a large measure to the sire and the dam, providing, of course, that superior feeding is practiced, it behooves all dairymen, young and old alike, to place special emphasis upon the production record of the maternal ancestors of the sire used. And the sire that is kept in service, if rightly selected on the basis of the performance of the female side of his pedigree, has proven himself worthy when judged in the eyes of his daughters, that sire is more valuable than the young sire which is not yet old enough to have producing progeny.

The tried sire, therefore, is an assured proposition, whereas the untried one is somewhat of a speculation. The sire with an inferior pedigree is a wild gamble as contrasted with the investment type of sire, which we refer to as the "tried sire." One cannot expect to get cows that yield from 500 to 1000 pounds of fat yearly if the sires and dams as well as the grandparents and great grandparents have an ability to produce only 200 to 400 pounds of butter fat in the twelve-month period. To get high producers one must seek parents whose records are classifiable in the high production class.

Therefore, by using superior sires and dams, one builds for future profits. And if perchance a poor sire is used for a few seasons, the evil results will be felt in the herd, which means that the milk bucket for generations to come will be affected. Hence, it is highly important that extreme care be exercised in the selection of the prospective daddy of the future producing cow.

Never forget that the influence of the sire soon dominates the quality of the entire herd to such an extent that the old saying, "The sire is one half the herd," is only half of the story, for in reality the sire dominates the whole herd.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, SEPT. 4, 1930 | NUMBER 36

REPORTING RECKLESS DRIVING

There is no good reason why instances of reckless driving of automobiles should not be reported and there is every good reason why such instances should be reported. If some one would walk into the presence of any individual and without warning or for no cause at all, deliberately slap that individual in the face it would arouse a furor (in other words H—— would be to pay,) and assault and battery charges would likely be filed also.

But if this same individual, in driving an automobile, does some careless piece of driving and seriously endangers some one's life thereby, no one is likely to do anything about it, although the offense is far more serious. This illustrates the point as advanced by the Hoosier State Automobile Club, that people are not awake to the seriousness of the automobile accident situation.

The Motor Clubs are warning the motoring public that the cooperation of every individual in reporting bad driving is absolutely necessary in order to turn the growing tide of accidents and bring about the elimination of this useless loss of life and property.

They point out that instances are to be found most anywhere such as recently in Rushville where the absence of a taillight on a parked car caused the death of two people, and a few days later a truck, parked partly on the pavement north of Shelbyville, and without a taillight caused the instant death of two people in one car and the third person died from this accident the following day. The Automobile Association now asks the following question of each community:

Since it is apparent to everyone that these various causes for automobile accidents are being committed year after year and in steadily increasing volume then it naturally follows that most any community may pay a similar death toll at most any date. Taking, for illustration, this matter of a car parked partly on the road at night with no taillight and ask yourself the question—Just what two or three will you select from your community to be the ones to be killed in this kind of an accident? Suppose it should include those dearest to you. Or will you, and every one else wake up to the fact that you are not doing yourself a kindness, nor properly protecting your loved ones and friends unless you resolve immediately to act in reporting any instances of reckless driving that comes to your personal notice. No one should hesitate to do this as you are doing the guilty party a kindness, for if they are not corrected and cured of reckless driving habits, they are just as likely to kill themselves as others. So— clip out the report from which will appear in this paper from time to time and carry it with you or in your car, and make use of it as needed.

NEW TARIFF LAW TO RESTORE PRODUCTION

A thousand republican workers and local citizens of this the twelfth district assembled at the state's beautiful Pokagen park Thursday and heard Congressman Purnell and Senator Robinson in forceful and convincing speeches —which the audience seemed to hear gladly. The name of President Hoover was frequently applauded in recognition of his prestige and success as a party leader. District Committeeman Yager installed James E. Rose, as presiding officer. He is chairman of Allen county whose republican pilgrims rode in a long line of autos led by the News-Sentinel band. Remarks were first made by Judge Gemmill, of the Supreme court, Judge Enloe of the Apellate court, Otto Fifield, secretary of state, Charles L. Biederwolf, clerk of the supreme court, Congressman Hogg —all candidates for re-election —and by Judge Martin candidate of the supreme court. Mr. Purnell dwelt upon the Hafley-Smoot tariff law as the best law ever passed for the uplift of agriculture, the greatest industry known to the country, to the level of manufacturing interests. "This act" he said "will give the farmers more benefits than any ever before enacted. It raises the ad valorem tariff rates 2.47 per cent but otherwise the net increases are less than in the three preceding tariff laws. Of the 2.47 per cent raised, 1.90 per cent is on farm products and the rest on other forms of industry. It cannot fail to benefit the business of agriculture, but in the vast total of farming interests combined, time is needed to move forward to old time prosperity. I predict with every reason that political logic can offer that by the operation of this act, the new tariff law will restore prosperity to all farmers as well as to all our American people in every part of our great country.

HILLSIDE SERVICE AT SCIPIO METHODIST CHURCH WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

One of the most outstanding religious services was held at the Scipio Methodist Church Sunday evening, August 31st, under the leadership of their pastor, Rev. Homer Studabaker.

A large platform was erected and three crosses were electrically lit. The central cross being ten feet, the others eight feet, with fifty bulbs lighting them. On the right hand of the central cross a large banner was hung with the words "Jesus Saves." On the left hand was written the seven sayings of the cross. The back ground was constructed of a beautiful imitation of green grass.

The Girl's Band from Butler was present and gave to the audience a delightful program. Mrs. Lyda Stage sang a solo, "The Hands That Nailed Him To The Cross." Rev. C. T. Martin, of Simpson Church Fort Wayne, spoke on the subject, "The Lord's Supper." The mesage was driven to the hearts of the people. Rev. Scholes of St. Joe, subject was "The Garden of Gethsemane" emphasizing the need of praying people. Rev. A. S. Elzey of Ossian, Ind., spoke on "The Crucifixion." Mr. Elzey's message was very emphatic. He expressed how we need to come to the cross for pardon and peace, and if we are saved as a World, Nation, State, and people, it must be by the cross which offers salvation to all.

It was estimated that there were between one thousand and fifteen hundred people present.

The lighting system was furnished by Mr. F. R. Steininger of Auburn, Ind.

Mr. Studabaker is being highly complimented on the success of the service which will long be remembered in the hearts of the people.

Henry Schoolmaster and daughter, Margaret, of Lansing, Mich., and Mrs. Thomas Last, of Grand Rapids, Mich., spent the week-end at the M. C. Hart home.

Over a hundred members from St. Joe, Concord, and Harlan M. P. Churches called on their pastor, B. W. Mayfield and family Friday evening, as a surprise party and enjoyed the pleasant evening together. Ice cream and cake was served, games were pleyed and music and readings made up the program. The lawn was lighted and everyone moved into the yard and had a real pleasant time.

Beatrice E. Bowman, of St. Joe, has been granted an admission card and will enter Indiana university for the first time next week, according to the announcement here today of Dr. David A. Rothrock, dean of the college of arts and sciences of the university. A total of 1114 new students have had their credentials accepted by the university, the majority of these students will enter as freshmen while a few, who have attended other colleges and universities will have upperclassman standing. Of the students who have had their credits accepted up to the present time, 482 are women and 632 are men. This number is expected to be considerably increased before the opening of the fall semester, as the office of the dean is accepting a large number of students' credentials and is sending out admission cards every day.

COUNTY COUNCIL VIEWS ROAD

The members of the board, composing the county council, made an inspection tour of the proposed road from the Widney Corners east of St. Joe to the County Line over the Leighty-Shutt county road, and their action was taken on Wednesday afternoon about the time of going to press. We are confident that the board will be unanimous in passing on the proposed paved road as it has been proposed as a necessity and has been talked from this standpoint.

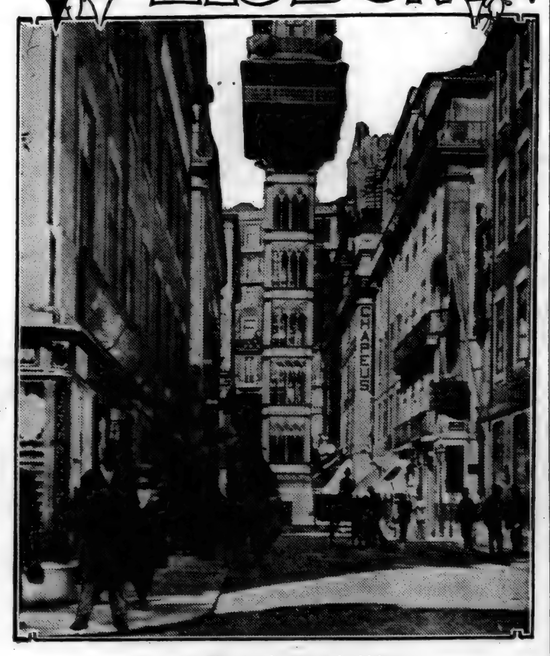
BEAUTIFUL LISBON



Open Air Elevator in Street in Lisbon.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

LISBON, capital of the Republic of Portugal, where a move to restore the monarchy was recently nipped in the bud, has a strange appeal for the seeker for quaint and individual places. This port of Portugal, which has very aptly been called the kernel of the country, saw the commercial pride of the Phoenicians and heard the fervent prayers of Vasco da Gama before he set out on his perilous voyage in search of India, the land which had lured navigators for centuries.

Lisbon's ancient name was Ulisipo, which caused many Greek scholars to try to connect it with the wanderings of Ulysses, but the name probably originated from two Phoenician words meaning Pleasant Bay, which is made doubly plausible because the mouth of the Tagus just beyond the city widens into one of the best harbors in the whole of Europe.

The Romans knew Lisbon as Felicitas Julia, and it grew to be the second city in Lusitania, that famous district of Hispania in time of the Caesars. Its temple and theater ruins attest its occupation. Successively it has been seized by the Alans, the Visigoths, the Moors and the Crusaders. The kindly influence of the English Crusaders who mingled with the Portuguese masses left its mark, and has shown itself in the friendly relations that have, practically ever since, existed between the two nations.

Men of letters have sought out the city for its individuality and beauty, which caused the ecstatic Byron upon first beholding from the bay its terraced seven hills to exclaim:

"What beauties doth Lisbon first unfold!
Her image floating on that noble tide
Which poets vainly pave with sands of gold."

What the City Is Like.

Commercially the city has natural advantages in its harbor, which can accommodate the largest vessels, and an advantageous position on the Atlantic. At present its trade is confined chiefly to exporting cork, wine, olive oil and tropical fruits to and importing coal, wood, corn, rice and manufactured articles from England, Brazil and its own African colonies.

Along the Tagus vegetables, fruits and flowers are piled in high heaps to tempt the eager marketers, boats of every description from the dingy little fishing smack to the ladylike Atlantic liner are loading and unloading their cargoes, and the fish peddlers who are to be seen everywhere in the Lisbon streets are raucously bargaining for their stock in trade with the fishermen along the wharves.

Then house above house in ever-ascending terraces the city proper rises above the water front, its white building gleaming in the sunlight. In the hills near the city there is a limestone as white and soft as chalk which becomes hard upon exposure, and this has largely been used as building material. Many of the buildings are faced with colored tiles, and others are washed pink or blue, but there is a softness in the general impression nevertheless, which is very pleasing. The old tiled roofs which are warped and curving, with their grass-grown furrows are delightful.

Lisbon is interesting to visitors not only because of its setting and its architecture, but also because of the conglomerate population within its limits. Here may be seen representatives of all the various nationalities which, fluxed into homogeneity, characterize the urban population of Portugal today.

Traces of Many Peoples.

The prolonged visits of the Phoenicians, Visigoths, Romans, Moors, and Spanish had little effect or influence on the stock of the Celtic-Iberian folk in the interior and mountainous districts of Portugal, while along the coasts the cities absorbed all those strangers into its urban life. The conquerors fell victims to racial absorption.

Consequently in Lisbon, often invaded and brought under alien rule, are found types which distinctly betray their origin from one or another of the shifting dominant races. Pure Celts from the hills are met on the streets, their pugnacious visages markedly Bretonesque, their costumes like all Celtic raiment, and their side whiskers just as bristly. Traces of imported negro slave blood are distinguishable, as also are Jewish types, descendants of the refugees from Spain.

One marvels at the strength of limb and neck of the basket-peddler girls, whose profiles, complexions, hair, and stature find a parallel in the descriptions of the Phoenician women of old.

Striking Moorish types are also often seen, dark-skinned, with the black-bronze hair, large, brilliant black eyes, and pearly teeth of their ancestors. They lack, of course, the thick lips and flat noses of the African types from more tropical regions than the Mediterranean coast.

But by far the greater number of people on the streets are "Portuguese," a race in which is combined something from each of a long list of descendants of successive invaders. They are clean-limbed, regular-featured, medium-sized people of fine appearance. Their type is somewhat akin to the Greek, but they are more swarthy and also more urbane, even-tempered, and cordial.

Portuguese of the upper classes are among the most cultured and gracious people of the world. Hospitality is a characteristic, generosity also, and the arts, sciences, and ethics of civilization are appreciated and employed. Portuguese men engaged in business and commerce are cosmopolitan in the range of their operations and in the compass of their influence.

Ancient and Modern Mingle.

All the linguistic inheritances and racial divergences of the Portuguese have a direct influence on the life, architecture, and economics of the city. The most ancient of customs and the most antique of implements are found side by side with electric cars, automobiles, modern banking houses, luxuriously furnished homes, and ultra styles.

Yet so perfectly natural and unaffected are the people that nothing seems strange or out of place. The city is a mosaic of civilization; harsh and glaring antagonisms have melted into the picture.

Because earthquakes have shaken the city disastrously in the past, an architecture has been developed to resist earth tremors. The best examples of such construction lie in the business section of the new city, the Cidade Baixa.

The business buildings which house the banks, jewelry stores, trading shops of all kinds, and offices are built of light materials, with walls covered with ceramic tile. Base stories are frequently constructed of stone, but one sees four and six-story buildings lighter than the average two-story loft building in America.

The tile covering is generally in small sections, six to eight inches square, and highly colored in most instances—blues, greens, yellows, and browns.

The use of tile wall space is a universal complaint with Portuguese architects, but it is a matter of law in Lisbon—light materials above the first story must be used.

The eight streets running north and south in the Cidade pour into the Rocio and the Praca da Figueira. The Rocio is a beautiful square, remarkable for its pavement, laid in a mosaic pattern which produces an optical illusion responsible for its popular nickname, "Rolling-Motion Square."

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE GOLDENROD

THE goldenrods were nodding their pretty bright heads.

"We are like the sun," they said, "pretty and bright and yellow."

Near them stood some weeds which were also pretty, but, of course, they were not considered flowers.

"If we were in a garden or were hard to grow they would call us handsome," said the weeds.

"We're not in a garden," said the goldenrod, "and many people like us. Of course there are others," continued the goldenrods, shaking their heads quite hard, "who don't like anything unless it costs money—hard, cold money.

"Just as though money would make us grow!

"They could pour those things they call pennies and nickels and dimes—

"Yes, What Care We for Money and Hothouses."

and even quarters, all over us, and do you suppose we'd grow then?

"Indeed we wouldn't. They could plant dollars all around our roots and it wouldn't make a scrap of difference.

"That shows how much we care for money and the people who only like flowers that cost a great deal."

"You have almost as much sense as though you were weeds," said the weeds.

"We're very near to the weeds," said the goldenrods, "for we are called wild flowers.

"We need sun, rain, summer weather to make us grow.

"And aren't they far finer than pennies and nickels and dimes? But it does annoy us to hear people say that they like flowers only of the flower shops when here we are in the fields and meadows and have really a finer home than the rich flowers."

Just then some children came along talking.

"Oh," they shouted, "look at the glorious goldenrods. They are the first of the season."

"Did you know that the goldenrod is the American national flower?" asked the child.

"At least, it is almost always considered so, although a recent popular vote favored the wild rose.

"But the goldenrod is away ahead of all other flowers.

"You see, so many nations have flowers—special flowers.

"England has the rose, France the fleur-de-lis. Scotland has the thistle, Ireland the shamrock and Italy the lily.

"Isn't it wonderful for us to have a wild flower—a flower so bright and one we can all enjoy?"

All the children agreed and they picked great bunches of the goldenrods.

The flowers were nodding their heads happily now.

"We're going to be the nation's flowers," they whispered to themselves, and to the bumblebees who came to call on them and sip of their honey.

"Yes, what care we for money and hothouses when the nation pays us the honor of thinking of us for her flowers."

The weeds felt proud they had been friends of the goldenrods, and the goldenrods asked the bumblebees to tell all their relatives as they awoke that they must be gay and bright for they were the flowers of the United States!

And that evening just as the sun was setting the goldenrods sang a little in the summer breeze, and this was their song:

We're golden, golden, goldenrods,
And we grow all over the land.
We're bright and strong and sturdy
And we have our own meadow land.

The wind always whistles our little tune,
The woodpeckers drum, drum, drum,
And the air always carriers our song for us
As we gaily, cheerfully hum.

The bumblebees buzz in the chorus,
The flowers wave the time in the breeze,
And the song is caught up in the branches
And sung by all of the trees.

For the meadow band you surely have heard
In the sunny summer time,
Just listen next time you're out-of-doors
And maybe you'll, too, hear our rhyme.

We're the golden, golden, goldenrods,
The flowers of the whole country!

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

OWLS

AN OWL'S hooting at night is a very unlucky omen—in some sections it is believed to portend death in the family. This superstition is so universal, existing not only among civilized races, but among aborigines of Australia and among the American Indians, that its origin, like that pertaining to the crow, must be looked for in the depressing effect which the bird of night with its lugubrious voice produced upon primitive man.

The owl, it is true, in the classic period, was assigned as the bird of Minerva, the goddess of wisdom, because the creature has a wise look. But it never lost its sinister significance for the proletariat: which is not to be wondered at when we consider that, in addition to his uncanny appearance and doleful hoot he is a carnivorous bird of prey, and that small birds and squirrels instinctively attack him when he is caught dozing in the woods.

The American Indian stops where he is and covers his head in fright when he hears an owl hoot; in India a hut upon which an owl alights is torn down; the Australians of native race say that he "smells death," visits the neighborhood of the dying and is an agent of the Spirit of Evil. In Europe and America an owl hooting near a farmhouse casts a presage of death or disaster into the souls of its inhabitants. And all this because of the impression the owl's appearance, habits and doleful cry made and make upon the primitive mind. He looks, acts and cries ominously, therefore he presages disaster.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"EVERY MAN MEETS HIS WATERLOO AT LAST"

HERE is a quotation which sounds as though almost any one of us might have said it. Possibly many of us have said it and used it without thinking that in so doing we were plagiarising a famous orator of bygone days, quoting a line which so well turned an idea that it was immediately consigned to universal ownership without so much as a "Thank you!" to the author.

It is to Wendell Phillips that we are indebted for the expression, "Every man meets his Waterloo at last." He uttered it in a public speech on November 1, 1859, in which he warned that tyrants sooner or later meet the same fate as Napoleon—that all eventually bump up against something that is too much for them.

For Meditation

MACHINERY

MUCH has been said lately regarding the demoralizing effect of machinery upon labor. It has been argued that the man in the shop is gradually developing into a mere automaton. In place of skilled labor, which demands both experience and reasoning ability, the modern factory calls for a less efficient type of workman whose only task seems to be confined to doing one thing only during the entire working day. This task may be driving a rivet, turning a lever, placing a screw, any one of the thousand different operations necessary to turning out the finished product from our factories.

L. A. Barrett.

It also has been argued, and perhaps rightly so, that the tendency of our machine civilization is destructive to mental and cultural development. The criticism is that it discourages the initiative and creative spirit.

As an alternative many manufacturers are giving their employees more time for leisure than they were accustomed to do a decade ago. If this leisure is properly employed, it should have a tendency to overcome the evil caused by the monotonous routine of the factory. Two days in each week, where the five-day week has been adopted, gives abundant opportunity for rest, leisure and social development. If this time is not so employed the fault is not with the manufacturers, but with labor itself.

Another view of the evolution of the machine is that it not only stabilizes industry, but creates great benefits expressed in the expansion of business and in the comforts available in almost every home. Think of the tasks in the average home today being done by machinery which had to be done by hand five years ago. The application of machinery to farming is certainly a step forward. It has been rightly stated that the products of our machinery "have relieved mankind forever from the worst of the physical bondage with which all past civilizations have chained him."

Machinery is not enslaving mankind; rather it is liberating the race, making it possible for more time to be devoted to the development of the cultural and intellectual values in life. Machinery is made possible through the creative genius of the scientific mind. It is an asset rather than a liability. Our age of machinery is not enslaving mankind, it is setting him free.

Dear Editor:

THE trouble with most automobile drivers, I've decided, is, they never owned a horse. A decent man has some consideration for his mount.

There goes a car labeled "My fourth bus." Clash those gears some more like that, young fellow, and you'll need your fifth ere long.

One old-timer tells me, "As long as my car runs, I never do anything with it. If I start looking, I'd find something wrong."

When I consider the jolts, and ruts, and broken glass and weather a car carries us through, I wonder that we aren't more grateful. I made a New Year's resolution to "Give the car plenty of oil and grease and paint."—Fred Barton.

SPEEDOMETER IS MOST ESSENTIAL

Device Often Blamed for Noises Originating in Other Parts.

Often speedometers are blamed for noises that originate elsewhere. According to Sumner S. Howard, director of service for a large spark plug company, rarely can noise be traced to the speedometer itself. So-called speedometer noises occur when the flexible shaft or cable is kicked or pushed into a position where it has too sharp a bend. Any motorist, he says, can correct this simply by reaching behind the instrument board and moving the shaft into a more favorable position.

How Speedometer Works.

Many motorists will be interested in knowing how the speedometer on their car works. The speedometer operates from a drive, which is an integral part of the engine's transmission. One end of a flexible shaft or cable is attached to this drive and the other end to the speedometer. As the shaft revolves the speedometer operates, and for every 1,008 revolutions the speedometer will register one mile. By the same token 1,008 revolutions a minute will indicate 60 miles an hour on the speed dial.

Speedometers seldom get out of order nowadays, and whenever they fail to function it usually is due to the breaking of the cable which connects the speedometer with the driving mechanism. This breakage occurs only when the cable has been sharply twisted and bent through carelessness.

Most Necessary Device.

That the speedometer is one of the most necessary devices on the automobile can be seen from a partial list of services it performs:

It tells how fast you are driving.

How far you have traveled.

How your car is performing on acceleration and hill climbing.

Gives distance between towns.

Guides you when a person gives directions.

Tells when to change oil and when to have other services done in accordance with car instruction manual.

Tells how much tire mileage you are getting.

How much mileage per gallon of gasoline.

Tells cost per mile of car operation.

Tells you not to drive a new car too fast.

"Wreck Ambulance" Car Used in Austrian City

A mile-a-minute "wreck ambulance," equipped to meet practically any large scale emergency, has been put into use by the city of Baden, near Vienna, Austria. This is the first time service of this kind has been established in Europe. A second machine of the same type will be equipped for similar work. Each relief machine will carry enough bandages, antiseptics, surgical instruments, and other first aid supplies to treat nearly 50 patients. Gas masks, ready to afford workers protection against all kinds of poison gases, are part of the equipment.

Six stretchers and a tent enable an emergency hospital to be erected at the scene of disaster. An attachment will bring about a quart of water to boiling point in five minutes for disinfecting purposes. The machines are expected to save many lives through prompt aid in railroad wrecks, fires and similar disasters.—Popular Science Monthly.

Engineers' Rules Help to Automobile Drivers

The rules drilled into the locomotive engineer, if practiced by automobile drivers, would aid materially in diminishing traffic accidents, says the National Safety council.

Three important practices demanded of engineers follow:

Unless you are sure, slow down to a speed at which you can stop in half the distance you can see.

Keep your eye on the road.

Keep your brakes in condition to stop.

THE MOTOR QUIZ

(How Many Can You Answer?)

Q. When a car is sluggish, loses power on hills and has a slow pick-up, what should be done?

Ans. First inspect the spark plugs. By replacing worn plugs new life is given an engine and often expensive repairs are avoided.

Q. Why is it particularly advisable to shift the car into second gear when driving on a grade in heavy traffic?

Ans. The engine makes a better brake thus taking some of the strain of the regular brake stream. It also permits quicker pick-up.

Q. How many gasoline filling stations are in the United States?

Ans. Approximately 320,000.

Q. How many service stations and repair shops are in this country?

Ans. Some 95,800.

Q. At what temperature will a battery showing a reading of 1250-1300 freeze?

Ans. Approximately 30 degrees below zero Fahrenheit.

In many of the smaller towns and on the farm there is a demand for a small home such as shown in the illustration. On larger farms this would make a very excellent tenant house while for the use of those who live in town it is an excellent design for the small lot or for the family of not more than five people.

The house is 24 feet by 24 feet. Its foundation walls are straight, which means economical construction cost. The plain walls of the square house are broken by an unusual roof design. As a matter of fact, the wide dormer above at the front and at the back adds to the roominess of the house and takes from it the plainness that is often found in smaller homes of this type. The overhang of the roof and the attractive entrance porch with colonial seats on either side and the trellis over which vines or flowers can be trained are features which will appeal to the prospective home builder.

The entrance door leads to a stair hall and at the left is the living room extending most the width of the building. This room is 16 feet by 11 feet 6 inches wide. It is connected with the dining room, 11 feet 9 inches by 11 feet, by a double cased opening which makes the two rooms practically one. The kitchen is of good size, being 10 feet 9 inches by 7 feet 6 inches. Upstairs there are two large bedrooms, the one at the front of the house being 19 feet 6 inches by 11 feet 6 inches. The one at the rear is 13 feet 3 inches long by 11 feet deep. Both rooms have ample closet space in connection with them. At the head of the stairs off the hall in a convenient place is the bathroom.

This house is set on a concrete foundation and has a basement of the same size as the house itself. It is of frame construction, the outside walls being covered with ship-lap siding.

This home building design will appeal to those who want a small attractive home but who do not have a large sum of money to invest.

Storage Type of Water Heater Best for Home

The ability to turn a faucet at any hour of the day and night and get all the hot water necessary is one of the greatest comforts of present-day American life.

How to get hot water in the spring and summer months when the house heating plant is not in operation is a problem that confronts many homeowners.

Hot water is needed for the family wash, for cleaning and cooking, for shaving, and for a soothing bath. An abundant supply of hot water available at all times shortens the housewife's work in the kitchen by hours in a week, by days in a year, and by years in a lifetime.

The demand today is not merely for a coil in the house heating plant which will supply hot water when the heating plant is in operation, but for a dependable all-the-year-around supply of hot water.

Various types of water heaters are available. Some burn coal, some use oil, but most of them utilize gas as a fuel. A few types of electric water heaters are on the market.

There are three general kinds of gas water heaters.

The cheapest is the "side-arm" type which is so called because the water is heated in a copper coil placed at the side of a galvanized iron tank. While the original purchase price for this type of heater is small, it is relatively inefficient in operation because the uninsulated tank allows the water to cool off very quickly. Furthermore, as the hot water is drawn off, the cold water comes in and cools off the rest of the water and the tank.

Another obvious disadvantage of this type of heater is the fact that it is necessary to light it every time hot water is needed. When the heater is in the basement, this is often a serious inconvenience.

The two other kinds of gas water heaters are the storage heater and the instantaneous heater.

The storage heater is the type most popular with the average housewife. It is economical, yet very convenient. Once this type of heater is installed, the home-owner need no longer worry about his supply of hot water. When the water in the storage tank falls below a certain temperature—whatever temperature the home-owner desires (usually about 150 degrees)—the burner is automatically lighted from a pilot which burns continuously. Thus, there is always a tank full of hot water.

The best heaters are well insulated with thick blankets of rock wool, asbestos, hair or cork. The insulation is between the outer jacket of steel and the inner tank of rust-proof metal.

Instantaneous gas heaters have no storage tank. At a turn of a faucet anywhere in the house, a powerful flame is lighted in the burner and water is heated in an elaborate structure of copper coils. Hot water pours from the faucet almost instantly.

This type of heater may be used efficiently in a home, apartment, school or hospital where the demand for hot water is constant. But, if the demand for hot water is intermittent, such as is usually the case in the average home, this type of heater would prove expensive in operating cost.

Foundation of Home Shows Its Condition

Before you buy a house, you should start with the basement and examine the walls for water stains and horizontal water lines caused by water seepage or water standing in the basement.

The foundation and retaining walls should be inspected for proper thickness. A minimum width for main foundation walls below grade for a light frame structure of one or two stories should not be less than 10 inches if of concrete; 13 inches if of brick or 18 inches for stone.

Concrete walls having a sand or clay appearance are deficient in cement, or else are constructed of bank sand and gravel containing a large percentage of loam. Such walls should be examined for sand and loam pockets which are deterimental to the walls' structural strength and permit the entrance of water.

The wall plate or mud sill, which lies directly upon the foundations and upon which the floor rests, should be minutely examined for dry rot and decay. This is generally the first member of a dwelling's superstructure that goes bad.

Gifted Chinese Artist Scorns Use of Brushes

We sometimes see an artist with long, tapering fingers, and we are reminded of the expression "artistic hands." In China there is a man who not only possesses artistic fingers, but who actually uses these fingers in the paintings he does.

Kwei Teng, a Chinese artist, scorns brushes and ordinary drawing tools—his hands provide him with everything he needs. With his nails he draws his pictures, and then with his sensitive fingertips he puts on the required colors!

The work of this strange artist was recently exhibited in New York, and met with great admiration—tempered with a goodly amount of curiosity! People found it difficult to believe that good results could be obtained by such primitive methods, but they came away from the exhibition entirely converted.—Montreal Family Herald.

Train Night-Flying Birds

A race of night-flying pigeons is being developed under supervision of the War department. Soon after the World war the United States army signal corps started to develop these birds, realizing that they would be of invaluable service in case of war or in time of great national disaster, such as floods, cyclones or earthquakes. At the army signal school at Fort Monmouth, N. J., there is now a loft containing only night-flying birds. These are the result of careful training of homing pigeons, selection and breeding of the most intelligent, the sturdiest and those that had habitually flown in twilight or darkness.

Give a square deal and demand one.

A darned fly ain't no friend of mine—awake or asleep.

Every crooked and licentious age, educates and brings forth men who oppose that age for the evil it is noted for.

Friends or relatives, that can't get along together, can often get along apart. Absence makes one fonder. Well now that's that.

The lawn mower says: Well I had a summer off for once. I wasn't loaned to my neigrbors and wasn't accused of being owned by a Scotchman.

If people could add together what they would like to know, what they think they already know and what they actually do know, thew would know a devil of a lot—Granted.

Every dog has his day; every cat his night and every man has his day and night. Every eagle has his soar in the day; every owl has his soar in the night, and every man is usually sore day or night.

Whether a thing is good or bad, right or wrong depends upon where and how that thing is used. For instance Snubbers in an automobile take the jars out of society while snubbers in people puts the jars in society.

There is nothing quite so detrimental to self as to allow ourselves to think that we should accept rebuke from others. As long as you are in the world and as long as the world is in you (spiritually speaking) you will get ynor bumps. Why not console ourselves to the inevitable.

Cultivate a sense of being willing that your neighbor should be permited to enjoy his pleasures in life as you do. It takes all kinds of pleasures to satisfy "all kinds of people that it takes to make a world." One argues that people should all be alike—no one should argue that pleasures should be standardized or made for those who insist on making their judgment to be the code of the community.

In speaking of environment and its influence on the individual, relative to finance, stinginess and spendthriftyness, it must be said that the individual is, very often, powerless to do other than his environment does. To use other words, a community composed of people who are tight and conservative in matters of money, naturally makes it impossible for a single individual to be liberal and free with his money in that community. The reason seems plain.

A stingy community is not a giving community, but a getting community. They are financial apostles who believe that it is more blessed to receive than give—they wear the cloak of their religion wrong side out. In such a community the money that a liberal person might lavishly or whole heartedly spend in his environment, might be absorbed by the spongy dollar sign variety of the nativity, and leave the poor, unlearned philanthropist to wonder whether the saying of "a fool and his money is soon parted" was manufactured for him.

In a community where people have learned that there is something else in life besides nursing nickles or passing a life sentence of imprisonment on a poor defenseless dollar, a person would have to be a giver to be able to maintain his social standing, supremacy or even self respect. A giving community demands a giving spirit to go with it and be compatable and congenial with that community. In these two kinds of communities, almost diametrically opposed in theory and practice in handling money, we find people trying to live, either by the money saving chest or the sieve methods of life. Some propounding that "when in Paris, do as the Parisians do" and enjoy money while it lasts—others advocating that "when in Scotland, do as the Scotchmen do." This wild and frenzied shuffle for pleasure through broadcast spending on the one hand and the accumulation of money through the denial of pleasure and friends, is a show worth looking at. Dissolving the idea it is demonstrated that the law of self preservation is the basic law of every person and every community. Some people solve this law of self preservation by much giving, while others solve it by keeping every thin dime.

Making due recognition of the present times of readjustment and business stagnation plus the fact that every man and his dollar are free moral agents to do as they please, we must conclude that we will be apt to do as the Romans do while in Rome and be game and play the game as others play it. Doing unto others as we would be done by (although true blue) is the other fellow's pie.

Bohumir Kryl World Famous Cornetist

Bohumir Kryl, who is to appear here with his band from August 30 to September 5 at the Indiana State Fair, is known everywhere throughout the United States as conductor of one of the finest and best known bands in this country, has had a most unusual and interesting career. His artistic talents first found expression in the field of sculpture. It was while engaged in the modeling of a statue of Gen. Lew Wallace, at Crawfordsville, Ind., that he met John Phillip Sousa. He was persuaded by Sousa to go in for a musical career, and today his fame as a cornetist and band leader is world wide. During the war Kryl had charge of the training of the bands in the various military camps of this country.

Kryl and his band have played in all of the larger cities of the United Sates, and the comment of a few of the newspapers are given below:

The Chicago Tribune: "As a director he is without a peer, as a virtuoso he is unrivaled."

Los Angeles Times: "The most remarkable cornet technicist in the world."

Washington Post: "The effect of his playing was electrical."

New York Times: "Kryl is complete master of the difficult instrument."

Kansas City Star: "Kryl is a great virtuoso."

Indiana State Fair Better Babies, August 30 to September 6

By Ada M. Schweitzer, M. D.

Each year better baby culture occupies a prominent place in the Indiana State Fair program. Beginning in July each year the State Board of Health Child Hygiene Division, the State Board of Agriculture, and the Indianapolis News prepare for the better babies demonstrations. All are planned to impress on the public consciousness the fact that investments in the health of babies always pay.

The Indiana State Board of Agriculture has erected two made-to-order buildings and equipped them for the better babies demonstrations. They have also provided a suitably furnished preschool playground and a mothers' rest park. They employ extra workers. They offer prizes for normal babies who are free from defects and furnish a special attractive folder for the mothers of contest babies.

The Indianapolis News offers $10 and a silver cup for prize winners in all the regular classes.

The Indiana State Board of Health Child Hygiene Division supervises the entire program. Their doctors, nurses, and assistants and clerks prepare details of the better babies demonstrations.

At the fair they supervise the better babies contest and conduct examinations of non-contest babies and preschool children.

The day nursery checks in and cares for babies, and the playground for children from two to seven years, and the rest park for parents with young children. Hand made sets of posters illustrating health rules, tables of child care devices, books, clothing, and so forth are demonstrated.

In addition the Indianapolis News gives to every baby a medal on a blue ribbon.

If you don't believe that contest babies at the State Fair are really BETTER BABIES, come and see!

STENOG CAN'T KEEP WRIST-WATCH RIGHT

The modern "Tweedledum and Tweedledee" of many a Providence office stenog is her wrist-watch and her typewriter.

She cannot get along without either. But the two simply won't get along together.

An employee of a downtown jewelry repair shop says an office typewriter sends more wrist-watches to the shop for repairs and adjustments than any other one thing.

No matter how careful the wearer may be, the rhythmic pounding of the keys of her typewriter submits the watch on her left wrist to a jolting and jarring. The movement quickly results in the delicate hair-spring of the watch becoming twisted. Result: the hands "run wild," gaining or losing in a manner to make the calmest of stenogs bite her finger nails in dismay.

"But it's a 50-50 proposition at that," says the jewelry repair man as he screws his little magnifying glass into his eye and goes on about his work. "The wrist-watch makes the girls late to work. The typewriter keeps them late at work."—Providence Journal.

SEA MAKES INROADS ON HIGHLAND LIGHT

About 10,000 persons annually visit Highland light on the tip end of Cape Cod. According to Keeper Fred Tibbetts, who has had charge of the station for seventeen years, receiving visitors and answering questions are more wearing than the duties Uncle Sam imposes. It was in 1797 that the United States government bought this reservation and began construction of the first Highland light.

The constant battering of the seas against the cliffs at Truro, and erosion of the sand dunes by wind and weather, have taken surprising toll. The original deed showed the conveyance of ten acres of land. Today there remain less than four acres. At the brink of the cliff are wooden benches and seats for visitors. Every other year it becomes necessary to move these back several feet.

It seems but a question of time before the famous lighthouse and its cluster of official buildings must either be moved or go tumbling into the sea. —New York Times.

Allowance for Elbow Room in Stork's Nest

When the storks of the village of Gruenewalde, Germany, fly north from Africa this summer they will find their old home on the schoolhouse, but they will hardly know the place. For the schoolhouse had to be reconditioned during the winter, and the nest had to be taken down. This incidentally gave naturalists a chance to examine a stork's nest of championship proportions, before putting it back on the roof. The nest was more than six feet in diameter and not much less than three feet high, larger by half than an ordinary stork's nest. It could contain four men sitting on chairs around a table. Sticks as thick as an arm had been built into its walls, and the interstices filled with moss, straw, hay and reeds. In odds and ends of space not needed by the storks, upward of fifty sparrow families lived.

Man Cables Shakespeare

A cablegram for William Shakespeare awaits him at the office of Miss A. Justins, the mayor of Stratford-on-Avon, the bard's birthplace. It was sent by a Toronto, Ontario, man, and is addressed "William Shakespeare, care of the Mayor," and states that the sender had seen the film of "The Taming of the Shrew," and that he wished to know how much money Shakespeare wants for the rights of any plays he has written or any he might be writing in future.

Joyful

When Julius Klein came back from Europe he admitted to the press that he hadn't been greatly impressed by the Old world culture.

"Your cathedral chimes and all that sort of thing may be all right," he stated, "but to satisfy me, I want to hear something else. Now, when you get right down to cases, the only sounds that really count are the clang of shovels and the tinkle of cash register bells."

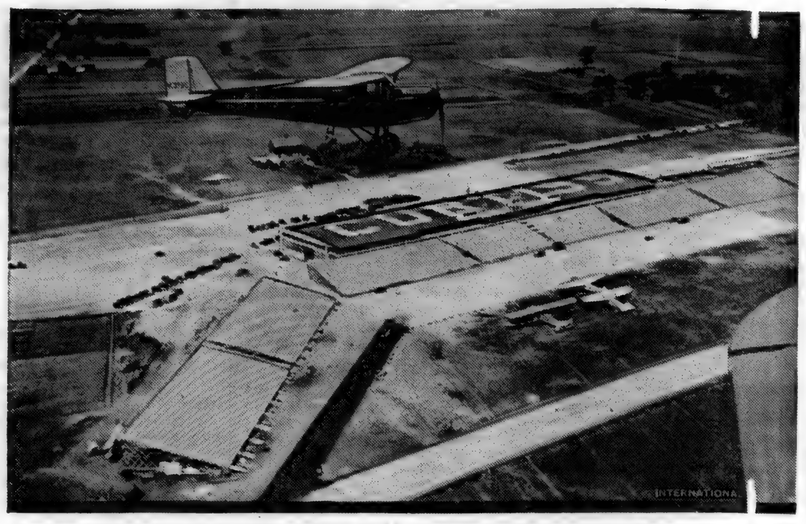
Scene of the National Air Races



View from an airplane of the Curtiss-Reynolds airport and flying field at Chicago, scene of the national air races. The contests and exhibitions attracted practically all the best flyers of this country and some of Europe's premier aviators, and were witnessed by many thousands of spectators each day. Men's and women's air derbies, starting from various parts of the country, were features of the meet.

Business as Usual, Despite the Hot Weather

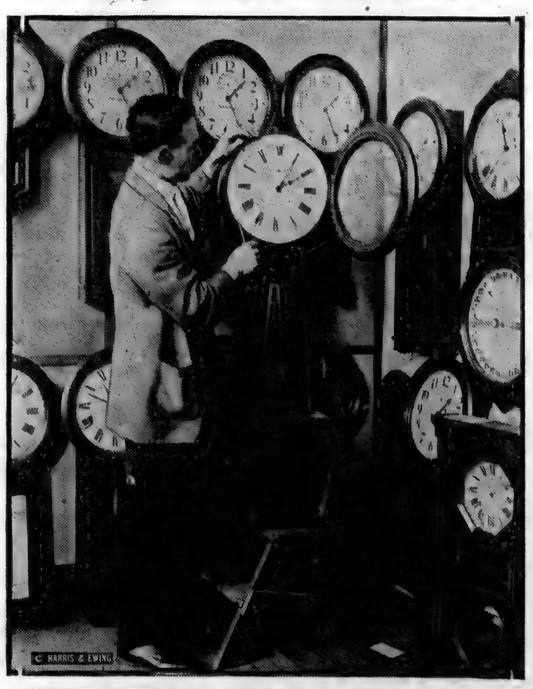
Plenty of Time on His Hands



Charles P. Buettner is the clock expert for the United States treasury in Washington. It is his duty to see that nearly 900 clocks are kept in perfect running order. He is shown in this photograph with a clock that has been keeping good time for the treasury since 1832.

Their Honey Tells What Ails Them

When Uncle Sam finds that his bees are suffering with stomachaches or sprained ankles, he doesn't treat the ailments as he would if the sufferers were human beings. Instead of examining the patients, he examines the honey that they have been making and then prescribes accordingly. Two workers in the bee culture laboratory of the Department of Agriculture are here shown making diagnoses from the hundreds of samples placed before them.

NOVELTY WOOLENS FOR GIRLS; SATIN FOR AFTERNOON FROCKS

CHIC COSTUME FOR A GIRL

COMES again that ever recurring after-vacation problem of new clothes for little daughter. The erstwhile task is going to prove more of a privilege and a joy rather than an irksome undertaking, owing to the presence of an endless array of bright novelty woolens—just such as make up with utmost satisfaction both to mother and to child.

With the intriguing dresses and coats and hats to match in prospect, such as stylists are creating for young girls of the new gaily patterned lightweight woolens, "first day of school" will be an event to look forward to rather than to be dreaded since it will give little Miss an opportunity to don her very newest ensemble which, let us hope, will be quite as chic as the model pictured.

Fashionists are making it a point of matching little girls' hats to their fall and winter coats. The new tweeds and the loose-woven woolens which are flecked and nubbed with white are made into stunning hat and coat sets, usually a beret topping a simply tailored coat with or without a cape. Then again the hat has a brim and the coat has a flare and the belt has a buckle just like the smart outfit in the picture.

Favor for pile fabrics is expressed for children's coats. Most of the models are made very grown-up looking. That is they have fur collars, suede belts, often with double-breasted fastening and big patch pockets. Answering this description is an alpaca pile coat which is lined in wool and sports a brown lambskin collar with a suede belt and leather buttons. Coats of this type are shown in most any of the children's sections or specialty shops.

It is not only coats which are expressed in terms of novelty woolens, for the one-piece dress of sheer woolen which looks very much heavier than it really is being especially exploited for school wear. Most of these gay worsted frocks are the prettier for having lingerie touches, such as collars and cuffs of white or colored pique.

The schoolgirl dress is not always as simple as it looks this season for there's a lot of detail required to obtain the desired effect.

Satin for Autumn.

Lustrous or dull, in color or black with special emphasis on white for evening wear, satin is making a conspicuous entry among "first" fashions for fall.

The new satins have a color range such as the world of fashion has not seen for many years. A high regard for black is also maintained and especially black with a touch of color or white.

Satins in the new off-black shades are as interesting as were the off-white shades during the summer. Rich dark plum tones, garnet reds, browns from African to rust, handsome greens, and black of course briefly outline the color program for fall frocks.

The artfully tailored satin gown in rich autumn hue worn with shoes in matched color is a favorite theme with fashionists for immediate wear. As a reminder of the importance of shoes the same color as the frock, leading booteries are stressing displays of exquisite kid shoes in wine shades, in dark green and a whole list of browns.

Typical of the autumn trend is the bronze-brown satin dress in the lower picture. It is finished at the neck and wrists with the same satin weave in a bright rust tone. The brown kid shoes worn with this smart gown are a perfect color match to it.

Many of the couturiers are combining soft pastel tints with dark shades. Indeed the effectiveness of monotones used in contrast is stressed throughout all costume design for the coming season.

Touches of turquoise blue on black or on brown are especially noted. Green and brown, beige and brown, green and beige, deep garnet with beige, pink with black also black and white are but a few of the color combinations which are enlivening the mode.

Both point at the new satin dresses is their lavish amount of detail. That is, their styling is complex because of an endless amount of seaming, tucking, goring, together with infinite yokes, insets, bandings and such. All this manipulation, however, results in an appearance of extreme simplicity.

When the satin gown is not trimmed in satin of another color at the neckline, it is almost sure to take on a lace collar and cuff set for lingerie touches appear on the majority of daytime frocks this season.

Mementoes of American Generosity Still Stand

The Messina earthquake of 1908, in which 90,000 people lost their lives, is probably a hazy memory to those Americans who donated shiploads of food, clothing and medicine, as well as large sums of money.

It may therefore be interesting news to them that their philanthropy lives on after two decades. A new Messina has grown up on the ruins of the old.

There are numerous costly public and private buildings, fine apartment houses and private residences in the new Messina, Sicily's third largest city and a thriving port and railroad center. One whole quarter, however, of Messina is still made up exclusively of wooden houses donated by Americans for temporary shelter.

Mirrors on Golf Club

Sir James Henderson, British scientist, faced with the usual troubles of the golfer, invented a club whose head contained two mirrors to aid him in perfecting his form, and the device has proved so successful that it is being placed on the market in England, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. When the head is placed against the ball the mirrors reflect the light from a lamp set beside the ball. Unless the club is in correct position the light is not reflected from both mirrors.

"Just a few words of praise of your medicine. Nothing gave me relief and health as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did. I am a practical nurse and was so rundown that I was unable to work. I used to suffer agonies at times and would have to lie down the biggest part of the day. After two bottles of Vegetable Compound I felt better. Now I have used ten bottles and feel fine. I recommend it to many of my patients."—Mrs. Florence Johnson, R. R. #3, Chetopa, Kansas.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticising Will for bringing her to such a place. Will and Ernestine have their first quarrel. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account.

CHAPTER VI

Ernestine Asks a Favor

When Ernestine reached her mother-in-law's house, she was astonished to find a crowd of people standing about the door, and to see a taxi just driving away, and another car at the curb. When she came into the group, every one fell silent, and Ernestine looked at the faces with curiosity and a sense of fear.

"What's the matter?" she said nervously to a big housewife who opened the door for her.

"Will's been trying to find you—they just brought his pa home. He's dead—dropped dead at his work today, and his ma's real bad. I got Will on the telephone, at the paper, and he came right out here, but he didn't know where you was."

Ernestine stood staring at her, and her hand went up to her heart in a frightened gesture.

"Where's Will?" she asked wildly.

"He's in with his ma. Go still—the doctor's working with her. She's been awful bad the last few days. I've been with her all the time."

"But she didn't tell us."

"She thought she'd be better—she's been sick so long—"

Will looked up as she came in and called her name softly. She went straight to him and put her arms around him. His face was wet with tears—he was not the positive, fiery creature with whom she had quarreled so bitterly the night before, but a little boy, lost and confused. She kissed him quickly, several times, and he said to her:

"I'm glad you got here—Mrs. Bennett didn't know where you were. Oh, Ernestine—mom's so sick—the doctor doesn't know whether she'll ever be better—and dad gone like that—just like a breath. I haven't seen him for three weeks."

"Darling—he'd want to go—quickly," said Ernestine, feeling the futility of words—the emptiness of comfort. It wasn't her father, her conscience told her. She and Will had been neglectful.

The doctor came out of the bedroom and asked Ernestine crisply to get him some hot water. Ernestine took off her fur coat and her little red hat and went into the kitchen. There was a fire in the small range, and awkwardly she put some coal upon it and set the teakettle on to heat. The doctor asked her for towels. She waited on him as well as she could and accepted in silence his sharp reprimand when she was clumsy.

The neighbors had dissolved. Mrs. Schluss, who lived next door, came in and made a little supper. She put it on the kitchen table and said to Ernestine:

"See if you can get Will to eat—he's in there crying."

"I will," said Ernestine, and Mrs. Schluss went on:

"You'll have to stay here, now, I guess. Will's ma shouldn't have been left alone, and now, his pa's dead, there's nobody to look out for her but you and Will."

"Of course I'll come," said Ernestine. "I'd have come before, if I had known that I was needed. We didn't want to be a burden—"

She found this phrase in her mind as she coaxed Will to eat a little supper. Had their motives been entirely unselfish, in going to Erie street? Hadn't they wanted to be alone—away from his people? Should she have stayed with Will's mother, and nursed her, and done the work? There was no question but that Mrs. Schluss, and probably other neighbors as well, thought that she should. Her heart ached with remorse.

Will stayed in the kitchen with her, and Ernestine washed the dishes and put them all away, going to him at times and patting or caressing him. The undertaker came, the doctor left and returned about nine o'clock. He called Will into the other room, but after a time Will came back into the kitchen, where Ernestine sat, not knowing what to do.

"Ernestine—" Will looked at her uncertainly; his eyes appeared small and red with weeping, his nose seemed unusually big in his pale face, and his mouth was like a child's. "The doctor thinks we ought not have the funeral here—because of mother being so ill. The noise, and people coming in and out—he thinks she is ill enough that it might go against her. Do you—do you think your mother—I don't want him buried in a chapel—and he didn't belong to any church. He was an officer in an ethical society—they'll have the services—I don't known what to plan—"

The back door opened and Mrs. Schluss came in while he was talking, and with her another neighbor—Ernestine remembered having met him once before. His name was John Pryor, and he was a printer. Ernestine understood the entreaty in Will's eyes—but her heart sank: Mamma did not like funerals, and least of all would she like this one.

"I'll ask," she said uncertainly, and went to the telephone which was hung on the kitchen wall. It seemed an eternity before Ernestine heard her mother's voice. Falteringly, she told her what had happened—wondering why she had not called her sooner.

"But, darling," cried mamma, "to think of you in all that trouble—I'll send the car right after you. You must come home to mamma until this is all over—you've never been to a funeral in your life, Ernestine. It will be so hard for you."

"Mamma," said Ernestine with vexation, "you know I can't come—I'm needed here. It's something else I called you for. Mamma, they can't have the funeral here at the house, because Will's mother is so ill it would be dangerous for her, and, of course, Will doesn't want his father buried from the funeral parlors, and he doesn't belong to any church—we don't know just what to do, mamma—" She couldn't say it. She simply could not.

"It's too bad you and Will aren't keeping house," said mamma. "If you had let papa help you you could do this for Will, now."

"You don't want to, mamma? I thought perhaps—your house is so big—that you would do this for Will. I'm asking you to have Will's father's funeral at our—at your house, mamma—" All their eyes were on her—her face was scarlet, her eyes were suffused with tears of humiliation.

"Why, Ernestine," said mamma, in a troubled voice, "I don't know. I'll have to talk to daddy—grandmother's not well. Wait a minute—hold the wire."

Ernestine stood in silence, saying to Will with her lips, "She's asking papa," waiting in the endless interval, certain of refusal—already hurt and resentful.

"Ernestine," mamma's voice was terribly sympathetic, "we're all just as sorry as we can be, but papa doesn't think Mr. Todd would want it. It doesn't seem practical, dear—the funeral home right there in his own neighborhood—lots of people are buried from such chapels every day, darling. Don't ask mamma to do such a hard thing—"

Ernestine hung up the receiver without a word and turned strained great eyes upon Will. John Pryor regarded her with a sarcastic smile. He was a socialist, or an anarchist, or something, Ernestine recalled.

"Will," he said with instant kindness, "let me have this funeral for you? It's right here, in the neighborhood, and it won't be a bit of trouble—your father and I belong to the same society—it would be all right with him, I know."

"All right," said Will dully, and turned to the undertaker: "Fix it that way—will you tend to the notices?"

"Will," Ernestine implored him, "it's not my fault—they don't understand—"

He patted her arm and tried to control his feelings.

"That's all right, kitten. I know you can't help it—it's just their way." His face worked, and suddenly he clenched his big hand. "My father—he was good enough to work for yours, for half his lifetime—good enough for that—but not good enough for his dead body—"

"Will—Will—don't—don't, darling—oh, you must not say such a thing—sweetheart."

"Let him cry," said Mrs. Schluss wisely, and Will cried upon Ernestine's shoulder—his tears wet her blouse, and she held him, feeling the great sobs rack him, wondering dimly if she would mourn for her father that way.

This would be her home, she resolved, kissing his tear-wet face, holding him to her heart. She would stay with Will and his mother. Her people had denied her husband the kindness that was due among kinsfolk. They had denied her. She felt that she didn't care whether she ever saw them again. If they had done this for Will, everything else would have followed, but now, in common loyalty to her husband, she had to recognize this hurt.

She was almost fainting with weariness. It seemed to her the night would never end.

Papa came in his big car and took Ernestine and Will and Mrs. Schluss to the burying ground. Will accepted this courtesy with dignity. He was not the person to quibble at a time like this.

The services of the Ethical society were brief and dignified. It was Ernestine's first acquaintance with death, and she felt the power of human dignity, felt as she had never felt before the common inheritance, the integrity of Will's father's life.

When they came back, Ernestine sat in the car and talked to her father a few minutes. She told him that she and Will were to stay at the little house, that she was going to try her hand at housework and nursing. She should have done it sooner—she didn't realize, she said, that she was needed.

She ought not reproach herself, her father answered—she had done quite well to avoid being a responsibility to Will's father and mother.

"That wasn't enough," said Ernestine. "I've a new set of values to learn."

"You think the ones you learned at home inadequate?"

"I didn't mean that."

"You've been very quiet with me all day. Do you resent our attitude?"

Ernestine was near to tears. "It hurt Will," she said, her voice shaking. "It forces me to take a stand—I have to be loyal to Will. Papa, I love you all so, but I love Will most. He's my husband. If he's hurt, so am I."

Her father's face had grown very white. He sat studying his gloved hand upon the polished steering wheel.

"That's right," he said after a little. "After all, that's part of what you learned at home—I hope. I thought—your mother wants me to tell you—we'll establish a trust fund for you and one for Lillian when she is married. I've got my money tied up in this stone merger, but I can settle some on you now, and more later, or I can give you an allowance." He stopped, controlled his emotion, and went on steadily, "I still think your marriage will prove disastrous, but you're my little girl—I want you to be happy. Of course, you can always come home, but as long as you stay with Will, I'd like to do what I can for you, Ernestine."

It was a long speech for him. He was always quick, half a phrase, half a sentence, sufficed him. Ernestine's hands squeezed his arm, she pulled him down and kissed him, and he put his big arm, awkward in his overcoat, about her, and drew her close.

"Before Will and I were married—he—he thought you might think he wanted my money—wanted some advantage, and I promised him I'd live his life, live on his income. I made a bargain and I must stand by it, papa. But I'm glad you told me—if I should need money, I'll let you know. Thank you."

Food "on the Hoof" Not What They Looked For

Three unemployed miners having emigrated to South Africa, and not being successful in obtaining employment, decided to journey up country, where, far away from civilization, they came across an explorers' depot, fairly well stocked with food.

After a few days, when the stores had become exhausted, and all three fed up, yet very hungry, one of their number decided to go in search of food, with the avowed determination to bring back something to eat even if it were a lion. He had not searched far when he encountered a lion, which was also in search of food.

The lion at once bounded toward the man, who turned and sped as rapidly as humanly possible toward the hut. On nearing the hut door, which was open, he stumbled and fell, too precipitately for the lion to recover, which bounded into the hut. When the man picked himself up, he quickly pulled the hut door to, and shouted to his mates inside: "Here you are! Skin that whilst I fetch another."—London Answers.

Food Value of Cauliflower

Cauliflower, while low in fuel value, is rich in vitamines A, B and C. It contains, also, considerable calcium and phosphorus, which are needed for healthy bones and teeth. Its water content is 92 per cent.

America's Venice

The term "Venice of America" is frequently used to describe the Thousand Islands, lying between Canada and New York in an extension of the St. Lawrence river.

Lesson for September 7

JOSIAH, A ROYAL REFORMER

LESSON TEXT—II Kings 22:1-8; 23:1-25.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Josiah Finds God's Book.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Josiah's Rare Find.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Getting Help from the Bible.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The World's Debt to Reformers.

I. Josiah a Godly Young King (22:1, 2).

He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord and turned not aside to the right hand or to the left. About one hundred years elapsed between the reformation under Hezekiah and that of Josiah. Sometime during this period the book of God's law had been lost. Two wicked kings had reigned in the interval. The Lord had given to Hezekiah much wealth. His son, Manasseh, coming into possession of his father's property and being ungodly would naturally neglect the Bible, if not purposely try to put it from sight. Those who do not obey the word of God are usually interested in putting it out of sight.

II. Finding the Book of the Law (22:3-10).

1. The occasion (vv. 3-8).

It was while restoring the temple during Josiah's reformation that the law was discovered. In clearing out the dark corners to make repairs and to find a place to store the subscriptions made by the people, many things which had been lost were found, among which was the law.

2. The Book read before the king (vv. 9, 10).

Upon making a report of the work to the king Shaphan informed him of the finding of the book of the law of the Lord, and the book was read by Shaphan before the king.

III. The Effect of the Reading of the Law (vv. 11-20).

1. The king rent his clothes (v. 11).

As the law was read before him he was led to realize the awful extent of the nation's departure from God. He knew that sin merited punishment. The rending of the royal robes indicated the king's penitence and sorrow.

2. The king sent a deputation to make inquiry of the Lord (vv. 12-20).

He included himself in the guilt before God (v. 13). His sense of sin was so keen that he sent to inquire of the Lord as to whether there was any means of diverting the divine judgments. Instinctively the human heart turns from God's threatening judgments to a means of escape.

3. The message of Huldah, the prophetess (vv. 15-20).

(1) Confirmation of what the law said (vv. 15-17).

She said that all the curses written in the law must follow, for the sins had been so flagrant that God's wrath could not be restrained. It was not too late, however, upon repentence to obtain mercy from God, but the outward consequences of sin must be realized.

(2) Acceptance of Josiah's repentance (vv. 18-20).

Because of his tenderness of heart and deep penitence, the Lord said he should be gathered to his grave in peace and should not see all the evil brought on Jerusalem and its people. What Huldah said was true though Josiah died in battle (II Chron. 35:22-25).

IV. Reforms Instituted (23:1-25).

1. The king read the law (vv. 1, 2).

He gathered together the inhabitants of Jerusalem, including the priests, Levites, and elders, and read unto them the law.

2. The king made a covenant before the Lord (v. 3).

In this covenant he pledged himself.

(1) "To walk before the Lord."

This meant that he would get personally right with God.

(2) To "keep God's commandments and his testimonies and his statutes."

This obedience was of the heart.

(3) "To perform the words of the covenant which were written in this book."

The king not only entered into this sincerely, but caused all that were present to "stand to" it.

3. The king took away the abominations (vv. 4-20).

He not only broke down the places of idolatrous worship, but slew the priests who officiated at the altar.

4. Passover kept (vv. 21-23).

So fully and heartily did they enter into this reformation that this Passover was unlike any that had been held since the days of the Judges.

5. Workers of the occult driven out (vv. 24, 25).

All the days of the king they departed not from following after the Lord.

Must Follow in His Steps

Sincere we must be, some sacrifices we must make, and for the rest we must follow in the steps of the Lord till we grow into his likeness. It is a splendid endeavor, and in its very difficulties and elevation lie its greatness and its success.—John Watson.

Prayer

Prayer is the pulse of the renewed soul; and the constancy of its beat is the test and measure of the spiritual life.—Octavius Winslow.

Community Building

Maintenance Big Point in Real Estate Value

The owner who realizes that the maintenance of property is a real asset as to the sale or rental of the property does not have to be told of the ecessity of keeping property in good condition. Unfortunately, however, there are many property owners, especially owners of unoccupied property, who do not realize this fact and then wonder why the property cannot be sold or rented. There is an old saying, "A stitch in time saves nine." This applies to many phases of business, but in regard to the maintenance of real estate it has a significance which can be measured in dollars and cents to an exceptional degree.

A small repair neglected can have much the same effect on an individual property as a decaying apple can have in a barrel of sound apples. The small repair develops into a bigger one which affects other parts of the property, causing a decay, so to speak, and a depreciation in value that really in the end makes the property unattractive and undesirable. It also affects in a detrimental way every nearby piece of real estate and deters persons who might be interested in nearby property to the point that they will neither buy nor rent in a particular street or section.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Pennsylvania in Move to Beautify Highways

Community and civic organizations throughout Pennsylvania have been called upon to carry out plans of roadside development and landscaping to supplement construction of highways. The appeal was made by the Pennsylvania Motor federation.

"Pennsylvania has spent and is spending millions of dollars for the construction of fine roads," S. Edward Gable, president of the federation said. "In connection with this there should be in each community a program of tree-planting, landscaping and roadside care which, when completed, not only will make the roads more pleasing to the eye, but will give to the traveler a much better and pleasanter impression of the community.

"There is little reason why the wind-swept, sun-baked stretches of concrete roads winding through the countryside should not be made more gracious to the eye by the planting of trees and flowers and roadside landscaping. The possibilities of roadside beautification are unlimited, and, if handled by community enterprise in co-operation with the proper authorities, can be worked out without burdensome expense."

Good Citizen Defined

The qualities of good citizenship are both positive and negative. A hermit is not a good citizen because while he may do no real harm, break no important laws, he contributes little to the general welfare, does not assist in enforcing law and withholds from the world the good influence which he might exert. The good citizen is interested in and helps to promote religion, education, clean politics, public economy and thrift; he keeps posted anent public affairs and candidates in order that he may vote intelligently, attends the primary and regular elections and votes.

His greatest contribution to public welfare is perhaps unfaltering faith in the ultimate triumph of good in the affairs of men.—Grit.

Garage as Investment

Most home owners who embark on a modernization campaign are sold on the idea that no improvement on the home place will add more to the appearance of the property and help more on the case of sale, than an attractive garage building.

As a source of revenue, for the small amount expended or invested, there are few better revenue producers than a garage built on the rear part of a home lot as there is, in most residence neighborhoods, a continuous demand for rented garages.

Erecting a garage and renting it will in many cases pay the taxes on the property.

Brick Veneering Pays

Many old houses have sturdy frames despite the shabby and old appearance of the exterior. Given a veneer of face brick, these houses will put on an appearance of newness and will give service that compares well with an entirely new home. The brick exterior provides protection against the elements and takes on added beauty with the years.

Supervision Important

Many architects believe that supervision is more important to the house than good plans, for good plans alone do not insure good building. It is the least expensive part of the architect's service. He charges less for this than for making the plans and specifications, because it takes less time to do it.

Houses Hard to Sell

Houses may have sound timbers and built into them the best of workmanship, but if the exterior lines are old, the siding weather-beaten and unpainted, the interior lacking in all of those modern contrivances that make for the comfort and convenience of the housewife, they are avoided.

Facts For Farm Folks Written by Agricultural Authorities

PROF. W. B. KRUSEK

REDUCING THE COST OF PRODUCTION

There are three main avenues for the livestock farmer to widen his margin of profit, all of which lead to the question of reducing the cost of production. These three avenues are better breeding, better feeding and more weeding.

It is rather a disappointment to drive through the country and notice the large number of inferior animals upon a great many of our farms. This is possibly due to some extent to the fact that a great many inferior sires have been used. Even in the case of our Pure Breds, inferior Pure Breds have been used and the feeder had thought largely that pure breeding was all that was essential. A much greater effort should be made to prolong the usefulness of tried and proven sires.

There are certain principles in the selection of a sire which as a rule hold true. However, occasionally a sire may not meet these requirements and may still be a very prepotent animal and produce animals that are extremely valuable in the feed lots and on the farm. The old saying that "The proof of the pudding is in the eating" can be well applied to the use of the sire upon the average breeding stock.

But good blood alone will not do the job. Just because animals are Pure Bred or of good breeding does not necessarily say that they will be profitable. Well bred animals only respond and make the feeder profit when he also practices good feeding. It is disappointing at times to think of the good messages that are distributed through the extension workers and through experiment station bulletins and then find that so few feeders have really taken advantage of this valuable information. A little more study of feeding problems in order that the production machines may work more efficiently would help to materially reduce the cost of production upon a great many livestock farms.

Employers, as a rule, do not keep unprofitable help very long. The lazy man or the loafer is usually eliminated. However, in a great many of our livestock herds loafers are very common. The good feeder must apply the principles of the man who employs labor. He must select his profitable breeding animals and eliminate his loafers. There is a great difference in the ability of certan brood sows to produce pigs. There is also a difference in the natural inherited ability of those pigs to grow. There is a great difference in the ability of certain brood sows to produce milk. There is much difference in the ability of certain hens to lay eggs. These are all very important in reducing the cost of production and widening the margin of profit.

The good feeder will give more seriou sthot to these problems, in periods such as the farmer is confronted with at the present time, it will do him much ood and make him profit to weed out his lazy animals and his animals that do not transmit ability to mature and produce economically.

AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENTS KILL 193 PERSONS

The monthly report of the Safety Department of the Automobile License Division of the Secretary of State's office shows that 193 persons were killed and 1,305 were injured in 1,052 accidents, outside Indianapolis and Marion County during the month of July.

These figures were made public today by Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, and the report further shows there were 34 more fatalities during the month of July than during the past five months with the exception of May in which was the largest with a total of 226.

Mr. Fifield stated that the figures for July show that 9 children under 4 years of age lost their lives, 21 between the ages of 5 and 14, 133 between 15 and 64, and 50 over 65 years of age.

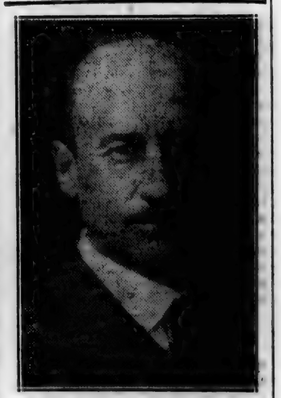
The report also shows that during the past five months 278 pedestrians were killed, 226 lost their lives in collisions, 155 in non-collision accidents such as skidding and turning over, 70 were killed in machines hitting fixed objects, 54 in running railway trains, 7 by electric cars, 5 were killed when run into by automobiles while riding bicycles, 9 persons while riding in horse drawn vehicles and 54 from other causes.

A total of 878 persons have lost their lives during the past five months, and a total of 5,714 persons have been injured.

"These figures show that accidents are still resulting from reckless driving," Mr. Fifield said, "and the condition merits a most serious consideration. The department is making an effort to meet this situation by enlisting the aid of all police officers, sheriffs, coroners, and magistrates, and I urge that there will be recommendations to the department for the suspension of Driver's license in all cases, brought to their attention, where death results or someone is injured, or where there is a serious destruction of property."

"I also desire to call attention to a provision in the Driver's License Law which provides that any magistrate who finds a guilty driver in his court, he may, in addition to a fine, recommend a suspension of the Driver's license. I believe that in the rigid enforcement of the Driver's License law will materially aid and assist in the ultimate means the saving of lives and the prevention of maimed children and women."

Dean J. H. Skinner Says State Fair Is Great Educational Institution



The Indiana State Fair, August 30 to September 6 will have something of interest to every citizen of the state, says Dean J. H. Skinner of Purdue University, ex-officio member of Indiana Board of Agriculture.

The State Fair is a great educational institution and the show window for the agriculture and industries of the Middle West—in fact, the Indiana State Fair is the great Midwest exposition in which all kinds of manufactured products, crops, live stock, poultry, farm products and even boys and girls are shown to the public in a most attractive and instructive way. No other fair has better equipment, premiums and attendance.

The Indiana Board of Agriculture has stressed educational features in all departments in a very large way. It has provided for a school for girls and a club camp for boys. It also provides a most excellent and wholesome race program and other entertainment for the visitors. No matter what the weather the Indiana State Fair is now prepared to carry on an excellent program with assurance that the public will be well cared for under any circumstances.

Every Indiana citizen, whether living on the farm or in the city, should be benefitted by attending the Indiana State Fair one or more days.

Report Bad Driving AND SAVE LIVES

This is the insignia we have used for many years.

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, SEPT. 11, 1930 — NUMBER 37

Road Building Program Approved By Council

The proposed highway of the Waterloo-Hamilton and St. Joe-Spencerville roads was decreed of public utility by the county council late Wednesday and the commisioners were authorized to proceed with the improvements.

The council acted unanimously on both projects, the ordinances being signed by Seymour Fisk, president; Ralph J. White, Thomas Dilgard, J. H. St. Clair, E. W. Johnson, Joseph R. Wiley and Thad W. Thomas. The councilmen made an official trip over the roads during the forenoon.

The commissioners are expected to proceed in the near future to let the contracts and issue bonds so that the paving can be laid next year.

Bituminous retread top will be used on 12,300 feet at the south end of the Waterloo-Hamilton road, with 9,470 feet of concrete on the north end. The cost is estimated at $67,927. For 5.2 miles of concrete on the St. Joe-Spencerville road, the cost is estimated at $135,134.16.

Asks For New Bridge

City officials of Auburn, appeared before the council and asked favorable action on the project of building a new bridge on Seventh Street across Cedar Creek.

The present bridge is badly in need of repair and should be wide enough to meet present-day traffic conditions, the council was told. The city was represented by Mayor Warren Lige, members of the council, City Attorney W. D. Stump, City Engineer Phil Holman and Charles Davis, chief of police. The council took no action at the time.

Action On Other Roads

The commissioners took action to advance the proceedings in other roads during their September term, which ended Wednesday.

The reports in the Wm. Staman road in Concord township were approved and notice of determination to issue bonds in the sum of $12,871.60 was ordered.

The engineer and viewers filed their report in the Roy Prosser road in Jackson township.

Similar action was taken in the Wallace Abel road in Newville township, in the Clydie E. Phillips road, in the Hoodelmier road in Union township and in the Cedar Chapel road in Butler township.

The final report of John Dannenberg superintendent of the Henry Grube drain in Keyser township was approved.

Wm. Egbert was appointed third drainage commissioner for the John H. Smith drain in Fairfield township.

Surveyor Files Reports

County Surveyor Charles Miser filed four gravel road reports at the September term of the DeKalb county commissioners. The viewers will meet in ten days from the date of filing which was September 3, to determine if any one has filed a written claim for damages. At that time the viewers will file their supplemental reports on the four roads.

One is the Clydie E. Phillips road located in Smithfield township. The road is 2.2 miles long and the estimater cost of construction is $9,630. The viewers are Frank Henney of Fairfield township and Charles Dohner of Troy township together with the county surveyor.

Another road is the William Hoodelmier road located in Union township. The length is 1.5 miles and the estimated cost of construction is $6,860. The viewers are A. D. Goodwin of Spencer township, George Walter of Concord township and the county surveyor.

The third road is the Roy Prosser road in Jackson township. The road is three miles in length, the estimated cost of construction $12,236.80 and the viewers Thomas Myers of Franklin township, Ira Bone of Concord township and the surveyor.

The fourth road is the Cedar Chapel road in Butler township petitioned for by John Reever. The length is 1.07 miles, the estimated cost of construction $3,110.40 and the viewers Burl Enzor of Newville township, John Krise of Union township and Charles T. Miser county surveyor.

County Budget Is Cut

Analyzing every item with a view to reducing it to bare necessity the county council at its annual session in the court house Tuesday and Wednesday succeeded in cutting a total of $14,900 from the budget and reducing the tax rate for the general fund from the proposed 28 cents on the $100 valuation to 25 cents. The total levy this year will be 49 cents compared to 52 cents on the $100 valuation last year.

No change was made in the gravel road repair fund items in the budget and the rate remains at 14 cents. The county unit road bond redemption levy remains at 10 cents.

The county fund rate two years ago was 23 cents, but an increase of 5 cents was made last year to provide funds for the general election of 1930, and to rebuild the Grube bridge south of Auburn. The valuation had also been reduced.

Very few departments of the county government evaded the council's axe, but most of the cuts are comparatively small. Conspicuous among the changes made in the budget is a cut from $7,500 to $5,000 for the Irene Byron hospital and $2,300 eliminated in an item for the pay of assistants to the county surveyor. Conspicuous among the items remaining in the budget are $82,810 for gravel road repair, $10,000 for new bridges and $5,000 for bridge repairs.

The total amount appropriated for the general fund is $99,900.

SPENCERVILLE MAN OPENS RADIO SHOP

The Woodring Radio Shop at Spencerville, known for miles around as the one reliable radio dealer and repair man, has leased the I. O. O. F. room, just vacated by the Ford Sales of Aubu , at St. Joe between J. C. Hull's barber shop and High's restaurant with the idea of giving the community a complete radio sales room.

Mr. Woodring has developed a wonderful radio trade and his business the past year far exceeded many large agencies.

A visit to his new sales room will be profitable to you and he will be glad to give you any information needed concerning his method of doing business. See his ad elsewhere in this issue.

FRANK MILLIMAN KILLED ON WABASH

Possibly the most tragic death in months in this community was that of F. L. Milliman at the Wabash crossing ½ mile west of the Sailor school house Sunday morning about 4 o'clock when train No. 2 swept down on the stalled car, completely demolishing it and injuring Mr. Milliman so that he passed away at noon on Sunday at the Angola hospital. There were no eye witnesses to the tragedy other than the trainmen.

The car was headed west and stalled in the stone ballast, and the marks indicated that he had tried his best to back up. Seeing the train approaching from the south Frank attempted to flag it, and in so doing was hit by the engine, a distance south of the crossing where papers and his hat and coat were found.

The car was thrown only a short distance on the east side of the track.

The train stopped and the crew picked up Mr. Milliman and took him to Montpelier and he was taken to Angola hosiptal where he died at noon.

Mrs. Milliman was at Rome City with her daughter when word reached her.

The body was removed to St. Joe Sunday afternoon by E. R. Kinsey.

OBITUARY

Frank Leslie Milliman, youngest son of Henry and Harriet Milliman, was born in Newville Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, September 2, 1878, and died in Angola, Indiana, Setember 7, 1930, having attained to the age of 52 years and 5 days.

His early boyhood was spent on a farm home, which was located in the Coburntown community, and his early training was in the common schools of that vicinity. His high school training was in Hicksville, Ohio, where he graduated at the very early age of sixteen. He then enterd Ohio Northern University, Ada, Ohio, from which institution he graduated with the class of 1898.

For several years after graduation he associated with others in the business of pharmacy, first in Hicksville and later in St. Joe; but for 23 years he has resided on the farm where he lived at the time of his death. However, durin this later period, he was active in public interests, being township trustee for a period, in which office he displayed splendid judgment.

In the year 1901 the deceased was married to Elziabeth A. Shuff. To this union two daughters were born, Marguerite M. and Leota H. Both of the daughters and their mother are living, and share together the grief that comes to those who mourn the loss of their dear ones. Three grandsons also survive, and one brother, Harry Milliman, of Edon, O.

The deceased was an esteemed member of the Knights of Pythias. He was a good neighbor. He always maintained a genuine personal interest in those about him and, in turn, possessed a large circle of personal friends. From all of these centers of influence he will henceforth be missed.

The funeral was held from the country home, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, conducted by the Rev. C. H. Havens, Rev. J. N. Scholes and Rev. B. W. Mayfield. Burial was made in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

Words cannot express our appreciation for the many kind acts, words of sympathy and assistance rendered to us, in this our sad hour, by our many friends and neighbors, for all of which we are grateful.

GRABILL BAND PLEASES LARGE CROWD

The Grabill band gave a good concert here on last Wednesday evening in closing the season's concert for the local band here. The harmony and execution was good and the town was well pleased with the entertainment. It seems that the town of Grabill realizes the importance of a musical organization. St. Joe has maintained its band organization for ten years, while this is the second year for Grabill band, and they are playing a good grade of music.

Possibly the crowd Wednesday evening was the largest of the season, due of course to the goodly number that came with the Grabill boys. We hope that the exchange concert can be arranged

FAVORITE COLORS FOR SHOES INCLUDE BROWN, GREEN, WINE

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

According to orders from fashion headquarters footwear must be as lovely and as colorful as the gown, suit or ensemble with which it is worn. Which means with the costumes in the new and exceedingly handsome dark greens, deep wine and various brown colorings which are scheduled for the coming months we are going to wear shoes made of fine supple kid in perfect match colorings.

It is very evident that the creators of our frocks, our wraps, our headwear and our footwear have made it a point to "get together" and talk it over with the result that we are going to match from head to foot especially in view of the fact that the jeweler, the pocketbook maker and even the handkerchief designer have joined this matchmaking group.

It is a matter for rejoicing that shoe stylists have selected fine soft and supple kid as the medium-elect for our fall and winter shoes. A kid shoe, like a kid glove, has a decided elasticity which the smartly attired woman demands in her footwear, for the woman with a reputation for being well dressed at all times—who is invariably the subject of admiring glances—is the woman who is absolutely comfortable in her clothes. One among many arguments in favor of kid for milady's shoe is that being more or less porous, it allows the foot to breathe, as it were, hence its comfort. Then again it is resilient and a shoe made of it conforms to the foot like a glove to the hand.

The well dressed woman selects her shoes with the same discrimination that is exercised in choosing a gown or a hat, for the footwear can make or mar the entire costume. Today color is one of the greatest factors in shoes. Leather specialists have recognized and appreciated this fashion consideration. In typical American spirit they have met the challenge with the result that kid shoes are easily obtainable in almost any color from deep wine, green and copper brown to the most esthetic pastel shades.

Shoes in tuneful color play an important part in achieving sartorial perfections for each of the costumes in the picture. The afternoon frock to the left is of rose-rust faille silk with the inevitable lingerie touch of dainty lace at the neck and the wrists. Brown kid pumps with beige trim complete the color symphony.

The ensemble is of silk in that very new dark color designated as date-plum—one of the off-black shades heralded for this fall. Please to observe the three-quarter length of the coat for it confirms the news of a coming vogue for long-coat ensembles. The coat is lined with a lightweight matching wool fabric with stitched bands of the same trimming as the dress. The hat is in self-color and the kid shoes are a deep wine tone.

How to Make the Blueberry Pudding

Easy enough for an inexperienced bride to get ready, and delicious enough to offer to the most distinguished person you know, is this quick blueberry pudding for which the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture furnishes a recipe:

1 quart blueberries
1 cup sugar
½ cup water
½ tsp. salt
2 cups soft bread crumbs.
2 tbs. salted butter.
1 tbs. lemon juice, if desired.

Pick over the berries, wash, drain, mix with the sugar, water and salt and boil for five minutes. Combine the bread crumbs and butter, add to the hot fruit, stir until well mixed, and let stand on the back of the stove for about 30 minutes, but do not let the pudding cook. Add the lemon juice and serve the pudding while still warm with plain or whipped cream.

HINTS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS

Salads and fresh fruit desserts are good for the family and are simple to prepare in summer.

In the efficient kitchen food moves in only one direction from the time it arrives at the kitchen until it is ready to serve.

The tomato has taken its place beside the orange as a source of necessary vitamins in the diet. Can plenty of tomatoes this year.

• • •

A backyard playground equipped with slides, swings, a sandpile, or toys for both active and quiet play may keep the child away from the danger of passing motorists.

HOMEMAKERS PREFER KITCHENS THAT ARE LIGHT AND AIRY

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When a homemaker looks over a house with the possible intention of renting or buying it, she lingers in the kitchen longer than in any other room. It is vital to her that her workshop should be light and airy, of good proportions and with a pleasant exposure and outlook. Of special importance is the equipment—not only what it is, but how each piece is placed with relation to all the others. The homemaker has to think of the work that will go on in the kitchen, of how she goes about each task, and what equipment and tools she will need to do it easily.

Builders have been known to supply excellent ranges, cabinets, sinks and ice boxes, all placed so that many unnecessary steps were taken by the housewife in her daily work. After the water and gas pipes and the electric wiring have been put in and the sink installed with cement, it is expensive to make changes. When one is planning and building a new home this difficulty can be anticipated while the house is still on paper.

Even when mistakes have been made with some of the fixed equipment, it may be possible to move other pieces about to correct matters somewhat. One of the larger kitchen furnishings which can usually be moved is the kitchen cabinet, if it is on casters. As the sink and the work table or cabinet are the nucleus of the food preparation center, it saves steps to have the cabinet as close to the sink as space permits. In the illustration, taken by the bureau of economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, the cabinet is at right angles to the sink in a rather small kitchen. After mixing a cake, for instance, bowls and other utensils can be put immediately on the drainboard to be washed, without any extra steps. Water is within reach for filling saucepans or using in recipes, as well as for washing vegetables or fruits or cleaning up dishes.

At the sink there should be brushes for cleaning vegetables, paring knives, measuring cup, scissors, strainers, colander and other small articles, hung up if possible. The garbage can should also be near the sink. As one thinks over the various tasks to be done in the kitchen in the course of a day, it will be realized that sometimes the same kind of tools are wanted in more than one place. A few duplicate articles which can be found quickly and without walking about will be worth many times their cost. For instance, sharp knives are wanted for paring and cutting foods in the food preparation center, and also in the serving center. A bread knife kept by the bread box and board or placed on the table with the bread will save extra steps and unused cut slices of bread. One might have two measuring cups: one at the work table or cabinet, and one near the sink.

STORY FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The Twins, Latitude and Longitude, were telling their story to David, and all that they did and all the help they gave.

"It all sounds very fine," agreed David. He really couldn't help liking the twins.

"We're all over the world," Latitude said, "but perhaps we mean more to ships and the people on ships than to any others.

"When anything happens they can always send word just exactly where they are by telling what we measure.

"If it weren't for us they'd have a hard time.

"It would be pretty difficult to simply send word they were somewhere on the Atlantic Ocean, for example.

"We heard you were adventuring, and as we're most important inhabitants of the Living Map, we stopped to have a chat.

"We called out to you awhile ago, but then we were so busy for a few moments we didn't have time to chat ourselves.

"Then we thought we'd talk to you here, you see."

"That's mighty kind of you," David said. He really did like the twins immensely.

"We have an engagement to lecture this afternoon," said Latitude, "on the 'Long and Short of it'—that is the subject of our lecture, but before we go we'd like you to hear our song."

"We're Longitude and Latitude."

"I'd be delighted to hear the song," David exclaimed, and he meant it. He thought it would certainly be something to tell them when he got back home again.

"We'll sing the first verse, then the chorus, then go back to the second verse," they said.

"We're Longitude and Latitude, the twins who measure the earth,
One is fat, the other is thin; to see us causes you mirth.
In books we're very complicated,
And often we are greatly hated,
But we pass it off with a grin and a laugh
As we distance the earth up, down and in half.

We're Longitude and Latitude, the twins without a last name,
But even lacking that, you know, we certainly have gained fame,
In books it really is a sin
The way they so dully put us in.

Chorus.

Latitude is very fat,
He moves from East to West;
Longitude is very thin,
He thinks his way is best—
He has his up and downs it's true,
He goes from North to South
But—"

They suddenly broke off singing, and Longitude shouted:

"We'll be late, Brother Twin, if we don't hurry. We really must hurry and not linger any longer."

So David never heard the end of that poem which they had made up about themselves and which they had sung to him.

With a good-by wave to David they had rushed off, leaving him sitting alone, and saying to himself:

"It's a pity one is so fat and the other so thin. It makes them both look so queer!

"But in spite of that, I like them. They are as jolly as can be, and really, I feel as though those Twins were certainly my friends now."

Mites Attack Oranges

Oranges or grapefruit which have a rusty appearance have been attacked by rust mites, animals so small that it has been estimated that half a million of them could find room on a grapefruit. These insects puncture the outer cells of the rind and suck the oil from it. Although the food value of such fruit is not reduced greatly, buyers generally prefer bright fruit, consequently the russets sell at a discount of 25 to 50 cents a box.

SOME TIMELY HINTS ABOUT FOOD FOR THE FAMILY TABLE

By NELLIE MAXWELL

It is often in the early fall days we suffer from the stifling heat; then, if ever, we need to serve food that will be appealing and refreshing.

Apple Surprise.—Peel and core six good flavored apples and place them in a shallow pan. Sprinkle with three-fourths of a cupful of sugar and pour over one-half cupful of water, simmer for a few minutes, then fill the cavities with one small can of diced pineapple and place half a cupful of cinnamon candies around the apples. Cook for twenty or more minutes, then add one-half cupful of nuts and one marshmallow for each apple. Cook again until the apples are tender, remove and cool. Serve with whipped cream.

Chocolate Butterscotch Pudding.—Take two cupfuls of scalded milk, two and one-half tablespoonfuls of cornstarch, one-fourth of a cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of cocoa and a pinch of salt. Mix until well blended, then cook until smooth and thick. Add the vanilla (a few drops), twelve marshmallows and six pieces of butterscotch. Mix until all the ingredients are well blended. Pour into molds and chill. Serve with whipped cream.

Plum Pudding.—Dissolve one package of lemon gelatin in boiling water or half water and the other fruit juice, using a pint of liquid; stir in three-fourths of a cupful of grapenuts, three-fourths of a cupful of cooked chopped prunes, three-fourths of a cupful each of raisins and nuts chopped, and one cupful of ground peanut brittle. Stir all into the hot gelatin and when well mixed set away to mold. Serve with whipped cream.

Salmon Souffle.—Flake a can of salmon and season with paprika, salt and lemon juice. Cook one-half cupful each of bread crumbs and milk ten minutes and add to the salmon; then add the yolks of three eggs, beaten thick and lemon colored and cut and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Turn into a buttered baking dish and bake until firm.

Egg Sandwich.—Chop hard cooked eggs, moisten with lemon juice, season with salt and pepper, spread over a lettuce leaf, place on a buttered slice of bread. Cover with a plain buttered slice.

Raisin Sandwich.—Butter brown bread cut very thin and cover one slice with chopped raisins mixed with mayonnaise.

Brabant Dressing.—Beat four egg yolks, add one teaspoonful each of mustard and salt and one tablespoonful of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, four tablespoonfuls of vinegar and a dash of red pepper. Cook all until thick, in a double boiler. Cool and add cupful of whipped cream and one cupful or nut meats.

Where the child must carry a lunch at school, every effort should be made to make the food appetizing. Fresh fruit when it is possible should always be included. Jams, jellies, dried fruits such as figs, prunes and raisins or dates will help out when apples, oranges and fresh fruits are not available.

Fruit Paste. — Thoroughly mix chopped dates, raisins, dry figs and finely ground nuts with orange juice and a little cream. Spread generously on thin, buttered bread.

Quick Orange Jam.—Take two cupfuls of orange pulp and juice, one lemon, pulp and juice, and one and one-half cupfuls of sugar. Boil ten minutes. Put into jelly glasses and seal. Serve in sandwiches or with toast. A small glass of this jam makes a dainty addition to the lunch-basket.

For a wholesome sandwich, spread one slice of the buttered bread with orange marmalade and the other with cottage cheese. Put together and wrap.

Carrot, Celery and Nut Sandwich.—Mix ground raw carrots, celery and nuts with lemon juice and boiled dressing. Put the mixture into cases made by scooping out a roll cut in half. Fit the halves together.

Party Sandwiches.—These should be served as soon as prepared. Mash bananas and fresh raspberries in equal amounts and moisten with sweet cream, add a pinch of salt and a bit of sugar if needed. Spread white bread with butter, then with the fruit mixture. Put the slices together and cut into fancy shapes. If the fresh berries are not obtainable, use raspberry jelly. If desired especially festive, decorate the top of small sandwiches cut into rounds with a spot of the jelly.

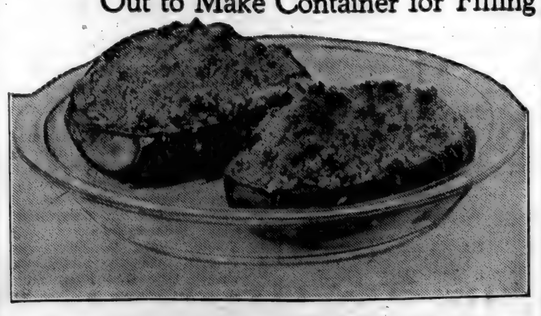
Dry Air Is Necessary to Avoid Mildew

Protection from mildew is best afforded by having a dry atmosphere where susceptible articles are stored. The attic is better than the cellar for articles not in immediate use, because the air in it is drier. Where mildew is prevalent, the atmosphere inside closets may be dried off to some extent by keeping a pail of unslaked lump lime in the closet, replacing it as soon as it becomes slaked. The door of the closet should be snug and tight when closed.

A mildew wall paper is likely to spread mildew through to any fresh layer of paper that is put over it, especially since wall papers are put on the walls with a starchy paste. A method that has been suggested for removing mold spots is to apply with a soft sponge a solution of one part salicylic acid in four parts alcohol. If this fails to remove the spots satisfactorily, the old paper should be removed and the walls repapered in dry weather.

Good ventilation and plenty of sunlight will help materially to prevent the development of mildew.

Vegetables Which Can Be Scooped Out to Make Container for Filling



Eggplant Scooped Out and Filled With Dressing.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Among the various stuffings used for vegetables like cymblings and eggplant which can be scooped out to make a container for the filling, the following has been found very good by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The eggplant pulp is cooked and mixed with the other ingredients:

1 large eggplant
4 tbs. melted butter or other fat
1½ cups dry bread crumbs
1 small onion, finely chopped
1 cup cooked string beans, peas, or other left-over vegetable
1 tsp. salt
Pepper

Wash and cut the eggplant in half lengthwise. Remove as much of the white portion as possible without breaking the shell, cut the pulp into small pieces, cook in a small quantity of hot water for ten minutes, or until tender, and drain. To the melted fat add the bread crumbs, stir until well mixed, and reserve half of the crumbs for the top. To the remaining crumbs add the other ingredients and the eggplant pulp, mix thoroughly, pile lightly into the eggplant shells, sprinkle the top with the crumbs, place in a shallow baking dish, pour a few tablespoonfuls of hot water around the shells to keep them from sticking, and bake in a moderate oven for 30 minutes. Serve in the baking dish.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE GNUS IN THE ZOO

"THERE are three of us in the zoo," said the Blue or Gray Gnu, sometimes called the Brindled Gnu.

"There's myself, for, as I'm doing the talking, I consider I am the most important of all."

"There's myself," said the White-Bearded Gnu, the largest of the three animals, but very much like the Blue Gnu.

"And there's myself," said the White-Tailed Gnu. "I'm interesting.

"I come from South Africa. I used to live on herbs and grasses. Here they give me grass and clover, too. My nose isn't straight—it is what you would call an oddly-shaped nose.

"I Am Thoroughly Ugly and Thoroughly Odd."

"My horns are peculiar and my hips aren't at all beautiful. My tail is like the tail of a horse except that it ends off in white.

"I have ugly hairs on my back and around my face and so, as I am thoroughly ugly and thoroughly odd—I am most interesting."

"I'm the best-looking of the three," said the White-Bearded Gnu.

None of them, however, were good looking, and their expressions were cross and mean. They looked like peculiar and very ugly horses.

"I have horns, too," said the White-Tailed Gnu "and my great-great-grandfather was just like me—or I am just like him.

"He used to get so bored with the people who stared at him. He didn't raise any objection to being in the zoo—hardly any of us do, for that matter, but he was so very much bored all the time."

"My great-great-grandfather," said the White-Bearded Gnu, "used to travel with about forty or fifty of his companions in Africa just like the buffaloes have done in America, I am told.

"He was a wild one—my great-great-grandfather."

"Now that you've both had your say," remarked the Blue or Gray Gnu, "let me say that I and my family hold the record for being the crossest of all the gnu families.

"We're all a cranky lot.

"We don't feel much crankier here than when we were in the wild, wild, free state, but we won't be petted.

"Nor will we make friends with anyone—not even the keeper.

"And I'm the leader when it comes to crankiness. My keeper says I have the meanest disposition."

"You're just mean enough, too, to brag about it," said the White-Tailed Gnu.

"But what care I?

"The life of a gnu is a dull affair, anyway. There is no special reason for having gnu families in the world.

"Anyway, I think everything is so dull and stupid, and so boring that I rather like to be mean, too.

"It's the only thing which gives me any amusement in life."

And the others all agreed with this sentiment. For—

The Gnu,
The Gnu,
Is gloomy
And blue,
Sometimes gray,
Sometimes white,
And a sad-
Looking sight.
The one that's white
Is not all white,
But even so,
Is a sad-
Looking sight.

Colorful Hungary

Village Beaus in Hungary.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE gala day of the year in Budapest, Hungary, is August 20, Saint Stephen's Day, when the embalmed hand of the country's patron saint is carried with much pomp through the streets in a jeweled reliquary to the old Mathias church.

In these days of the rapid modernizing of the more traveled countries of Europe, the old-fashioned festivals, religious fetes, national costumes and customs are fast disappearing, and there remain no more novel and entertaining sights than those surrounding the ancient fete of Saint Stephen of Hungary.

For who Saint Stephen was and why he was thus honored we must go back some nine hundred and odd years in Hungarian history, from which we gather the following information: Valk came to the throne of the Magyar duchy in the year 997. He applied for and received the title of Apostolic King from Pope Sylvester II, and was crowned in Budapest in the year 1000, under the Christian name of Stephen. He did much for his countrymen to bring them into the established church, and founded throughout his kingdom churches, schools and convents. His administration was a wise one, and so firmly did he deal with the attempted uprising of the "old Magyar religion" party that when his death occurred, in 1036, he left his country entirely converted to Christianity. So much had he done for the advancement of the Christian faith among the wild hordes of eastern Europe, and added to the civilization of his subjects, that he was canonized, and gladly proclaimed by the Hungarians as their patron saint.

Not to know Budapest is to have missed one of the loveliest of European cities. It has its own distinctive stateliness that reflects the cultural flowering of a race whose kingdom has been enthroned on the Danube for a thousand years. As certain American metropolitan quarters, such as "Little Italy" or "Little Germany," reflect their mother countries in miniature, so Budapest's topography reflects on a small scale the lineaments of what, as a result of the war, is literally "Little Hungary."

Buda and Pest.

Ancient Buda, on the Danube's right bank, rears aloft on rocky crests that represent the foothills of Hungary's mountains, while on the other bank modern Pest stretches away in levels that prelude Hungary's plains.

Buda, with its splendid palace, symbolizes Hungary's long succession of rulers, reaching from Stephen the Saint, of 1000 A. D., down to the latter-day reigns of Maria Theresa and Franz Josef. Pest's parliament houses, memorable in their river-set majesty, symbolize the early won liberties of a people whose forefathers' rights were established almost contemporaneously with England's winning of Magna Charta.

Above all, Budapest is a city of beautiful vistas. One's admiration is divided between its stately public buildings and the carefully apportioned squares, parks, and boulevards that lend to the picture an architectural airiness, a spaciousness undefaced by an industrialism whose chimneys loom in adjacent suburbs.

Few cities over the million mark, with as many as 72,000 factory workers, can boast, like Budapest, of an unindustrialized aspect, of an island pleasance lying in midriver at its doors, of delightful riverside promenades, where one lounges or lunches and where motor cars are strictly taboo.

The people of Budapest love pleasure and for miles along the river there are bathing places where young and old mass on the sands or paddle about in graceful canoes. Across from Pest rise rounded hills dotted with small villages and summer villas from which one has lovely views of the teeming city, the wide plain and the winding river.

Certain post-war changes reveal with what ingenuity Hungary has met her reconstruction problem. "How many crowns for a dollar?" you may ask a Budapest foreign-exchange clerk. He will reply, "I'll give you the rate in pengos." You may be familiar with most European currencies, and have literary acquaintances with doubloons, ducats, and moidores; but what, in the name of coins ancient and modern, you ask, is a pengo?

Krone Is Now Pengo.

The answer, as suggested by the word's tinkling sound, is "Money that rings like gold." When post-war Hungary's currency crashed, the phrase "Hungarian krone" (crown) became a synonym of worthlessness, and so, along with her financial reconstruction under the auspices of the League of Nations, a national coin-naming competition was inaugurated. As a result, the discredited "krone" was replaced by the onomatopoeic "pengo," to reinforce faith in the stabilized currency.

Side trips from Budapest will convince the traveler that, contrary to first impressions, the Hungarian plain is far from being either monotonous or lacking in color. One need not travel for more than a few hours east of the capital in order to see all the colors of the rainbow, or gypsy camps, or a Wild West roundup, or a first-rate Fata Morgana, with illusive seas and cities rising across the plain.

The colors will assail your eyes at the village of Mezokovesd any Sunday morning, in the church square seething with folk. Their black garments merely serve as background for superimposed stripes, aprons, bodices, woven in mixed patterns of orange, green, yellow and purple.

A fringed apron, kaleidoscopic in effect, hangs from the waist of each maiden or youth. The former's full-pleated skirt sways rhythmically as she walks. The latter, in his short, velvet-collared jacket, his tall, flat-brimmed derby, and that indescribably coquettish apron, would inspire any fraternal order of the So-and-Sos with hints for a striking lodge costume.

Matrons wearing the cornucopia-shaped coif of medieval association display garments of lesser color areas, while dear old grannies promenade in solemn black—mere background for youth's peacock pageant.

If you are fortunate enough to view a marriage ceremony, the color will be heightened. Down the village street comes a costumed wedding party. In naive symbolism of hoped-for fertility, the bride carries a chicken, while the bridegroom displays a baby doll in his hat; and after the event is over the peacock maidens parade up and down in pairs for the especial benefit of the peacock youths.

The Wild West round-up may be witnessed around Debreczen, whose neighboring plains contain 60,000 head of live stock. The spectacle of stalwart csikos (cowboys) throwing the lasso while wearing derby hats and petticoats lends itself to mirth until one discovers that for dexterity with rope and horse they have few equals. The big round-ups coincide with Debreczen's fairs, where masses of horses, longhorned cattle and gaily clad csikos form a spectacle that could hardly have been equaled by our West at its wildest.

Great Hungarian Plain.

From the northward-rising Tokaj-Hegyalja mountains, whence comes the sweet and heady Tokay wine, and to southward, along the Tisza's entire course, stretches the larger Alfold, or Great Hungarian plain, separated from the smaller Alfold by two mountain ranges. Inundation is its ancient enemy. Government engineers assert that the fall of a single dike on the Tisza would put one-sixth of Hungary under water.

The Alfold's grassy expanses, where sky meets circling horizon like a blue, inverted bowl, has the poetry of timeless calm. At times its distant clouds seem so low, so solid, that you almost fancy a cowboy could lasso one and haul it to earth. Daylong nothing is heard but sheep bells atinkle or the lulling pastoral of some shepherd's flute.

The Alfold's gypsies may be found amid crazy hovels adjoining the raveled-out ends of some village street. Against a background of dirt floors, paneless windows, filth indescribable, out will rush a gang of wild-eyed children, swarthy men, slipshod women, to see what they can sell passing tourists. They proffer music, but whatever be the tune, your true Tsigane musician seems temperamentally unable to perform it except in wild and wavelike strains of abysmal despair.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

TOADS AND TOMATOES

HANDLING toads causes warts. Any old-time dweller in the rural districts can tell you that—and prove it by citing cases. "I told Johnny not to play with toads; but he would do it and now just look at his hands!" This superstition is simply a survival of that homeopathic magic so popular in all ages; the doctrine of "like causes like." The toad is a warty creature—if the child handles him, the child's hands become warty.

When the tomato first began to be used as an article of food—and that was about 1830—a very popular prejudice sprang up against it on the ground that the eating of it "caused cancer." This superstition is now almost extinct, but now and then you will run across it still. It had its origin in this same homeopathic magic.

A tomato cut in half through its "equator" presented a surface in which there was a fancied resemblance to a full-grown, virulent cancer. Therefore to eat the tomato would cause cancer. The incident of the tomato shows that the primitive mind of man is still at work and is capable of originating new superstitions as well as retaining and perpetuating those of our ancestors.

Dear Editor:

I HAVE thought I was the railroad's last friend, but my allegiance is weakening. It's those night engineers who are souring me.

On any trip I'd much rather take the train and read a book in comfort and safety than to hug a steering wheel for hours on end. I like trains because the scenery is not compulsory. But if I hit another hotel like that one where the engines whistled all night under my window, I'm going to love railroads less.

Even in one town where sleep ought to be easy—the all-night freight trains sputtered and steamed in a way to murder the public good will.

I am starting a movement to put Maxim silencers on whistles. Then I hope the railroads will educate a little tact and courtesy into their night engineers. In these days of competition from busses and trucks and airplanes, I think the railroad needs all the friends it can get.—Fred Barton.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"BY AND LARGE"

HERE is an expressive Americanism indicative of any object or situation which is considered in all its fullness or in all respects, from all angles. We hear it frequently employed as in the sentence:

"By and large, this is about as good a result as could be hoped for."

This old-time Americanism has been sanctioned by reputable usage. Credit for its authorship is attributed to Capt. John Smith, who "coined" it in 1627. It was subsequently introduced into good literary society, being used by Digby in 1627, and by Sturmy in 1669.

It is also said to have appeared in Fraser's Magazine in 1833. W. C. Russell used it in 1881 and it has been used generally ever since.

Useful Alarm Clock

No longer need the heavy sleeper seek for his electric light switch when awakened by his alarm clock in the early hours of the morning. From the Schwarzwald, the home of the cuckoo clock, comes news of an alarm clock that illuminates itself at the appointed time. It is in the shape of a ball, the upper half of which revolves faster than the lower. Around the rim of the upper half stand the minutes, whilst around that of the lower are the hours, the time being indicated by a fixed hand. When the hour for wakening comes an alarm is rung and the light is automatically switched on.

England Takes Up Idea of Trees as Memorials

A charming practice of planting trees in memory of those whose names it is desired to keep alive is now growing up in England. It was brought to public notice recently by a ceremony beside the Kingston bypass road, near the village of Kingston Vale, when an oak tree was planted and dedicated to the memory of a flying force officer who was killed in the World war. The planting of trees along new roads has been greatly assisted by the work of the Roads Beautifying association. If the work is linked up with the idea of commemoration, as in the case of "oaks of memory," it may be "speeded up," and, at the same time, people will be encouraged to care for trees and protect them in a new way because of their associations. Montreal, Can., has such a tree-planted memorial boulevard many miles long. These trees are carefully tended and ornamented with flags each Armistice day.

Crop Rotation Ancient

The principles of soil cultivation, which are included under the term "scientific farming," were known to the farmers of the most ancient times, according to H. W. Warner, writing in the Farm Journal.

"The principle of crop rotation was known and practiced to some extent more than three thousand years ago," he says. "We find application of lime to the soil mentioned in writings dating well before the Christian era. The early white settlers of New England found the Indians fertilizing corn, and artificial fertilization with guano was practiced by the Incas in South America 20 centuries ago."

She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts is carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Pilots Shot From Planes

Airplane pilots and their parachutes are hurled 30 feet clear of a falling plane by a new German compressed-air gun. The device is intended to save the danger that when a pilot jumps to save himself he may foul the parachute on the 'plane. Now he simply pulls a hand-trigger, and is shot free.

The inspiration for this safety gun is said to have been obtained from a pneumatic cannon used in a Berlin stage act that hurled performers from eight to a hundred feet in the air.

Beetle in More Churches

Stow, known as the "Motor Church of Lincoln" in England, is to be restored, owing to the ravages of the death watch beetle among the ancient timbers and roofs. Boston's famous "stump," which rises to within five feet of the height of Lincoln cathedral, is another of England's famous churches that must be repaired because of the insects' activities. When the repairs at Stow are completed a chemical that is believed to kill the death watch beetle is to be applied.

How much can a coffee urn?

There is many a barrel getting full and all pickeled up these days.

Take the dollar ($) sign out of the christian profession and see how many follow it.

All kinds of competition is the life of all kinds of trade. What's your competition? What's your trade?

Some people have made themselves out to be colossal liars by slapping the other fellow on the back, saying, "Hello friend."

No true christian can be the follower of the Christ man and be different. Things (people) equal to the same thing are equal to each other—geometrically and deo-metrically.

If there is any truth in the prophecy, that "he who kills by the sword, shall perish by the sword" it might be well for those people who delight in riding their neighbors in the spirit of guile and deceit, to have a good saddle made for themselves.

When people are out of work and must still pay for daily expenses, they draw on their savings. Hence last winter and spring the banks reported savings account showing effects of the draw-out. Now comes the official report of thirty-four banks and the Federal Reserve bank of the Indiana District showing that on August 1, 1930, the savings accounts had an increase of 6 per cent over the same date in 1929.

Auditor of State Bobbitt's report of the month of August shows an increase in receipts of the gasoline tax—4 cents per gallon—of $202,144 over the same month of 1929. The total paid by motorists in Indiana in August, 1930, was $1,866,390.58, the largest on record. The collections for the first eight months of the present year is $11,575,295, an increase of more than $1,800,000 over the first months of 1929. Commenting on these figures the Indianapolis News says:—"The collections are something of a business barometer. If the public were economizing in every way, it likely would give up driving for pleasure. Poor busness would mean less bus transportation and little need for commercial vehicles on the highways. The measurement as applied by the gasoline fee yardstick shows gains rather than losses, and indicates that automobiles are being driven to a greater extent this year than roads.

Christian Brotherhoods

The Christian Brotherhood movement in America is steadily growing. The success of the movement argues its essentiality. The failure of such a movement in a community argues for its dire need in communties. Brotherhoods have been both successful and failures due to many different reasons. When tried they can be said to be a spiritual barometer telling the spiritual weather conditions of its environment. In the organization of a brotherhood, there is much to be taken into consideration. The motive environment, material, leadership, results. While all are informed as to the intended motive of a Christian Brotherhood in the community not all are aware of the difficult problems that must be considered and dealt with in such an organization, which means that a brotherhood of men is one thing and is not quite a few other things.

A brotherhood is not a political institution—to O. K. or N. G. candidates for public office or to control elections, etc. It is not an institution to be controlled by commercial interests to obstruct or create business. It is not an institution to work out or in spite work, to intimidate, to throw mud, to kill enemies, etc. It is not a fraternal institution whose membership is determined by the choice of certain members assuming control.

A Christian Brotherhood is one thing. It is a contract between a body of men in a community to organize into a body for the express purpose of enlarging the horizons of life through intellectual development of the citizens, through the teaching of pure and undefiled christianity—the discussions of subjects that will tend to drive out the weakness of men and supplant strength, wisdom, charity instead. A Christian Brotherhood will be purely spiritual if it is to succeed—carnality can be no substitute. A brotherhood can succeed in any community if the motives are always kept in mind and observed.

Reciprocity and Communities

Much has been written and said concerning the vanishing of small towns and communities and the inevitable destruction that the rapid growth of the cities will soon visit on the rural sections of the country. The real estate owner of the country side has watched with some degree of dissatisfaction the decline in the selling price of farms and residences while the tax rate refuses to decline in proportion.

Independent retail dealers have heard that they are soon to be ancient history, the chain store will take their places to be the community Santa Claus and distributor of the necessities of life.

The little red school house has gone and the little brown church in the wildwood is on the waiting list to go next.

The ever changing world is bringing changes in all avenues of administration and all these threatening changes are the result of changing methods. It can hardly be said that the up-to-date methods of doing things are responsible for the decline of prosperity and real estate valuations, because they are not the controling factors in any community. The dynamic factors of community advancement is unselfish public interest and cooperation of that interest. And the lack of public interest in domestic affairs automatically surrenders small communities to the larger cities who know full well what to do with business when it comes their way. When a small community surrenders it is done—until it awakens to its possibilties and asserts itself. To fight is to conquer—to conquer is to prosper.

But in spite of the so called panic or depression that has had a bad psychological effect on the people, there has been some improvement in the small communities in business activities. This impetus of prosperity is due solely to the increased interest people are taking in their own and their neighbors interests, etc. Bands and commercial organizations have been organized by the boosters of the community and as a result of their efforts large crowds throng the street in proof of their effectiveness.

The pushing elements of a prosperous town are pride, awakeness, fight, broad-mindedness, and the friendly cooperation of all. People who have taken up a residence in your town are expected to be interested in the affairs of his town. Residence implies action. Action implies reciprocity.

Besides having the spirit of reciprocity in communites, its also necessary to have reciprocity among communities. One town taking an interest in the affairs of another, by exchanging courtesies, band concerts and talent, as has been demonstrated of recent date. Good will shown and exercised between towns and villages has a tendency to bolster up world respect for the rural countryside towns and restore the prestige at once lost to the old home town.

The United States is a nation of communities—states bound together by the bonds of nationalism. Each state has delegated to it certian rights which gives it autonomy and freedom of action while the national government has delegated to it certain rights. It is the cooperation and reciprocity between state an dnation that is the secret of our success.

The suggested United States of Europe is the most recent example of reciprocity between large national communities. The cooperation plan is much the same in all cases.

The world's business fabric is woven by reciprocity between individuals of the small commnuity, tween state and nation that is the between communities, between doms. Our work is in the community and between communities. To think well of others is to have them think well of us.

Reciprocity means self preservation.

PITY THE POOR TEACHER

Many parents whose children have come home from school with poor marks fail to appreciate how poo marks fail to appreciate how difficult it is for a teacher, no matter how willing she may be, to give very high percentages in all cases.

The Washington Post some time ago gave the following quotations from school examination papers in Baltimore, Maryland. If you were a teacher, how would you mark such answers?

"A blizzard is the inside of a hen.

A circle is a round, straght line with a hole in the middle.

George Washngton married Mary Custis and in due time became the father of his country.

A mountinn range is a large cook stove.

Achilles was diped in the river Styx to make him normal.

Pompeii was destroyed by an eruption of saliva from the Vatican.

Typhoid fever is prevented by fascination.

Sixty gallons make one hedgehog.

Georgia was founded by people who had been executed."

Honest bread is very well—it's the butter that makes the temptation.—Jerrold.

When out of breath you catch it quicker by standing still than by running after it.

When you call on a man, try to carry him a compliment some one has passed on him.

Experience is a pretty dear teacher—when it comes in the form of a pretty schoolma'am.

Usually, the company of people who want to be wicked for fun grows tiresome—and they are shallow.

Justice fails in this country chiefly because jurisprudence has provided so many hurdles and handicaps for it.

Boys Save Pennies

A Dayton (Ohio) automobile dealer was confronted by two lads, sixteen and nine, respectively, lugging two lard pails full of copper cents. They demanded in exchange a sedan. The boys, Clarence and George Koene, got their car, as the money they lugged around represented the price of the sedan. The boys had newspaper routes and had saved every one of the 40,000 cents with which the car was bought.

Twenty-Foot Bricks

Through the discovery of a new road-building material produced from a vitreous clay, the manufacture of bricks 20 feet long is now made possible.

Wealth From Quarries

Missouri stone mines and quarries produced more than $5,000,000 worth of material during 1929, reports compiled show.

Day of Sacred Memories

Memorial day has a sacred and tender significance to many of us who have dear ones laid away in the city of the dead. They have slipped away from us, and we see their faces no more, but our hearts still hold them in loving remembrance. So we carry our beautiful floral tribute to them, and as we lay our flowers above their resting place, we love to think that they know and understand the love which prompts us to bring our tribute of affection to them on each recurring Memorial anniversary.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Favorite Bible Passages of Harold Bell Wright

Novelist.

Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these My brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me.—Matthew 25:40.

And behold, a certain lawyer stood up and made trial of Him, saying, Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? And He said unto him, What is written in the law? How readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. And He said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.—Luke 10:25-28.

The life is more than food, and the body than the raiment.—Luke 12:23.

Comment: To me, this last sentence expresses what, with no irreverence, I like to think of as the earthly philosophy of Jesus. As a single grain of wheat holds a germ of life which is capable of producing all the bread the world will ever need, this saying holds the vital germ of all that Jesus taught concerning man's right living here on earth.

HOWARD BAUGHMAN IS RECOVERING

Howard Baughman, who was the victim of a fight some weeks ago, staged by three Harlan boys, is recovering slowly and is able to be about some, although he is suffering with his right eye.

The fight took place on a Saturday night and it was a week on Sunday before Howard had regained consciousness entirely. Dr. Fanning of Butler made daily trips to the Baughman home for over a week. It will be many weeks before he will be physically able to go to work. An affidavit was filed against the trio by David Baughman, the father, and it is being held up to determine the extent of the injuries and developments.

SPENCERVILLE WIFE IS ASKING FOR DIVORCE

Habitual drunkenness and non-support are allegations made by Stella Goldsmith of Spencerville, in filing a divorce case Saturday against Wm. Goldsmith in the DeKalb circuit court.

Married March 16, 1907, the couple separated Saturday. The plaintiff says her husband was guilty of habitual drunkenness for many years and for more than two years failed to provide reasonable support. She adds that he used profane language in the home and was abusive towards her.

Mrs. Goldsmith states that her husband owns $2,000 worth of property and she is asking for $1,200 alimony. Her attorneys are Stump & McClintock.

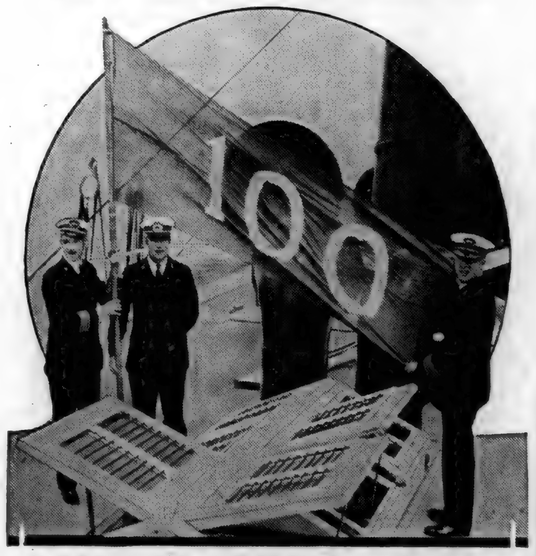
First Hundred Voyages Are Over



Left to right: Chief Engineer J. L. Wosser, Mate Gus Lind, and Capt. A. A. Sawyer, with the flag that is rarely seen on the high seas. It is the one hundredth voyage pennant which few ships ever obtain and which no ship flies more than twice—on entering port at each end of the one hundredth round trip between the same ports without interruption. The seamen above are members of the crew of the S. S. Calawaii which has made 100 trips between Los Angeles and the Hawaiian islands. This feat required seven years.

Breaking World's Pulling Record

Straining every muscle in their powerful bodies, "Bill" and "Colonel," the team belonging to George Wilcox, of Greenville, Ohio, breaking the world's pulling record by exerting a 3,550-pounds tractive pull at the Jay county fair at Portland, Ind. This is equivalent to pulling 46,102 pounds on a wagon on granite block pavement, or to pulling eight 14-inch plows six inches deep in ordinary wheat stubble.

FARM STOCK

CATTLE LICE NEED TWO TREATMENTS

Some Homemade Mixtures Are Quite Effective.

Three kinds of lice are commonly found on cattle and they may all be present at the same time. Fortunately, the same treatment may be used for each kind, says Prof. H. A. Hopper of Cornell university.

Cattle lice are especially injurious to young stock. The irritation caused by the lice arrests growth and contributes to low vitality. When the animals are stabled in the fall, lice may not be detected, but after a few weeks in the stable several batches of eggs may hatch and the whole herd be infested. They must be controlled to insure the thrift and comfort of the herd, not to mention profitable milking.

Dipping the herd is most effective where the size of the herd justifies it and the equipment is at hand. An orchard sprayer or even a hand pump may be satisfactory for moderate-sized herds. If well done, spraying will control lice. The body must be wet thoroughly, especially the head, ears, brisket, tail, and the inner surface of the thighs and flanks. In cold weather the cattle must be protected after treatment. Arsenical dips are commonly used for sprays, but any standard dip used according to directions will be effective. Two treatments 15 to 16 days apart are advised.

During cold weather most owners will prefer to use hand applications such as powders and ointments, suggests Professor Hopper. Before applying these, it is best to expose the hiding places of the pests by clipping all or part of the body. Clip and remove the rough hair, if any, along the back, around the head, neck, and ears and inside the flanks and thighs.

Most dusting powders have some value in holding lice in check in cold weather, but they are not recommended as effective in eradicating cattle lice. Homemade preparations may be used if mixed and applied as indicated. And as the dips they should be applied 10 days apart.

Inbreeding Intensifies Swine Characteristics

Inbreeding intensifies both the good and bad characteristics present in the parents. If the ancestry is known to have had no weak points, which is seldom the case, then inbreeding may result in outstanding offsprings. It should be remembered also that inbreeding often brings hidden defects to light, writes A. D. Weber of the University of Nebraska.

As a general rule, inbreeding should not be practiced in herds where the pigs are to be fattened for market. The progressive and studious breeder of pure breds, however, can afford to experiment with inbreeding with the hope that a few outstanding pigs will be produced and thus enable him to eventually fix a superior type that will breed true.

Dairy Cows to Produce Heifers for Beef Trade

Where a man intends to keep some heifers for breeding, a milking shorthorn bull, of unusually beefy conformation, would make a satisfactory cross on his dairy cows. If a man didn't want to keep any heifers, then an Aberdeen-Angus bull could hardly be excelled for crossing on dairy cows, to produce calves to raise for beef. The horniess head and the black color of the Aberdeen-Angus are dominant in heredity, and the cross-bred calves would be mainly horniess and solid black in color. This uniformity, together with the short legs and thickness that they would likely inherit from their sire, would be an advantage to the feeder.

Sows Need Minerals to Prevent Going Down

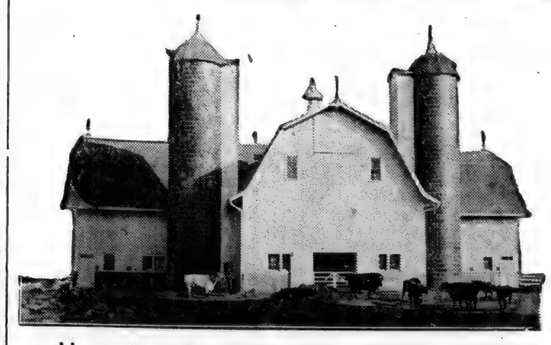
Sows that go down in the back may be injured in some accident. More often, however, they are crippies because of the reduction of lime in their skeletons to supply milk to their young. A ration that is high in protein, mineral and vitamins is essential if the sows are not to have trouble from this source. A ration containing tankage, alfalfa meal and mineral should not allow the skeleton to get so low in minerals that the bones cannot carry the weight.

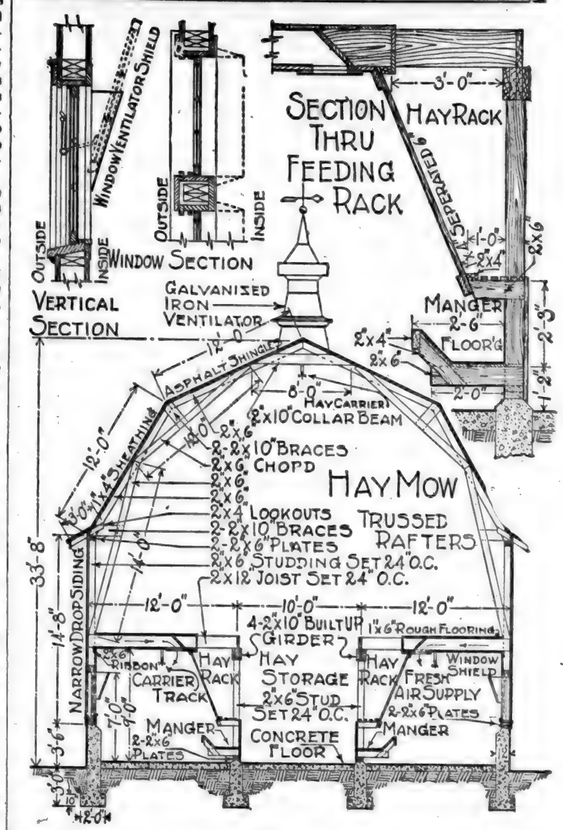
Little or nothing can be done for her once she is down. Feeding a good balanced commercial ration will prevent this trouble.

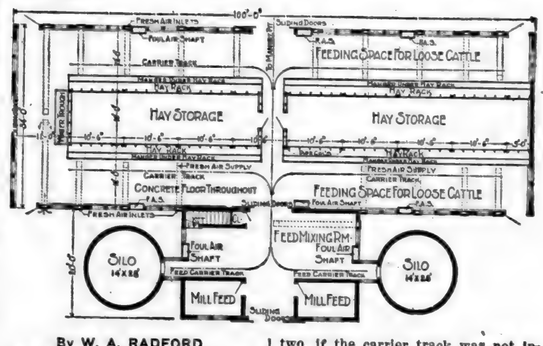
Returns From Silage

An acre of corn returned $71.65 when put into a silo and fed to steers as silage, together with cottonseed meal and mixed hay, at the Ohio Experiment station in a recent test. An acre of similar corn returned $50.80 when cut and husked and fed to steers as shelled corn and stover, together with cottonseed meal and mixed hay. This study confirms the results secured by other experiment stations as well as the observation of practical feeders.

Cattle Feeding Plant Equipped for Storage and Self-Feeding







By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Everything points to a low price for corn this fall and winter and, as a consequence, growers of corn will find it more profitable to market their crops through live stock than to make of it a cash crop. By ensiling some of the crop and husking out the balance, cattle feeders will have a good stock of low-priced feed this fall.

In order to make feeding operations profitable, buildings that will house the cattle and roughage and the grain rations, together with silos, are needed. Cattle that are kept in a dry lot and practically unprotected from winter weather, use up a great amount of feed to produce body heat rather than to put on flesh and fat, which are what buyers pay for. The cattle feeding plant shown is an open stable floor with equipment for hay storage and hay self-feeding. Between the two silos at the front is the feed storage room and feed mixing room. The equipment used to cut down the labor of feeding the animals is indicated on the floor plan. A cross-section of the barn and some of the details of construction also are given. In the cross-section the materials used and the dimensions also are shown.

It will be noted on the floor plans that the barn proper is 100 feet long and 34 feet wide. The stable floor is open and in it has been indicated hay racks for storing loose hay so that the cattle can have access to it all the time, and along each side is shown a manger or feed bunk. The barn has a system of ventilation and is equipped with an overhead carrier track loading from over the mangers to the feed mixing room and to the silos. This equipment will cut down the labor of handling the feed and enable one man to do at least as much work as two, if the carrier track was not included.

The silos are both 14 feet by 28 feet and are constructed of hollow vitrified tile. However, any other good silo building material can be used.

The barn is of frame construction and a concrete floor in the stable is indicated. However, if the owner feels that this expense is not justified, the floor could be made with two or three inches of cinders underneath the surface for drainage. A concrete floor is better as it is more easily kept clean.

What Can You Afford to Pay for a Home?

No young couple should attempt to buy a home until they are ready to pay down at least 25 per cent of the cost in cash, warns Willard K. Denton, president of the Metropolitan League of Savings and Loan associations, writing in Good Housekeeping Magazine.

Nor should a family attempt to buy a home whose cost is more than three times the sum of the family's annual income, advises Mr. Denton, whose organization members finance the majority of owner-built homes in New York area. Thus, if a man earns $5,000 a year, he is justified under normal circumstances in planning to buy and pay for a $15,000 home, including the cost of ground, in a period of ten to twelve years.

To illustrate the financial advantages of buying or building one's home as opposed to renting, the expert presents tables showing the expenditures of two families living on the same scale over a period of 12 years. The one renting a house at $100 a month and paying for fuel and water, pays out $15,984 over the 12-year period. The other, buying a house and lot valued at $10,000 with a $2,500 cash payment, can pay off mortgages with interest, taxes, repairs, fuel, water and insurance at a total payment of $18,546, thus owning its home at a cost of only $2,562 more than the first has paid in rent.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Will and Ernestine have their first quarrel. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account. Will's father dies suddenly.

He kissed her again, and they said goodby. The conversation had washed away a little of her resentment and made her feel better. She had a strong desire to cling to her own family, opposed by the resolution she had taken to harden her heart against them all. She thought of mamma and Lillian and Loring, come in Loring's coupe, standing quiet and in a little tight knot at the funeral. She had taken her own stand by Will and Mrs. Schluss, and Mr. and Mrs. Pryor.

The day after the funeral when Ernestine, with one of Mrs. Todd's aprons pinned over an old silk dress, was experimenting with a broom, Mr. Pastano came, and with him a huge old lady with slow black eyes and a face so round and kind that Ernestine's heart went out to her.

Mr. Pastano had brought some potted plants, which seemed fresh and beautiful after the scent of decay that had come with the funeral sets.

"These are for Willie's mamma," Madame Pastano said haltingly. "We come to make consolation call—to bring you friendship. As the plants grow, so grows the new soul, in Heaven."

Ernestine yielded to impulse, was enfolded on the soft and luxurious bosom of Madame Pastano and kissed her smooth cheek. How strange that all of her haughty resentment was gone, that she actually liked Ruby Pastano, with his slow thick voice and his mottled dark eyes.

"When Willie's mamma is better, you will come to visit us?" the old lady asked, and Ernestine called her husband Willie for days afterward. She promised to come.

Will was worried about money, and Ernestine tried to spend as little as possible. Mr. Todd's lodge insurance had paid for his funeral and left a small balance, which was soon eaten up by the heavy expenses of the mother's illness. Will asked for a raise and got five dollars. At length he was forced to borrow from Mr. Poole, although Ernestine told him she could get money from her father.

"Money!" he burst out passionately. "I don't want any Briceland money! We wanted something real from them. Money's all they have."

"You'll have to increase your earnings, Will."

"It takes time. And I intend to do it on my own job, not in your father's office. Your folks must understand that."

"Lillian says beggars can't choose," she said.

"This beggar chooses," he warned her.

* * * * * * * *

Will's mother began to mend a little, the third or fourth week, although she was desperately ill. One day she asked Ernestine how they were managing, and Ernestine confessed that they had had to borrow.

"The Troy street house is in my name," said Mrs. Todd. "Tell Will the deed and all are in his father's box—tell him to have some real estate office sell it. I'll sign the deed—it will be more than enough for my illness."

"But, mother, when you are better, you will need your money."

"I'll not be better. And I'd like to have the nurse all the time now."

So the house was sold, and the few thousand dollars they got for it certainly made a remarkable difference. The doctor brought them a resident nurse. Ernestine and Will agreed that they should spend Mrs. Todd's money only for the expense of her illness.

On the day that Lillian was married Mrs. Todd was able to sit up, and Will consented to go to the wedding. The church was filled with flowers—the bridesmaids made a rainbow—Ernestine had pleaded the excuse of mourning for taking no part in the ceremony. The pews were filled with old familiar faces—the ushers were young men Ernestine and Lillian had known always. Everything was very beautiful and formal, and Ernestine realized that mamma would have liked such a wedding for her.

She was glad afterward, that she had gone, for the weeks and months just passed had been so hard for her that the beauty of her own romance had become a little dimmed. But when she heard the marriage ceremony again, when she stood by Will and watched her sister marry Loring Hamilton, she remembered every word and every kiss of her own marriage day—its storms and turmoil, and she looked at Will, at his clear strong face, at his lean bony body in the shabby suit, at the big square hands resting on his knees, and the richness of her love for him welled up in her like a great tide that would and must carry everything before it.

CHAPTER VII

The Baby for Passenger

Lillian was in Europe. Mamma and papa and grandmother had gone to Langley lake for the month of August. Ernestine entered into a period of waiting, of passing through days of unreality and nights of patient endurance. Sometimes, waking after she had slept, she looked about the walls of the little room with a feeling of enormous surprise. Was this really she, Ernestine Briceland, in this dim room, with the curtains pinned back to admit any vagrant breeze, listening with her heart suddenly quick in the still night for her husband's footsteps?

Mr. Poole came often to visit them. Ernestine began to look for him for late Sunday breakfast. And the Pastanos were kindness itself. Their shining car, with the swart grinning chauffeur, was often at the door.

One day as Ernestine sat reading aloud, Will's mother laid a swollen, creased hand out over the book, and Ernestine, looking up at her, smiled quickly and kissed her.

"What is it, mother?"

They talked a little about the coming baby, and the plans Ernestine and Will had made.

"It is hard for your mother," said Mrs. Todd, with a smile. "I think perhaps it is as great a mistake to be stiffnecked about favors as it is to be greedy."

"Perhaps," admitted Ernestine. "It is hard to be exactly balanced. One must choose a direction in which to lean."

They fell into a friendly silence. After a little, Will's mother pressed Ernestine's hand.

"About Will—" she said and hesitated, and Ernestine's heart beat a little faster.

"Be patient with him. He hasn't found himself yet. But he will. You are more mature than Will. Children will increase the distance between your wisdom and his childishness. Just love him. He'll come home."

Ernestine knew no answer, but the words fell into her heart as though there were more significance to them than their stereotyped importance. For an hour or more they sat in silence, Ernestine dreaming of, Mrs. Todd remembering, Will!

Mrs. Todd lived just long enough to see her grandson and to kiss his poppy silk cheek. Will laid him in the hollow of her arms, but after a moment, with a word of entreaty, she asked him to take the baby away. He did so and, calling the nurse to his mother, who seemed to be swooning, he took the little one back to Ernestine.

And so the parlor of the little house was a bower for death. The gray coffin, the room filled with flowers, the worn-out shell of the woman Ernestine had understood so little.

Will accepted his mother's death with more philosophy than Ernestine had expected of him. The long waiting, the clinging, had been harder for him than the final separation. Besides, the new little life cuddled against Ernestine's heart was so much more than any loss—it was such an appropriate compensation.

The baby had finally established Ernestine among her new neighbors. Slowly but surely they had come to respect her, and now, with Peter in her arms, with her house clean and by her own efforts, she found Mrs. Schluss and Mrs. Pryor and others showing her real affection, which she appreciated and respected in full. Ernestine felt that all sacrifice was justified, and they entered into a new phase of life, in their own small home, Will at the oars, Ernestine at the helm, and the baby for passenger.

* * * * * * * *

It was harder to maintain the high level of contentment after Lillian returned from Europe and established herself in her new home on the road, out near Loyola. Will went across with Ernestine one noon shortly after their return. Mamma was there. Lillian was charming to Will, kissing him when she greeted Ernestine and the baby and flattering him skilfully.

After Will had left for the Sun the three women followed one another about the house, passed the baby back and forth between them, and talked, talked, talked, all at the same time, all listening and talking, all intent on catching up the old intimacy. It was charming. Ernestine could not remember when she had spent such a happy afternoon. There was no one like mamma—no one!

"I've got to go, because papa is bringing a new stone-merger man home with him for dinner. I am going to put rock powder in the coffee!" Mamma kissed them all goodby, with tears in her eyes.

Ernestine looked at Lillian and realized with a shock how changed she was in the six months since her marriage. She was satisfied with her lot and herself. There was almost danger—a challenge to fate in her complacency. She was gentle and kind to Ernestine, but subtly patronizing. It was especially noticeable since mamma had gone, for mamma kept Lillian in check.

But if Lillian was changed, Loring was startlingly so. He seemed to Ernestine bigger, handsomer. His blond strength was now set in a robust vitality which was very different from Will's volatile excitability. He kissed Ernestine affectionately, told her she looked well and admired the baby.

Mamma had trained a maid for Lillian, and she served in silent competence an excellent dinner, but the bright vivacity of the afternoon was gone. The interwoven volubility of the three women, their constant interruption of one another, their exclamations and cries of astonishment or sympathy, now disappeared, and Loring talked and the two girls listened.

He assumed Ernestine knew all about their European journey. Over there, he said, he had got a new slant on things. It was a good thing for a man to get away from his desk for a while. Now he had decided to forego the idea of the bench and go in for crime.

They laughed and he twinkled at them, but all the same, he insisted, he meant it.

"The judiciary qualities are excellent, but not remunerative—unless one becomes a corrupt judge, from which fate Heaven deliver me! The criminal lawyer is the important lawyer of today. He is the man with power in the courts. It will be a new kind of litigation for our office, but if I can get the business I can handle it. I went to see that Greek chap—Pastano—this afternoon, and recalled to him our acquaintanceship and our mutual friends. He remembered me perfectly and asked about you. He seems much interested in you and Will. He's the man to see, Tom Kelly told me, at the City hall. He has the say about all that Clark street colony. There's no end of money there and I'm going to dig some of it out for us."

Ernestine's face was flushed. She could not deny her anger.

"But it seems inconsistent to me," she said quickly, "for you to take advantage of his friendship for Will when you disapprove so of our knowing him. I don't understand."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Abundant Proof That Animals Change Color

Though many an animal in the Arctic regions will change its coat to white for the winter months, there are few animals who turn gray, as human beings do, from old age. Animals are, however, susceptible to fright and shock, and this may cause their hair or fur to change to white, just as in the case of human beings. Domestic pets are naturally more susceptible to this than animals who are used to fending for themselves in the wild. The black coat of a dog will sometimes turn practically white if the dog has a fit or falls victim to a very bad bout of distemper. Cats are not immune from shock. Horses' coats often seem to change quite appreciably in color, but this may be only a matter of clipping. A horse that has been turned out for some time and then brought in to be clipped will become a light fawn color after the operation, when before it he seemed a dark chestnut. You wouldn't know he was the same horse!

Licorice Water Has Value

For generations nonalcoholic drinks made from water infusions of licorice root or paste have been popular throughout southern Europe. This sounds much like the anemic concoction of our childhood days, "lickerish water," which was carried around in a bottle and shaken at frequent intervals to make it froth. This mixture of licorice root, water and sugar, so beloved of children, really has medicinal value, for the virtue of licorice as a tonic and blood purifier has been long recognized. In many factories of France, especially in the iron and steel mills, it is given to workers for drinking purposes instead of plain water.

Monte Blue

Always one of the most popular players in the movies since he started into the business, Monte Blue is doing equally as well in Vitaphone pictures. Among the latter he has been seen to advantage in "Conquest," "The Greyhound Limited," "From Headquarters," "No Defense," "Skin Deep," "Show of Shows," and "Isle of Escape." He was born in Indianapolis and has Indian blood in his veins.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

BEAUTY

"BEAUTY shines brighter in the heart of him who longs for it than in the eyes of him who sees it." It is to be regretted that many having eyes do not desire to see the beautiful, and many having ears fail to hear the most worthwhile things in life.

Suppose we were to erect an art museum, fill its corridors with statues of the finest workmanship, upon its walls hang paintings representing the work of the masters, place in all the nooks rare and beautiful works of art, but those who visited the museum failed to see its beauty; would we not desire to open the eyes of such persons, or speak words to them that would lead to the appreciation of beauty? Many persons are daily living in this beautiful temple of nature but with souls adamant in the presence of all the wonderful works of the Divine Artist.

L. A. Barrett.

The ability to appreciate beauty, whether in nature, in paintings, or in any of the fine arts depends upon one's inner self. Washington Irving wrote, "It is the divinity within that makes the divinity without." Socrates prayed, "I prayed thee, O God, that I may be beautiful within." If there is no sense of beauty within, it is impossible to see it without. One sees in the world without a reflection of what lies deepest in the world within.

In Italy every pupil in the grade schools is taught to appreciate music. The result is that even the ditch digger sings as he works. It is a common thing to hear him singing the music of the best operas. Our educational system is at fault if it does not provide sufficient time for the development of the appreciation of beauty whether in art or music. It is not necessary that we be able to analyze technically the beauty of a great cathedral, but there is a sense of beauty one can feel and appreciate because something in the cathedral responds to the outreachings of the soul for the highest and best.

The highest beauty of course is the beauty of character. "Ye are the temple of God." Beautiful as a great cathedral may be it is only secondary in importance to the beauty of a living temple in which character and service are expressed in daily ministry to human need.

Lesson for September 14

JEREMIAH, THE PROPHET OF INDIVIDUAL RELIGION

LESSON TEXT—Jer. 1:1-10; 14:7-22; 31:27-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—So then each one of us shall give account of himself to God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jeremiah, A Man Who Would Not Give Up.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jeremiah, A Man Who Would Not Give Up.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Being Obedient to God.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Responsibility of the Individual.

I. Jeremiah's Call (Jer. 1:1-10).

1. It was prenatal (vv. 4, 5).

Before Jeremiah was born God ordained him a prophet unto the nation.

2. His diffidence (v. 6).

This seems to have grown out of his youth and inexperience.

3. His hesitancy overcome (vv. 7, 8).

God graciously appeared to him and made clear that he should:

a. Go where sent.

b. Speak as commanded.

c. Be not afraid of their faces.

The servant of God is called upon to face strong enemies. Only the conviction of his divine commission will enable him to face the foe.

d. The divine presence assured.

It matters little as to the strength of the foe if the messenger is blest with the presence of God.

4. The divine message given (v. 9).

Not merely the thoughts, but the proper words to express the thoughts are put into the prophet's mouth.

5. The nature of his ministry (v. 10).

It was to be wider than that of prophesying. Six words are given as descriptive thereof. The first four are destructive in their implication—"root out," "pull down," "destroy," and "throw down"; two constructive—"build" and "plant."

II. Dialogue Between Jeremiah and God (Jer. 14:7-22).

The occasion was a most severe famine which had come upon the land, (vv. 1-6) as a result of which many were dying.

1. The prophet confesses the people's sins (vv 7-9).

He made no evasion of sin, but plead with God not to abandon his people. Abandonment would be interpreted by the heathen enemies as God's inability to help them. No merit could be pleaded for the people, so he plead for the sake of God's name that God would not leave them.

2. Too late for mercy (vv. 10-12).

(1) Jeremiah's prayer declared useless (vv. 10, 11).

Because of the gross wickedness of the people, God informs Jeremiah that punishment is inevitable.

(2) Religious services of no avail (v. 12).

The disloyal people of Israel hoped to turn aside God's wrath by engaging in the services of Jehovah. Such services are an abomination.

3. The doom of false prophets (vv 13-16).

Even though false prophets lulled the people to sleep, God held them responsible. God gives sufficient discernment to enable people to know their leaders. No one can plead ignorance in such cases.

4. Waiting upon God (vv. 17-22).

(1) Jeremiah wailing the sufferings of his people (vv. 17, 18).

(2) Jeremiah pleading for his people (vv. 19, 20).

(3) Pleading for forgiveness (v. 21).

He based his plea on covenant relation, not upon personal merit.

(4) Hope only in God (v. 22).

He acknowledges that the nation's only hope was in the living God.

III. The New Covenant (Jer. 31:27-34).

1. Promise to build and to plant instead of to break down and pluck up (vv. 27, 28).

2. Freedom from the power of heredity (vv. 29, 30).

No longer shall the children suffer for the sins of their parents. Those who are joined to Jesus Christ are under a new law of life superior to the law of heredity.

3. The law written within (vv. 31-33).

Through regeneration the heart has not only the desire but the power in the Holy Spirit to rise above and to be free from carnal impulses.

4. Teachers no longer needed (v. 34).

God shall speak directly to all from the least unto the greatest so that no longer shall the knowledge of God be dependent upon the human teacher.

5. Sins no more remembered (v. 34).

When God forgives, offenses are remembered no more.

The Decorator's Letter Box

. . Expert Advice on Home Decoration . .

This Hall and Stairway Arrangement Would Lead Nicely Into a Living Room Opening Off It.

Dear Beth:

You certainly are right when you say you are facing a problem with your stairway. It is hard to do something with a small stairway and yet not do too much. In a large house you do not have this difficulty for the stairway is usually of sufficient size to admit of rather extensive decoration.

I've been studying the diagram of the living room, hall and stairway which you drew to scale and sent me. And I've been thinking and here is the fruit of my thinking—may it be some help to you!

The window on the landing gives you a chance to repeat the draperies you are using in the living room. Since your hall, stairway and living room are so much a part of each other I believe, if I were you, I would make them all units of one big decoration scheme so that no one will be too much aware of where the hall stops and where the living room begins. This will also make the living room seem larger.

Since the landing is quite large, as landings go, you might put a tall clock there or a small chair or possibly both. Upholstery material on the chair might be of plain color, whatever you select for the foundation color of your living room decoration. Glass curtains of the same shade as the foundation color at the window will definitely tie up the stairway with the living room.

The hall carpet you will want to harmonize with the living room rug. You could also put several pictures on the stairway wall, bringing out the dominant color of the scheme as well as the tones used in the draperies and rugs. But, oh, Beth, place the pictures—don't just strew them about aimlessly.

In the hall you might have a table or a small chest of drawers, with a mirror hung above it and a chair on either side. For decoration you could have candlesticks and a bowl of flowers.

If you are going to work out some other arrangement in the hall, this little group might be used on the landing. I know you will introduce as much variety as possible into the groups of furniture and that you will make the arrangement, first of all, logical and useful, and as decorative as possible. It looks like a problem now, but it will work out, I'm sure. Don't let a little stairway "get you down."

Fondly, Fern Eture.

ESTABLISH CLASS IN HEALTH EDUCATION

County Superintendent of Schools, Carl F. Stallman, of Auburn, today announced that an extension class in "Health Education" will be conducted by the Indiana University extension divison this fall in Auburn. The course, which will be of an undergraduate nature, will meet for the first time September 13. Mr. Stallman is in charge of the class to be conducted in Auburn. Dr. Thurman B. Rice, associate professor of bacteriology and public health at the Indiana University school of medicine, will teach the course in Auburn.

The classes at Auburn are among many I. U. extension classes opening over the state this month according to Prof. R. E. Cavanaugh, director of the extension division. Members of the regular and extension faculty of the university will have charge of these clases and the credit for work done will be the same as that granted on the campus at Bloomington and Indianapolis, wherever students fulfill the entrance requirements. Most of the courses may be taken with or without university credit.

The enrollment in home study courses conducted by the extension division of the state university last year was 9,044, this number exceeding the combined number of students enrolled on the campus for residence work at Bloomington and Indianapolis.

Dr. Rice received the A. M. degree from Indiana University in 1917 and the M. D. degree in 1921. Before becoming associate professor of bacteriology at the I. U. medical school, he was assistant professor of hygiene and sanitary science in the school of medicine and for several years was head of the bacteriology laboratory of the Indiana state board of health. He is the author of two books, "The Conquest of Disease" and "Racial Hygiene."

EVERETT MULLETT RECOVERS AUTO

An automobile stolen from Everett Mullett, residing north of St. Joe in Wilmington township, near Mt. Pleasant Church, was recovered by Mr. Mullet and John P. Hoff of Auburn, at Marion, Ind., Thursday.

The police of Marion discovered the car after it had been abandoned when the gasoline supply became exhausted. Fifteen gallons were in the tank when it was taken from near the farm of Clare Hull in Wilmington township. Mr. Mullett left his car parked along the road while hunting.

The Marion police think the car was used in the robbery of the Twelve Mile bank the first part of last week. Four men carrying guns were seen getting out of the car after the gasoline supply was exhausted. The car was not damaged but a tire had blown out.

UNION MEETING NEXT SUNDAY EVENING

Dr. George Henninger, of Indianapolis will talk to St. Joe people next Sunday evening in a union meeting, representing the Anti-Saloon League of Indiana, upon the one vital question before the voters today, the 18th Amendment or Prohibition.

Mr. Henninger just closed a ten year pastorate at Indianapolis ,to engage in this work, and his address will be worthy of a liberal audience.

The meeting will be held in the M. P. Church at 7:30. There will be no other services in St. Joe Sunday evening.

GASOLINE TAX HIGHEST IN HISTORY DURING AUGUST

Indianapolis Sept. 6.—Gasoline tax collections in August in Indiana, according to Leland K. Fishback, gasoline tax collector.

The collections totaled $1,866,390.58, an increase of $262,144 over collections the same month last year, and an increase of $13,481.76 over the previous record of $1,852,908.82 established in September, 1929.

Sales of gasoline, upon which tax will be collected this month, reached 46,659,764 gallons, a gain over the 41,606,159 gallons sold the same month in 1929.

Mr. Fishback's report showed refunds of $115,461.51, a decrease of $15,480.76 over refunds for last August.

Gasoline tax collections for the first eight months of this year amounts to $11,575,295.45, a gain of $1,864,548.44 over the same period last year. Refunds for the same period this year were $701,365.09 as compared with $408,550.76 for the first eight months in 1929.

FAIR AT HICKSVILLE OPENED YESTERDAY

The annual Defiance county fair opened Wednesday for four days. The first day was given to arrangement of exhibits, the various department supervisors having studied other fairs in the state preparatory to arranging this one.

There is every indication that the exhibits this year will equal those of previous fairs. John Wirth is in charge of agriculture hall and Mrs. Goldie Belkaup is in charge of the art work to be shown in floral hall. The educational exhibits will be shown under the grand stand and will feature the work of Defiance county students.

Features of the program will be racing, the J. J. Evans circus, a dirigible and the Hart band.

ST. JOE GETS CONVENTION FEBRUARY 5, 6

At the executive meeting of the county Sunday School workers, Monday night, St. Joe was chosen as the convention town for 1931, the date as set by the State Council being February 5 and 6.

Among the other dates set was that of the Young Peoples Convention for November 1, 2, to be held at Garrett.

A A A "Play" INDIANA

This is the insignia we have used for many years.

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

EFFECTIVE DRIVER'S LICENSE LAW

Indianapolis, September 17. — Driver's license laws have been responsible for a material decrease in automobile fatalities according to statistics released today by Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State.

The figures were compiled in nine states which have enforced driver's license laws for an average of eight years. These were compared with states that do not have license laws.

"At least 22,000 lives have been saved in these nine states as a result of the enforcement of this law," the report said.

"There has been an average of 29 per cent fewer fatalities in these states compared with states without driver's license laws."

Indiana is one of the states with an effective driver's license law, Fifield pointed out, but it was not included in the report as its law has not yet been in effect one year. The states included in the compilation were, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland, California, Vermont and Arizona.

"The effectiveness of Indiana's driver's law has already been demonstrated in the short time it has been enforced," Fifield said, "accidents have decreased noticeably despite the increased traffic on Indiana highways and the increased number of vehicles in use this year."

MERRIWOLD FARM CAPTURES PREMIUMS

This section of DeKalb County figured quite prominently in the displays at Hicksville fair this year, as in the past, and Merriwold Farm, under the management of Geo. B. Hart, made quite a nice cleaning in premiums in the live stock department, when the judges made the awards in the Jersey cattle entries.

The awards were made as follows:

First and grand champion on senior yearling bull.

First and grand champion on aged cow.

First and second on aged dry cow.

First on senior yearling heifer.

First on junior yearling heifer.

Second on bull calf.

There were four exhibitors in the Jersey class. The 4-Club of Defiance County had 18 entries and Grayson Ruhl, of Fort Wayne, who is the oldest exhibitor in Northern Indiana, and one other besides Mr. Hart.

Monday, Mr. Hart took 3 head of his show cattle to Angola fair where he will have competition from five counties.

COUNTY W. C. T. U. TO HOLD MEETING

A county meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held at the Eckhart library in Auburn Friday at 2 o'clock, daylight saving time. Election of county officers will be held and reports of the year's work will be given. A good attendance of all members is desired and all interested are invited.

DAVID KRABILL DIES IN MICHIGAN

David Krabill, 75, brother of Henry and Jacob Krabill and Mrs. Lizzie Kosht, died at his home at Lake, Michigan, Friday evening at 5:30, of heart trouble.

Some twenty years ago he left this community for Michigan, locating at Lake, where he owned 120 acres of land, with 1½ miles of lake front.

Mrs. Don Hindman had been taking care of Mr. Krabill for the past two years.

The body was brought to St. Joe Saturday night by E. R. Kinsey and the funeral was held from the funeral home Monday afternoon, with Rev. Joe Ferguson, of Auburn, officiating.

CAMPAIGN OPENS FOLLOWING DINNER

The Republican party will open the campaign in DeKalb County on Thursday evening, September 25, at which time a Republican Good Will Dinner will be held in the dining room of the Commercial club building at Auburn. The dinner will be served at 6:30 o'clock standard time, and every Republican in the county is invited to attend. Tickes to the dinner are being sold by the various candidates on the county ticket, or they may be had by addressing the DeKalb County Republican Committee at Auburn, or at the banquet room on the night of the dinner. It is desired that all who expect to attend and desire tickets, send in their reservations as early as possible. Price of tickets, 50 cents. County Chairman, H. C. Springer and members of the County Committee, as well as the candidates, are putting forth every effort to make this opening meeting of the campaign one of enthusiastic interest. There will be a number of speakers and the candidates will be introduced to the voters at this meeting.

Hon. James M. Ogden, attorney general of Indiana, and Congressman David Hogg will be the principal speakers at the meeting. Both of these men are splendid speakers. They are public servants of importance, and have made records in their official positions that are creditable to themselves and their party. These men will discuss the issue of the campaign in a straight forward manner. Mr. Ogden is a candidate for re-election. He is a fine gentleman and a very able lawyer. Congressman Hogg is too well known in this county to need any introduction. His addresses are always full of interest and ring true.

It is expected that there will be about four hundred persons at the dinner. After the September 25th meeting the candidates on the county ticket expect o begin their campaign over the county, getting acquainted with the voters.

Those who attend the meeting next week will learn first hand, some of the achievements of the national and state administration. Co. Chairman Springer says that he cannot invite every Republican of the county personally, as there are too many of them, but through the press of the county he desires to invite every Republican to attend this meeting.

Lagrange County reports their onion crop averaging between 300 and 350 bushels per acre. Their peppermint yield is only fair, being 15 pounds and the price only $2 per pound, the lowest price in years.

MRS. JAMES L. STEWARD DIES IN WEST

The Estherville, Iowa, Enterprise of September 10, contained the following account of the death of Mrs. James L. Steward, a former St. Joe resident:

"Julia Virginia Steward was born at Sparta, Tenn., on October 10, 1856, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Holton. She grew to womanhood in the community of her birthplace and here on February 25, 1877, she became the bride of James L. Steward.

"They set up their home in southern Indiana where all of their children were born and where on February 15, 1910, Mr. Steward died.

"In 1916 Mrs. Steward came to Estherville and has made this community her home continuously since that date.

"Mrs. Steward was a life-long member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She died at 5 o'clock Monday morning September 8, 1930, and her funeral services were held in the church of her membership at 2:30 o'clock Wednesday afternoon.

"She is survived by her sons, William Steward, of Estherville, and Mulford Steward, of Vallejo, California (who served 24 years in the U. S. Navy) and her daughter, Mrs. Nellie Abel, of Ladysmith, Wis. Eight grandchildren and one great grandchild, also survive.

"Mrs. Steward was of a retiring nature, devoted to her family, and to the church and faithful in every relationship."

The body was shipped to Spencerville, accompanied by her son, Wm. H. Steward, and the funeral was held Friday, with burial in White City Cemetery, beside the grave of her husband.

For years the Steward's lived in St. Joe and Mr. Steward will be remembered as working for Wm. Curie as salesman. They raised their family here and lived, where Marie Goldsmith now lives, for a number of years.

NEWVILLE HAS NEW PASTOR

Rev. W. Roudebush was assigned the pastorate of the Newville U. B. Circuit last week at the U. B. Conference at Winona Lake. Rev. F. B. Parker was returned to Butler, Orville Hetzell was sent to Butler Circuit and Rev. Lewellen returns to Waterloo.

UNITY IN COMMUNITY

Who put unity in community? Too frequently unity is left out of community. Dwellers in a given place have no care for the common good, no sympathy for its misfortunes, no ready hand and heart for its maintnance and progress. Unity is not in that community whose citzens lose good sleep to get advantage of ther fellows, to profit by their losses, to rejoice in their sufferings. Unity is not in that community whose people follow mean short cuts to wealth and influence, and then use them both for personal ends.

Unity is in that community whose people think more of themselves and others than they do of property, and who do so without debasing property. Unity is in that community where social and religious interests are not subjected to material ends, and where material is esteemed as highly respectable. Unity is in that community where virtues, manly sports and honest toil fully engage men and women boys and girls, and where greed and hate and jealously are in the discard. Unity is in that community where "the way of the transgressor is hard," where all young life has a good chance to be good, and men and women are not spoiled in the making. Unity is in that community whose past may be opened without shame, whose history is worthwhile, and whose future is safeguarded by the character it is now producing in its growing citizenry.

Every community needs discoverers keen-sighted talent hunters. People who can see in dark places and in sharp angles, who have a "hunch" that in a certain place there is something worth while. Big eyed, silent-tongued folks who are "swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." We need good men and women who are proud of that which they discover: who go abroad frequently—who see repeatedly, at different stages of development, that which is growing in the community garden. Not lazy lokers, but patient observers who love to see! Brave men and women who have eyes to see and ears to hear and who have courage to dare the dangers for the community good.

Attend the community meeting at the high school gym Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Good music, orchestra and speaking. A pleasant time awaits you.

DEKALB COUNTY COUNCIL DATES

The following dates will be of interest to church and Sunday School officers and workers of DeKalb County. Please note.

County Convention in St. Joe, February 5-6.

P. T. A. COMMITTEES ARE NAMED

The following committees have been appointed to serve in the P. T. A. for the following year:

Program: Mrs. DeVore, Cleota Morr, Mrs. Grace Dilley, Merritt Maxwell.

Social: Mrs. Della Storer, Mrs. Anne Sechler, Mrs. Elza Fetters.

Membership: Derwood Ridgway, Earl Lyons, Lloyd Draggoo, Chas. Morr, Wm. Hamilton.

Hot Lunch: Mrs. Cora Curie, Mrs. Mayola Kinsey, Miss Ditmars.

The officers selected for the year are: President, Mrs. Belle Woodcox; vice president, Mrs. Pluma Hamilton; secretary, Harriett Wasson; treasurer, Ray Webb.

The hot lunch committee is meeting tonight at the Roy Koch home to prepare a barrel of dill pickles for the school, and on Tuesday the ladies will meet at the school house and can tomatoes. Anyone having tomatoes that they wish to donate to the school, may call the ladies.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP TAX RATE LOWER NEXT YEAR

At the recent annual meeting of the advisory board and trustee of Concord Township, for the making of the Township Tax Rate for 1931, the estimates of the expenditures in the six different funds, as proposed and advertised by the trustee, were acceptd by the board. A reduction of 33 cents per hundred dollars will make taxes for 1931 decidedly easier to pay.

This cut is accomplished by the possession of surplus in some of these funds, by tranfer tuition and from the fact that only two or three miles of road are yet to be graveled, other than the Staman road which is to be built by contract soon.

The total State, County and Township levy for Concord Township next year will be two dollars. This includes the levy for several bond roads, now being paid for.

NO ADVANCE IN CORPORATION TAX

At the meeting of the town council on Monday evening the corporation tax was not raised for 1931, the items being 10 cents for corporation, 23 cents for light, 30 cents for street and alley fund, head tax $1.50.

The graveling of the road from the school house to the cemetery was passed and will be completed this fall.

A number of small claims were allowed leaving the council a neat working balance until the December draw.

Active Money

A Necessity

The man who hoards his money helps to create business stagnation. People are so dependent upon each other that a lack of buying power in one class affects all and when a market is restricted it has a direct effect on the business prosperity of all.

Money in the bank is Active Money and it helps the individual and benefits the community. It helps to create conditions that bring an indirect, but nevertheless, a real benefit to all.

Put your money in our bank—we will make it Active Money.

Lesson for September 21

JONAH: THE NARROW NATIONALIST REBUKED

LESSON TEXT—Jonah 3:1-5,10; 4:1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Peter opened his mouth, and said, "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: but in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is acceptable to him.

PRIMARY TOPIC—God's Love for All the World.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God's Love for all the World.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Is True Patriotism?

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Patriotism and World Brotherhood.

In teaching this lesson it will be necessary to sweep into view the entire Book of Jonah.

I. Jonah's Call and Commission (Ch. 1:1, 2)..

Jonah, a Jew, was called to go and preach repentance to a Gentile city. (Gen. 12:1, 2). The story of Jonah graphically portrays the history of Israel as a nation. God separated Israel to be the channel through which his mercy and salvation are to be carried to all nations. They, like Jonah, have been recreant to duty. Because of this, God has caused them to be swallowed up by the nations which will one day spew them out upon dry ground—Palestine. After severe chastisement, they will discharge their obligation, and the nations through their ministry will repent and turn to God.

II. Jonah's Flight From Duty (1:3).

He turned his back upon God and attempted to flee from his presence. In the same way Israel has become an apostate people.

III. Jonah's Correction (1:4-2:10).

1. Overtaken by a storm (v. 4).

Trouble soon came upon the disobedient servant of God. So with the Jews, misfortune after misfortune have overtaken them because they turned from God. They are now tossed about by the surging of the nations.

2. Cast overboard (v. 15).

In their perplexity the sailors cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah. According to his own direction they cast him overboard. God had prepared a great fish which swallowed him.

3. Jonah's deliverance (Ch. 2).

Jonah in his affliction turned to God and prayed (James 5:13). God miraculously preserved him while in the belly of the fish, and he has miraculously preserved Israel in the heart of the nations. The fish could not digest Jonah, neither can the nations digest Israel. Jonah repented while in the fish. So Israel will repent as they go into the great tribulation. God made the fish to vomit out Jonah. So he will at the proper time cause the nations to cast out Israel.

IV. Jonah's Commission Renewed (Ch. 3).

His experience made him willing to do God's bidding.

1. His field (v. 3).

He was to go to Nineveh, a large city, the people of which were cruel. Israel's field is the Gentile nations.

2. His message (v. 4).

He was instructed to "preach the preaching" commanded by God. Forty days were given to the people in which to repent. God's supreme desire is that all should repent (II Peter 3:9). This message represents the heart of God in his dealing with sinners.

3. Repentance of the Ninevites (vv. 5-8).

(1) They believed God (v. 5).

They believed that God was speaking to them through Jonah about their sins, and was announcing impending judgment.

(2) They proclaimed a fast (vv. 5-8).

The king and people joined sincerely in this movement. They put on sackcloth, the sign of penitence.

(3) They reasoned that God would repent (v. 9).

The sending to them of a prophet encouraged them to believe that God would show mercy if they repented.

V. Jonah's Behavior (Jonah 4:1-11).

1. He repines at God's action (vv. 1-3).

He now makes known the real reason for his flight from duty. He knew that the gracious God would spare the people who repented. The treatment of the Israelites at the hand of the Ninevites was such that Jonah did not want God to forgive them. We have here a case of a preacher of repentance mortified when the people repent and are pardoned.

2. God reproves Jonah (vv. 4-11).

By means of the gourd God showed him his error. This closing scene affords a striking example of the patience and pity of God in contrast with the hard-heartedness of man.

Our Religion

Our religion is, indeed, a thing between God and our own soul; but it is also a thing between us and society, and to attempt to isolate and secrete it is to deprive it of a thousand influences and excitements essential to its perfection.—William L. Watkinson.

A Chapter a Day

A chapter a day may not altogether keep the tempter away, but it will put him to a great disadvantage.—Watchman Examiner.

There May be Poison in YOUR Bowels!

STEP out tomorrow morning with the fresh buoyancy and briskness that comes from a clean intestinal tract. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription for the bowels—will help you do this. This compound of fresh laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other pure ingredients will clean you out thoroughly—without griping, sickening or discomfort.

Poisons absorbed into the system form souring waste in the bowels, cause that dull, headachy, sluggish, bilious condition; coat the tongue; foul the breath; sap energy, strength and nerve-force. A little of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin will clear up trouble like that gently, harmlessly, in a hurry. The difference it will make in your feelings over night will prove its merit to you.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for forty-seven years. This long experience enabled him to make his prescription just what men, women, old people and children need to make their bowels help themselves. Its natural, mild, thorough action and its pleasant taste commend it to everyone. That's why "Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin," as it is called, is the most popular laxative drug stores sell.

Beggars Can Choose

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account. Will's father dies suddenly. Lillian and Loring are married. Will's mother dies immediately after the birth of Ernestine's baby.

"What has friendship got to do with business?" Loring asked, and his own face flushed with resentment. "I tell you I've got to make new contacts if we're to bring a different kind of clientele into the office. Besides, I didn't disapprove of Will knowing him. It was only his taking you to that dive. Do you think I would mix Lillian up with that crowd?"

"I can't see any grand difference," retorted Ernestine. "Lillian isn't a baby. She's your wife, anyhow. Besides, the Pastanos are all right—all of them. I know them well, and the two girls are as fine as any I have met. There's not a month passes that we don't visit them, or they don't call. Mr. Pastano admires Will. He once hurt my feelings, and he's been making it up ever since. We've been friends without asking about his political activities or how he makes his money."

"It's all very well for you to take an attitude with me," declared Loring, "but I've come home with the determination to make money—and a lot of it. Chicago is rich. I may as well take some of it as others. And if an acquaintance with a powerful man like Pastano falls to my luck, I'll pursue it. Will would want me to."

"Will would," admitted Ernestine, but her looks were cold. "You've changed, Loring. You used not be so—ambitious."

"I've acquired a new sense of values," he admitted. "Of course I'm not saying at all that a man should stick at nothing to make money. That's a mistake, and no good anyhow. But I've been around—I saw one thing everywhere. It is the passion for the possession of money—as much as a man can lay hands on."

"Don't be silly, Loring," said his wife mildly. "Look how happy Ernestine is, and she's as broke as broke."

"I am happy," declared Ernestine.

"Yes," admitted Loring, "but that is because your capacity for happiness is great. Your pleasure in your marriage and your child wouldn't be spoiled at all by more comforts."

"I don't want anything changed."

"Not now—not at this moment. But if you'll be honest with yourself, you'll find that one reason for your contentment is your great expectations for the future. You feel that your condition is only temporary. Come now, Ernestine—isn't that so? You are confident that there will be money for you and Will, when Peter grows older, and Will's work develops into more importance. Being poor can be a game if it's only an interlude. But if you had to look forward to nothing else—"

The truth of his logic hurt Ernestine unbearably.

"I don't care whether Will ever makes money or not," she declared passionately, almost in tears.

"You think you don't," said Loring inexorably. "But Will wouldn't say that. Every man wants money—every woman wants her man to have it. It's a symbol of power. If Will doesn't get it he'll feel that he's failed your confidence in him."

Ernestine found herself trembling.

Lillian picked the baby up and dandled him and spoke quietly to Loring. "You are disturbing Ernestine and it isn't a bit nice of you. All this shouting makes me wonder if you doubt your own ability."

She took the baby and put him in his mother's arms.

Loring apologized.

"It's a bad habit I have—arranging my own thought in an argument. It dosn't mean a thing—sophistry pure and simple. I know you are sincere, Ernestine. Don't pay any attention to me."

The talk fell into safer lines, but Ernestine was no longer happy. Loring got out his car, and, with Lillian and Ernestine in the back seat with the sleeping baby, he drove to her home. They left her now as they had left her in Erie street, disrupted, unhappy and at odds with Will.

She was awake when Will came in, and she fixed a light supper for him and told him all that Loring had said, with some small editing.

"He's a capable lawyer, I suppose," Will said. "And if Ruby wants to give him work to do, and Loring wants to do it, what's the difference? He's not the only lawyer that would like to get his fingers into Pastano's pie. But anyhow, I've got something to tell you. Underwood's going to New York, and Tucker's to be head of the art room."

Ernestine felt a cruel shock of disappointment. She knew Will had expected this—had hoped for the job himself.

"But Tucker's so young," she protested.

"It isn't that—he's capable. I'm glad he got it," said Will.

Ernestine thought of what this job might have meant. The pay was nearly double. They could have rented this house and, with the rent and the increase, moved into an apartment in Ravenswood.

"Oh," she cried to Will, aghast at her own mental processes. "It's so hard not to consider money. Not to want it! Not to care! I don't want to be greedy and grabby. I don't want to crave success. But I am—I do. Isn't it horrible?"

He looked at her with some humor.

"You aren't greedy and grabby, sweetheart. And as for success, there's a legitimate way to want that—not for the money but for the work. I don't think this has any effect on my future. It's really an executive position, and I'm a solitary worker. I'd be no good at bossing. It's an editorial job, and Tommy has an editorial slant on things. He's fitted for it."

A few days later he came home with a shining face.

"I'm to be Poole's assistant," he said. "Do you realize what this means to me? It's worth ten thousand in cash—to work under him. If a person went to him and offered a hundred dollars a lesson, he wouldn't teach him to draw, but would curse him out of the office. And he'll teach me, and I'll be paid for it. It means no more night work. Ten till six. I do detail in the art room until Mr. Poole comes in and then I work for him all afternoon. He does a copy for a New York syndicate every day, and there's always work to plan ahead and sketches to lay out. He's been boozy a lot lately, and I think McDermott feels that if he has somebody to help him he'll keep ahead and not run so close to publication. Wiston didn't want to send me in there—but Poole insisted on me." He sighed with happiness and added, as an afterthought, "It means another five-dollar raise—maybe more later."

He was so thrilled and excited that Ernestine commanded her heart to yield its disappointment over Tommy's job. But she could not see any real future for Will in losing himself in the great man's shadow.

* * * * * * *

"I don't want mamma to know," Ernestine said. "I'm afraid she won't go to Europe. Besides, you know what a fuss there'll be."

"Then don't tell her," said Will in his simplicity. "It isn't really any one else's business, is it?"

Ernestine sighed. "You don't know how they'll take it. Of course it's their business—they'll have enough to say. And I feel embarrassed with mamma. She'll wonder why I didn't tell her."

Will kissed her cheerfully and went away to his beloved job. He was radiantly happy and his happiness seemed to affect her inversely. Every day was an adventure to him.

"Tommy gives me plenty to do," he admitted one evening. "Tommy's a good boss. He keeps us all humping, and gives every fellow the kind of job he can do best. But it's the work for Mr. Poole that makes up for any chores. Ernestine, I tell you he is a great man. He comes in there—sometimes he doesn't know whether he's eaten or not, but as soon as he gets in that little office, which fits around him like a glove about a hand, he begins to function—the way his mind works is always a surprise. What's the matter, honey?—you're not eating."

Ernestine leaned on her hand and her eyes filled with tears.

"I hate to have mamma go away now," she said.

Will's methods were infantile.

"Then tell her. You know she'd stay in a minute."

"Go on talking about the office, please—so I can think."

Will laughed. He took a half-dollar from his pocket and spun it on the kitchen tablecloth.

"I won me fifty cents, shooting craps at the office," he said. "We can go to the movies."

Ernestine plucked the fifty-cent piece from his fingers, and he made a pretense at regaining it.

"Now my thinking process is entirely disrupted," she told him. "I thought Mr. Wiston was going to fire the next person he caught shooting craps in office hours."

"I don't believe he'll do it," said Will comfortably, and Ernestine did not believe it either. The men were always matching pennies or rolling dice or making up pools.

Will pushed back his chair, came around and cupped Ernestine's face in his hands, kissed her cheeks and lips and pressed her eyelashes down hard with his caresses.

"Don't be blue, honey—don't worry," he bade her cheerfully. "You're the prettiest, sweetest woman in the world. It's natural for us to have a family. You're not going to be unhappy about the new baby, are you, Ernestine? It's the way of love."

"I know," she said. She drew him down and kissed him. But her face was strangely sad. "Nothing can make me unhappy, Will, as long as we love each other. I get hurt because we go for weeks without seeing my family—I seem to be drifting away from them. Mamma and Lillian are always so busy, and papa is in New York. And I get proud and avoid them on my part. But as long as we have our love for each other—this oneness—it's the best thing in life—what can we lack?"

He picked her up, sat down in his mother's little rocker, cradled her, sang silly songs in her ear and teased her. But after a little while he was talking about the office again, and she was resting against him, entirely inattentive, her thought on her own affairs.

CHAPTER VIII

Will and Loring

Loring succeeded in securing for Ruby Pastano the deed and title to the old LeQuinne place in the restricted colony at Langley lake. Ernestine was filled with indignation that he should do such a thing.

"Mamma won't like it at all," she told Lillian. "LeQuinne's land runs right down to ours with nothing but Stone creek between the two places. You know how it will be with the Greeks there. The house will simply be bursting with visitors all summer. They will have speed boats, and there will be children in the water from morning till night."

"But I thought you liked them," protested Lillian. "You are friends of theirs. Mrs. Pastano is so happy about it, I thought you would be delighted, and so did Lorrie. In fact he counted on your help in calming mamma if she objected."

Ernestine shook her head.

"He can do his own calming. It's plain to me that Loring's ideas differ from ours. Will and Ruby Pastano are real friends, yet Will would never have thought of selling that place to Ruby. He fits into his own place, in Chicago, but he won't fit in there. The people—the Hendersons and the Mayces and the O'Tooles won't be kind to them. They'll not belong to the country club, nor be in the tournaments. I suppose it's not my place to worry about it, only I am thinking of mamma."

"Mamma won't go there after this summer, or next. Didn't you know, darling, that this stone-merger thing is going to make papa rich? You know, papa owns altogether nearly seven quarries in Indiana where some of the best limestone is cut, and then he has proxies for the Langley quarries. For the last year he and Lorrie have been buying options and small interests in other quarries. Now they have made a merger. The quarries are worth at their present rating five or six million dollars altogether, but the merger will be worth twenty-five million. Don't you see what it means?"

Ernestine stared at her. "Papa—worth millions?"

Lillian nodded with complacent pride. "Yes, and Loring is getting some of the stock. He is to be counsel for the merger, and he has a holding. You don't need to worry about mamma at Langley lake. I'm going down to open Lake Haven next week. Can't you come with me, instead of waiting for Will's vacation?"

"I don't like to leave Will alone in Chicago, in the heat—" said Ernestine.

"But I am leaving Loring. Are you well, Ernestine?"

"My feet bother me," Ernestine admitted. "I asked Doctor Grey about it, but he didn't say much. He's put me on a diet. I'll be all right."

"I think you ought to stay at Langley lake all summer."

Takes Much Water to Supply World's Cities

Have you any idea how much water the average city dweller uses daily? Take London, with its gigantic population. Here the authorities have to supply an area of 558 square miles, and give the 7,000,000 people the water they need. Would you have imagined that each of these demands no less than 36 gallons every day? Yes, that is only the average supply per head per day. In the dry, hot weather the amount required for each person becomes 40 gallons, or more than a barrel of water per day for each man, woman, and child. London is not the thirstiest town. Scotland consumes more water than England. In Glasgow and Edinburgh, for instance, the average consumption per head is not 36, but 37 gallons; and to Helensburgh, in Dumbartonshire, belongs the distinction of being the most thirsty town in the whole of the British isles. Here they take 81.7 gallons per head. One reason given for Scotland's large consumption is that the water supply is much better than in England.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

FROM JERUSALEM TO JERICO

IN THE Biblical story of the Good Samaritan there is described an incident which occurred on one of the most dangerous roads known to the ancient world. Bandits lived among the hills. Their only source of livelihood was robbing the tourist. On this road a man journeying from Jerusalem to Jerico fell among thieves who shamefully abused him, robbing him of all his possessions and then left him half dead. In the story there is also related the visits of three men to the scene of the robbery. The first was a Levite whose profession would correspond to the lawyer of our own day. He offered no assistance but "passed by on the other side." A strange philosophy of life must have impelled him to take such an attitude toward the victim of the robbery. It was like this: what that poor beggar has belongs to him; I will not take it because I do not need it; let him keep it. A philosophy not uncommon in our own age which might be characterized in the words: "every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost"; a sort of isolation in which every man assumes responsibility only for himself. This interpretation of life values has always led to ruin.

L. A. Barrett.

Another man came down that same road and he, too, "passed by on the other side." He looked at the man who had fallen by the wayside, but offered no assistance. He is called the Priest in the story. He, too, had a philosophy of life which was something like this: what I possess belongs to me; I am not compelled to share it with another—an attitude not altogether uncommon today. If my neighbor's house is burning I may not be compelled to inform him so far as the legal demands are concerned; but, a higher law, the moral imperative, certainly commands me not only to netify him but help him put out the fire. The law of the land may not compel me to offer assistance to the one injured in an automobile accident which I may happen to witness, but the moral law certainly urges me to do so. Only by rendering obedience to the demands of the higher moral imperatives can we possess peace of conscience and happiness.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

WHY IT IS CALLED "PNEUMONIA"

HERE is a word which, if we were called upon unexpectedly to spell it might embarass some of us, yet with whose meaning many people perhaps have been unfortunately too familiar.

"Pneumonia" is a good example of a word which, like many other medical terms which are now common currency, harks back for its origin to the Greek of classic antiquity.

Technically speaking, pneumonia is the affection or sickness which results from an inflammation of the lung. And it is so-called after the Greek "pneumo," which means "lung."

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

What Occurred on Board the Marie Celeste.

WHEN, on November 7, 1873, the Yankee bark Marie Celeste sailed from New York for Genoa, she carried a cargo of alcohol in casks and was manned by an able crew commanded by Captain B. S. Briggs, of Marion, Mass. Mrs. Briggs and the captain's two-year-old baby were also on board, as Captain Briggs thought that the fall would be an excellent time for them to cross the Atlantic and get at least a glimpse of Italy.

All the ships in the course which the Marie Celeste undoubtedly took reported fair weather during the entire month of November but, on December 4, the bark was sighted by the British schooner Dei Gratia not far from Gibraltar. Puzzled by the manner in which the American boat seemed to be sailing—tacking here and there in an aimless desultory fashion as if no one held her wheel, Captain Boyce of the Dei Gratia hailed her, but received no reply. Then, fearing that her crew had been stricken with scurvy or one of the other maladies to which sailors are subject, Captain Boyce launched a small boat and, without the slightest difficulty, boarded the American bark only to find the strangest scene that has ever been reported on the sea!

The Marie Celeste had been abandoned by every living soul, yet there was not a lifeboat missing nor the slightest trace of a reason for the sudden disappearance of the captain, his wife and the crew!

That everyone had been aboard only a few hours before was apparent from the fact that the fire was still lighted in the galley. An abundance of food and water disposed of the theory that these on board had been driven insane by starvation and had leaped overboard. The sailors' chest, filled with their clothing and containing a considerable amount money, stood in the forcastle. A medicine bottle, standing upright on the table in the captain's cabin, was mute evidence that the bark had not encountered heavy weather, while, upon another table, was Mrs. Briggs' sewing and the impression of the baby's head was still plainly to be seen on the pillow in the crib.

Captain Boyce's first action, upon finding this strange scene of silent desolation, was to examine the ship's log. The entries therein covered the entire voyage of the vessel from the time she had left New York until the day that she was discovered, helpless and unmanned. Nowhere in the log was there the slightest indication of any threatened disaster—no mention of a storm or the approach of other craft. The entry for the previous day was brief but complete, while the space for December 4, the day on which the Marie Celeste was boarded by the men from the Dei Gratia contained the only possible clew to the whole affair—a clew which only added to the mystery which surrounded the unfortunate ship. Here, in Captain Briggs' handwriting, appeared the four words:

"Fanny, my dear wife—"

That was all. The final letter of the word "wife" ended in a sharp scratch of the pen, as if the captain had been interrupted while making his entry. But what had he been going to write? Why had words of this kind appeared in the log which was otherwise devoted to the briefest of statements concerning the weather and the progress of the bark?

One theory, advanced at the time, was that the casks of alcohol in the hold had leaked and that the fumes had rendered everyone on board the ship insane, causing them to jump into the sea. But Captain Boyce's report, filed after his delivery of the bark in Gibraltar, definitely stated that the cargo had been intact.

Spirit of Brotherhood in the Father's House

Few American tourists fail to pay a visit to the city of Rheims and its gorgeous cathedral, now happily restored through the generosity of Mr. John D. Rockefeller. What will please that American donor of broad and even catholic mind, we feel, is to know that the cathedral has become the objective of many German pilgrimages and that the people of Rheims are treating the thousands of German fathers and mothers who come to pay a visit to the immense military cemeteries nearby, with dignity and sympathy. Walking through the mystic twilight of the interior of the immense edifice recently, while the organist was practicing up for some coming event, we noticed on a confessional a small card. On it were printed but three words, but those three words in that environment held a world of significance, far more in fact than their literal meaning. The card read: Man Spricht Deutsch (German spoken). As we strolled through the nave and transept inspecting the restored portions and windows, accompanied by our guide, the gracious Pere Dumesnil, minor canon attached to the cathedral staff, we remarked to him: "Here is a Catholic church in France, restored by the liberality of an American Baptist, with an inscription in German."

. . . "Yes," interrupted Pere Dumesnil, "in my Father's house are many mansions!"—Pierre Van Paassen, in the Atlanta Constitution.

Gull Crosses Atlantic

A black-headed gull from Europe has been found among the native gulls of Newburyport, near Boston. It is the first of its species ever recorded in North America, and the only explanation for its appearance there is that it must have flown across the Atlantic. The suggestion has been advanced that the gull was driven out to sea by a gale, and then, being unable to return to land, flew right across the ocean. It has now been captured and placed on exhibition at the Museum of Natural History in Boston.

A grammar school student was set a question in an examination paper—"If 20 men reap a field in eight hours, how long will it take 15 men to reap the same field?" The student thought long and carefully before writing the answer, and when he handed in his paper, this is what the examiner read: "The field having been reaped by the 20 men could not be reaped by the 15!"—Toronto Globe.

Some people actually obey the admonition of our friend Longfellow, where he said, "Act, act in the living presence." They act—and how?

Children that were supposed to be unwelcome guests in the world, have now become the pride of the family. All things are welcome that can't be prevented, such as the weather, taxes, etc.

Contractors on paving work who get their jobs on a wage basis of fifty cents an hour and then take advantage of labor's needs and pay twenty, violate all the rules of fair dealing with the state, county and city as well as good sense. That is the way to discourage and put an end to road building—and also to contracts.

"My fellow citizens," said our Jim as he looked Pat Harrison straight in the eye, "it is an old story, but let us remember that this law—(the Hawley-Smoot)—was enacted for the benefit of our people, our own country, our own laborers, our own manufacturers, our own farmers, and not for the benefit of the citizens of any other country on earth. It is the American policy for which we stand and which has brought our country to its present high position among the nations of the world."

The Ford plant has restored 100,000 men and women to the payroll. The General Motors and other factories have done the same for the same number. The Clintonian of Clinton relates that "the golf equipment people are prospering as never before. A leading firm says that its sales are over fifteen per cent ahead of last year's, and the best in twenty years experience. It seems as if everybody, man, woman and child, wants golf clubs, bags and balls." And the Fort Wayne municipal course takes in $20,000 a year in playing fees. Times might be worse.

Who buries his friends alive
He who casts away, carelessly and maliciously, those friends who have worked for the success of his career, who have contributed to the prestige and good name of his business. Paying respects to friends deceased, contributing flowers on his bier, paying homage to his history by word of mouth, are all honor attributes to pay to departed friends, but to bite the living hand that feeds you, chill the warmth of a living friendship, is the sole of petrified ignorance and dense stupidity. The craze to be the recognized spokesman in community enterprises, the jealousy that would rob a friend of his reputation, and the ache that comes to the head by seeing others prosper are some of the things that make people bury their friends alive.

UPSTATE FARMERS ANSWER CALL OF FARM BUREAU TO AID DROUGHT SUFFERERS

"Love thy neighbor" is being exemplified by farmers in the more favored sections of Indiana, the north central part, where sufficient moisture provided a good crop this season in plans to save an additional amount of seed that downstate farmers in the drought area may be supplied next spring.

The Indiana Farm Bureau is acting as a medium through which upstate farmers may donate one or more bushels of seed corn to the distressed farmers downstate. A recent call to the more fortunate farmers to preserve an additional amount of seed this year to take care of the downstate growers next spring has met with a liberal sanction.

It is estimated there are 10,000 farmers in southern Indiana who will not have corn fit or sufficient for seed. North central Indiana will have a fair to good corn crop. Officials of the state farm bureau believe that any farmer with a fair crop will be willing to give one or more bushels to his unfortunate brother. In fact, a recent appeal to this affect is bringing results and local organizations are known to be active in making provisions to supply seed corn to southern farmers. Various upstate farmers have stated that they are not only willing to donate one bushel but several bushels to the drought sufferers.

This corn will be collected by townships and counties, after it is thoroughly dried. It will then be labeled with specially prepared cards showing the kind of corn and the name, address, township and county of the donor. It will then be forwarded to the state office where it will be distributed through the county farm bureaus in the drought affected counties of the south. There the top end of the label card will be filled out with the name, address and county of the farmer receiving the corn. This card will be returned to the farmer donating the corn. In this way each farmer giving corn will know to whom it is given and each farmer receiving corn will know to whom he owes thanks.

The Indiana Farm Bureau is requesting farmers to notify their township or county officers regarding the amount they wish to donate. The message reads, "Do it now, or as soon as possible. You don't know when you may be in the same boots as those honest hard-working farmers to the south."

COMMUNITY MEETING SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 21

Through the action of a number of citizens, a meeting has been called for Sunday afternoon, September 21, at the high school gym, for the purpose of interesting the community in general in a program of helpfulness.

The entire community is asked to attend and hear the address for such an occasion, and help decide what our community might do to better its condition.

The election of officers for the coming year was then held. Mrs. Dora Wilder was elected president; Mrs. Grace Laub, vice president; Mrs. Eva Wilmot, secretary; Mrs. Gaylon Tustison, assistant, and Mrs. Rally Markle, treasurer. The program committe chosen was Lizzie Hart, Dora Wilder and Mary Guthrie.

Plans were also made for the annual family night to be held in October. The committee program is Clyde Hart, Claud Laub and Ora Wilmot.

Refreshments were then served by the hostess and committee.

Fish and Game Club Information

THE SUN SPOTS CAUSE LESS DUCKS, BABIES, WEDDINGS, STATIC

There will be a shortage of ducks, matrimony, babies and radio static this fall on account of the decreasing number of sun spots, according to scientfic prediction made at the convention of the International Association of Game, Fish and Conservation commissioners at Toronto, Canada, last week. The duck shortage of less than 50 per cent of the usual crop is already proven by survey. The shortage of matrimony, babies and radio static is already indicated by tabulation, based principally on the rising commodity prices.

Simplified, the scientists declare that the minimum number of sun spots produce less heat, less ultra-violet rays, less cloudiness, less ionization of atmosphere, therefore less rain and less rain produces drought, which, in turn produces higher commodity prices. These, because of the higher cost of living operate to reduce the number of marriages and babies. The less number of atmospheric disturbances produce less static.

Dr. Ralph DeLury, of the Dominion of Canada Observatory at Ottowa, and others, figured out this theory and facts are now beginning to prove it.

"The duck crop is definitely known to be less than 50 per cent of the usual yearly crop," Carlos Avery, president of the American Game Protective Association said. "This is directly tracable to the sun spots and consequent drought."

Nash Buckingham, executive secretary of the American Wild Fowlers, Washington, D. C., made a plea at the convention to conserve the ducks during the shooting season to open shortly.

"Because of the drought," Mr. Buckingham said, "the ducks will be concentrated in small areas, the big lakes, the smaller lakes and ponds having dried up. There will be a duck food shortage also.

"Ducks are being driven out of their brooding grounds now by shortage of food supply; they are coming South already. The lack of food on the way will drive them to the wintering grounds that much sooner. There is none too much food there and these grounds will be overtaxed."

Mr. Avery, Mr. Buckingham and the International Association urged that the sportsmen stay well within the bag limits and, also resort to adequate winter feeding of the migratory birds.

"If there ever was a time that the sportsman should help the ducks it is now. All should take as few as needed, and all should contribute in his way to winter feeding of the visitors," Mr. Buckingham said, "or else there will not be sufficient brood stock left in the spring."

The drought threat will continue until 1933, according to the scientists, because of the diminishing number of sun spots. In that year the sun spots will begin to increase and bring about the opposite conditions of those now obtaining. There will be more ducks, matrimony, babies and radio static, induced by uniform rainfall, caused by increasng sun spots.

Drought conditions such as just experienced occur in cycles, according to the scientists. There are records of them for hundreds of years. They occur every 11 years, then major cycles of drought every 60 years and also a "grand" major cycle every 260 years, according to reading the tree rings for 3000 years back. Readings of the tree rings are also verified by earthquakes, auroral frequency, migration of birds, commodity prices, and records of rainfall, tables, charts and graphs of the scientist sshow.

OHIO GOVERNOR TO DEDICATE NEW BRIDGE

Ohio's newest and perhaps most beautiful bridge will be dedicated at Napoleon, Ohio, Thursday, September 18, with Governor Myers Y. Cooper as principal speaker. This is a 750-foot $300,000 concrete bridge over the historic and scenic Maumee river—a stately but unassuming "paleface"structure that has driven its predecessor downstream after 50 years of service with the same relentless efficiency that the valley's great "paleface" warrior, the famous "Mad Anthony" Wayne, used a century earlier in driving the Indians down the same river to end the savage western wars and pillages of the Revolution.

The new bridge is located on the U. S. Highway No. 24, which runs from Pontiac, Mich., via Detroit, Toledo, Napoleon, Fort Wayne, Peoria and Quincy, to Kansas City, Mo., and which also serves Ohio State Highways Nos. 33 and 34. It is a reinforced concrete arch bridge with seven 95-foot clear spans, a 36-foot roadway, and two five-foot sidewalks. The project involved 18,000 cubic yards of excavation. Materials required included 460,000 pounds of structural steel, 67,000 sacks of Universal cement, and 314 carloads of solidified slag to fill the aquandrels. A distinctive feature is the word "Napoleon" spelled with brick in the pavement of the brick for the benefit of passing aviators.

ON REARING CHILDREN from CRIB TO COLLEGE

Compiled by the Editors of THE PARENTS' MAGAZINE

No thoughtful person can conceive of the education of the child as a thing apart from his home life. The continuing influence of the home with its strong emotional ties sets the pattern of his life to a large extent.

Do you slap your child to make him keep away from the vacuum cleaner? Or do you teach him how to run it?

Do you scold your child for taking dishes from the table? Or do you show him how to handle dishes without breaking them?

Do you punish children for being slow and untidy? Or do you practice with them dressing and toilet duties, under a time limit?

Do you punish children for getting their clothes dirty when playing? Or do you realize that play is more important for them than keeping clean?

Very few parents in this day and age refuse to allow either their sons or daughters to learn to drive an automobile. Yet they should have a proper interest in seeing to it that their children keep their car-driving proclivities within certain sane and reasonable limits.

It is quite legitimate for a mother to feel that she needs to get away from her children occasionally. They also are all the better for being away from her. After a short separation from each other, the mother and children find new interest and new tolerance for each other. In an increasing number of communities a nursery school or co-operative nursery offers an opportunity for this sort of personal holiday.

The old disciplinary way of bringing up children was never good, because it did not take into account the nature of boys and girls. Yesterday, boys believed in their "rights" as much as they do today, but they had to use their privileges of "self-determination" when out of sight of stern parents. Now conditions have changed.

There is a popular belief that if the hair is shampooed frequently the natural oil in the ducts around the hair follicles will dry and the hair fall out. This objection may be met, however, by applying liquid vaseline or hot oil the night before a shampoo. It should be rubbed well into the scalp and allowed to dry in so that some of it remains to supplement the natural oil even after washing.

In a home where there is a baby it is a problem to know where to hang the tiny garments washed daily. A solution is offered by a clothes-tree which furnishes space equal to forty feet of clothesline even while it takes only three feet of floor space. When closed it may be put out of the way in a corner.

SELECTING HEIFER CALVES FOR FUTURE DAIRY PRODUCTION

It has taken many hours to build some of these substantial buildings of every community. Did you ever realize how quickly you can destroy them in a very few seconds. The recent dairy situation may be dynamite to a great many dairy herds unless the dairyman himself has full faith in his industry.

It takes about three years to build a dairy cow and bring her into production. The present dairy situation can be materially changed in a period of three years and the "in-and-outer" may find himself scrambling for good dairy stock at that time. The wise dairyman is still continuing to save his good heifer calves.

Many folks may be asking themselves whether there is really going to be a demand for these calves. We know that the present situation will have a tendency to eliminate the inefficient cow. As people are learning the value of milk and its products for human food, the demand for dairy products should continue to increase.

There are still thousands of our boys and girls in every city in the United States that are not obtaining the amount of dairy products which they should have. With more educational work to carry the message of the value of dairy production for human food, it should soon create a demand for replacing the "boarder" cows that will be eliminated and by the time that the present calves are grown to production age they will undoubtedly find plenty of demand.

Even during the rather low prices in dairy marketing, the real efficient cow in the herd has still made a little profit for the feeder. There will always be a demand for this efficient type of cow and it would be absolutely wrong to market the heifer calves from this type of cow. We are quite confident that there will be a real demand for them by the time they are grown and ready for production.

Furthermore, the recent dairy situation should arouse and inspire all dairy extension agencies toward exerting greater efforts to place before the public more effectively the true value of their products from a nutrition standpoint.

With the proper concentration of effors and the large consuming centers, the consumption of dairy products can still be improved materially over present conditions.

Boys Save Pennies

A Dayton (Ohio) automobile dealer was confronted by two lads, sixteen and nine, respectively, lugging two lard pails full of copper cents. They demanded in exchange a sedan. The boys, Clarence and George Keene, got their car, as the money they lugged around represented the price of the sedan. The boys had newspaper routes and had saved every one of the 40,000 cents with which the car was bought.

Day of Sacred Memories

Memorial day has a sacred and tender significance to many of us who have dear ones laid away in the city of the dead. They have slipped away from us, and we see their faces no more, but our hearts still hold them in loving remembrance. So we carry our beautiful floral tribute to them, and as we lay our flowers above their resting place, we love to think that they know and understand the love which prompts us to bring our tribute of affection to them on each recurring Memorial anniversary.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of these My brethren, even these least, ye did it unto Me.—Matthew 25:40.

And behold, a certain lawyer stood up and made trial of Him, saying, Teacher, what shall I do to inherit eternal life? And He said unto him, What is written in the law? How readest thou? And he answering said, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself. And He said unto him, Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live.—Luke 10:25-28.

The life is more than food, and the body than the raiment.—Luke 12:23.

Comment: To me, this last sentence expresses what, with no irreverence, I like to think of as the earthly philosophy of Jesus. As a single grain of wheat holds a germ of life which is capable of producing all the bread the world will ever need, this saying holds the vital germ of all that Jesus taught concerning man's right living here on earth.

Dainty Sandwiches and Fruit Drink for Afternoon Party Lunch

Grape Juice and Sandwiches for Club Lunch.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When you are hostess for your afternoon club, you generally want to serve some slight refreshment before the guests leave. In the warm months it's a bother to make cookies or cake, and scarcely necessary. Dainty sandwiches and a fruit drink will be sufficient to indicate your hospitable instincts.

Grape juice is almost always liked. If your juice is very heavy it may be diluted to taste with ice water or ginger ale. Pass a section of lemon with each glass, and sugar for those who prefer their beverages sweet. Or sweeten the entire pitcherful of grape juice after adding a small amount of lemon juice and water. One lemon is sufficient to bring out the flavor in a quart of grape juice.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has suggested at various times a great many appetizing sandwich spreads. Some of the best for afternoon use are made with cream cheese and preserves, or cream cheese and chopped parsley or watercress; or either of these green-leaf vegetables chopped and mixed with butter before spreading. Peanut butter, or coarsely ground peanuts mixed with cream make another acceptable filling. Trim the crusts from your sandwiches and cut them in strips or triangles. If you have time, you might cut some with fancy cookie cutters. See that the tray is daintily arranged, with attractive underplates, pretty glasses and napkins.

Peach Bavarian Cream Is Delightful Dessert

You've had peaches in all sorts of ways while they have been in season—peaches with cream, with ice cream, peach shortcake, peach cobbler, peach pie—even broiled peaches—so you should be glad to be reminded of one more good dessert made with this delicious fruit—peach bavarian cream. As all the bavarian creams contain whipped cream, this is just one more way of serving peaches and cream together. The recipe is from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

2 tbs. gelatin	1 cup sugar
½ cup cold water	¼ tsp. salt
1 quart sliced fresh peaches	1 pint cream, whipped

Soak the gelatin in the cold water for five minutes. Mash the peaches with the sugar, rub through a sieve and simmer for five minutes. Remove from the fire, add the softened gelatin and salt and stir until the gelatin is dissolved. Chill and when the mixture begins to thicken fold in the whipped cream. Place in a wet mold, let stand in a cold place until firm, and turn out on a serving platter.

TIMELY HINTS ABOUT GOOD THINGS FOR THE FAMILY TABLE

By NELLIE MAXWELL

There's a space for good to bloom in Every heart of man or woman—
And however wild or human,
Or however brimmed with gall,
Never heart may beat without it:
And the darkest heart to doubt it
Has something good about it
After all.
—James Whitcomb Riley.

Between seasons when the weather is either unseasonably hot or too cool we need, some days, a chilling, tinkling drink and the next a hot one. A delightful drink that will appeal to nearly all tastes is the following fruit drink:

Fruit Iced Tea.—Make one cupful of strong tea, using two or three teaspoonfuls of the tea to a cupful of boiling water. Let it stand five minutes to steep, then chill. Squeeze the juice of four lemons, three oranges and add enough sugar to sweeten. Chill with plenty of ice, add a half gallon of water and serve with thin slices of orange and lemon floating on the glass.

Pineapple Lemonade.—Make a sirup by boiling one cupful of sugar and two cupfuls of water for ten minutes. Chill, add a can of grated pineapple, the juice of three lemons and the juice of one large orange. Strain and add one quart of cold water. Then pour over chipped ice in tall glasses.

Delicious Punch.—Prepare a sirup of one cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of water, cook until it spins a thread; pour the sirup over three beaten egg whites and add slowly to one quart of freshly made english breakfast tea infusion which has been chilled; add this mixture to one quart of lemon flavored ice cream and mix thoroughly: turn into a freezer and freeze to a mush. Serve from a punch bowl in tall thin glasses.

Ginger Ale Cream.—Serve ice cream in tall glasses, fill up with ginger ale.

Chocolate Ice Cream Soda.—Into a tumbler put a small cone of ice cream, pour over this two tablespoonfuls of chocolate sirup and fill the glass with chilled soda water drawn from a syphon.

Ginger Ale Cobbler.—Fill soda water glasses half full of finely crushed ice, add one slice of pineapple (the small size), then fill with ginger ale. Serve at once.

Mulled Cider.—Put one quart of sweet cider into a saucepan. Add one small stick of cinnamon broken into pieces, one-half teaspoonful of whole allspice, six whole cloves and one small piece of ginger root. Bring to the boiling point, let boil three minutes. Skim and turn into a hot stone pitcher, serve hot in small steins. Hot gingerbread, snappy cheese mixed with rich cream, makes a palatable luncheon with a stein of cider.

There is nothing more tasty than fresh shrimp, but with the canned variety one may always be sure it is wholesome and ready to eat. Shrimps should be rinsed as soon as taken from the can. Split down the back and remove the black streak, wash and drain and chill on ice if to be used as salad. Never retain the juice from the can.

Shrimp Salad.—Rinse and chill the shrimps and place on crisp lettuce leaves. The curled leaves of the head lettuce make a most attractive nest. Place five or six shrimps for each serving. For salad dressing prepare a snappy french dressing, adding a bit of chopped celery, a dash of worcestershire sauce and a drop of tabasco. Serve the salad at once after pouring over the dressing, as it wilts the lettuce if allowed to stand.

Another salad: Arrange the shrimps around a mound of mayonnaise in the center, on lettuce. On top of the mayonnaise place a ring of green pepper, in the ring, straight up, stick a tuft of tender celery tips, around the pepper on the mayonnaise place six or eight capers. Serve from the table.

Shrimp Wiggle.—Sift two cans of shrimps into two cupfuls of white sauce. When well heated through pour over rounds of hot buttered toast. Sprinkle over each a few hot seasoned peas and serve. One may arrange the toast around the platter and have the peas in a mound in the center.

STORY FOR THE CHILDREN ABOUT THE PIGS AND GEESE

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"People," said Mrs. Goose, "say to a child who can't do his lessons, so I've heard, 'don't be a goose.'

"That is, they say so if they're a bit rude. I've been told that they didn't mean it for rudeness, but because they wanted to make such children study and become wise.

"I think they should say:

"'Children, be clever, like the geese.' However, even though I think they should say this, I can't imagine them doing so."

"I can't myself," said Mr. Gander, "and still, I think it should be said."

"I don't see why you are worrying," said Mrs. Grey Goose, "about children and grownups and whether we're stupid or not or whether they speak as they do.

"Such things don't bother me. I just leave them alone. If they should bother me I could fight them, but I just leave them alone.

"That's what I do."

"Ah, Mrs. Grey Goose," said Mr. Gander, "you don't know what geese can be like."

"I know what they are," she said.

"That's so," cackled Mr. Gander, "but I have just heard a great and noble story about geese, and so I don't think they should be thought stupid any more."

"Tell me the great and noble story," shrieked Mrs. Grey Goose. And the other geese asked to hear the story.

"Tell us," they all shrieked.

"I am not putting you off," said Mr. Gander, "but I am only adding to the story."

"How are you adding to the story when you haven't begun it?" asked Mrs. Goose.

"Are you adding to it in your mind?" asked Mrs. Grey Goose.

"No, I am not," said Mr. Gander. "I meant that I was adding to it by keeping you waiting to hear it.

"It makes you so eager and you will find it so much more interesting.

"Well, there were some dangerous and wicked men about to hurt some nice and good ones and what do you suppose a flock of geese did?

"They warned the good men, who were sleeping after a great deal of hard work, that danger was approaching.

"I Am Not Putting You Off," Said Mr. Gander.

"They came rushing along to them and to tell them that they had seen danger from afar.

"That's really so. These geese saved the good men from the cruel ones who had come to rob them and to hurt them."

"That's fine, fine, fine, fine," cackled Mrs. Goose. "That sure is splendid."

"No wonder you say that geese shouldn't be called stupid any more," said Mrs. Grey Goose.

"Well," said Brother Bacon, who had come up to listen, "pigs have often given warning of danger, too.

"Both pigs and geese have been brave and have accomplished fine things."

"Oh, dear," said Mr. Gander, "maybe that is so, but don't be such a selfish pig that you have to be in every story.

"This one was to be a true one about geese."

"And it is true," said Grandfather Porky. "Geese have a number of times been known to give a warning that danger was near.

"Yes, you're not so stupid as you look," ended Grandfather Porky, with a smile and a twist of his little tail.

And all the pigs squealed that they agreed with this.

Lemon Sponge Dessert Should Be Prepared Long Before Needed

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Nothing could be daintier or more refreshing on a hot day than lemon sponge. It has the advantage of all desserts made with gelatin, that it must be made several hours in advance of the time it is wanted, thus releasing the homemaker from cooking during the hotter parts of the day. Another good point is that yolks left over by putting the whites in the sponge can be promptly utilized for the custard sauce. Both recipes are from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Lemon Sponge (With Custard Sauce)

2 tbs. gelatin	Salt
½ cup cold water	¾ cup lemon
2 cups boiling water	juice
1 cup sugar	3 egg whites

Soften the gelatin in the cold water for five minutes. Add boiling water, sugar, and a few grains of salt, and stir until dissolved. Add the lemon juice, chill, and when the mixture begins to set, beat well, and fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Pour into a wet mold and put in a cold place until firm. Turn out on a platter and serve with custard sauce made from the egg yolks, as follows:

Custard Sauce.

1 pint milk	3 egg yolks
¼ cup sugar	½ tsp. vanilla
Salt

Heat the milk, sugar and a few grains of salt in a double boiler. Beat the egg yolks lightly, add some of the heated milk, pour back into the double boiler and stir constantly until the custard coats the spoon. Remove at once, add the vanilla, place the pan in a bowl of cold water and stir occasionally until cool.

Dust Hiding Places of Centipedes With Pyrethrum Powder

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Moisture, warmth and good places to hide, make many bathrooms, cellars and some closets attractive dwelling places for the house centipede. House centipedes live on other insects, and while they are alarming in appearance, they very rarely bite human beings. It might happen that if a centipede were pressed with the bare hand or foot, or caught between sheets in beds, it might bite in self-defense, as would many insects. In such cases prompt dressing of the bite with ammonia will alleviate any pain or swelling.

As the house centipede is a very delicate creature, and very easily injured, it can be controlled by destroying each individual as it makes its appearance. All moist places where centipedes would naturally hide should be frequently inspected and dusted freely with fresh pyrethrum powder. As this powder loses its strength it must be renewed quite often, according to the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Honey Fifty-Eight Years Old Changes in Flavor

Fifty-eight years ago a hive of honey bees made some white clover honey that has been kept by the United States Department of Agriculture and tested at intervals throughout a half century or more. Once almost colorless, this honey now resembles blackstrap molasses. Its original flavor has changed until it now tastes considerably like buckwheat honey. However, this honey would not be out of place on steaming hot cakes or waffles at this time but for the fact that the department plans to age it indefinitely or until it is no longer fit for consumption, testing it from time to time to note chemical changes. All kinds of honey darken after the first few years and the flavor also changes.

NOVELTY WOOLENS ARE LIKED FOR SCHOOL AND TRAVEL WEAR

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

It is almost uncanny the way youth senses the new and the smart, whether it be in regard to clothes, manners, or what not. The intuition of young sophisticates planning their back-to-school wardrobes is leading straight to the novelty woolens, which are that fascinating and unusual they are enough to intrigue the heart of every style aspirant, from college senior to the youngster just starting out in the grades.

Most of the new flecked woolens are gay deceivers, in that at a casual glance one could never guess how very sheer and dainty are they. That is one of the reasons why these novelty worsteds are proving so popular for early fall wear; they are lightsome enough to be perfectly comfortable, yet they are smartly autumnlike in appearance.

When the girl on the train going back to college waves adieu and "auf wiedersehen" from the platform which is bearing her away from "home, sweet home," she is very likely to be clad either in a natty jacket-and-skirt suit, fashioned after the manner of the model shown to the left in the picture, or her choice may center on a one-piece dress topped with a jacket such as the figure to the right in the illustration is wearing with much satisfaction.

The woolen weave which fashions the suit shown is only mildly flecked to what some of the materials are, for many of the deep wine, dark green, brown and black fabrics look as if they are smattered with snowflakes. As is the case in this instance, many of the newest jackets are detailed with scarf necklines.

An entirely new family of woolen weaves are highlighted in the fabric displays for fall. These answer the call for dress materials which are exceedingly lightweight and sheer. The costume to the right is fashioned of one of these new-type woolens. For school wear it is thoroughly practical and ever so good-looking, the one-piece frock being especially smart. For these daytime dresses with jackets to match, both solid colors and tweedlike or novelty mixtures are favored.

Port of London

The Thames at the Tower Bridge, From the Air.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

LONDON the city is a Mecca for travelers and is known, from books and stories, throughout the world. London the port is comparatively little known, yet in world economics it is even more important than London the city. The story of this great port involves the ships that crowd the Thames from the Seven Seas, the varied piles of products from all corners of the world that are set down on London quays and docks, and the facilities for handling this mighty business of providing necessities and luxuries for a great block of the world's consumers.

The port of London has developed as her ships have developed. In her 2,000 years of history she has known the long, rakish Viking boats, the little wind-driven ships of the Continent, smacks, frigates, clippers; and since the advent of steam and the gas engine, great mechanical greyhounds of the sea of ever-increasing size.

The smaller ships of the past centuries found it possible to anchor in the Thames or to tie up to her wharves and quays. But as ships became larger and more numerous the great tidal range of the river was found to be more and more troublesome. It was then that London began the construction of the great closed dock system which gives her the most extensive area of artificial ship basins in the world.

A quay or wharf is merely a wall or platform along the shore of a river or inlet. A true dock is constructed by digging into the bank to construct a basin into which the harbor water flows. A lock and water gates usually connect the basin with the outer water. When ships are floated into the dock at high tide the gates can be closed, shutting in enough water to float the ships even when the water has dropped far below the necessary level outside. In some modern docks the water level can be maintained or even raised above the high tide level, by gigantic pumping plants.

Growth of the Dock System.

London's system of docks, now so extensive and elaborate, grew by very slow degrees. The first little wet dock, dug at Blackwall about 1665, was used merely to outfit ships. Samuel Pepys mentions it in his diary. Next, about 1700, came a larger dock used merely as a protected anchorage for ships that were to be long in port. This basin came to be frequented by whaling ships in the Greenland trade and was long known as the Greenland dock. The whalers soon realized that unloading and the taking on of supplies could be better accomplished in the dock than in the river. Blubber factories, storage facilities, and all the ill-smelling accessories of whaling grew up around the basin, which thus was first to take on what are the elementary docking activities of today.

These beginnings of the dock system were constructed within a few miles of London bridge. From them the system has developed, principally down the river into deeper and deeper water. The West and East India docks were built about 1800. They now embrace 127 acres of water basins, millions of square feet of warehouse space, and more than five miles of quays. The so-called London docks, the nearest basins to the bridge, are relatively small, covering 35 acres of water and 65 acres of land. The Surrey Commercial docks, built around the original Greenland dock, consist of 147 acres of water, 230 acres of land, and 5 miles of quays.

Royal Docks the Largest.

The Royal docks, six or eight miles below London bridge, are the heart of London's dock system, and the most extensive inclosed docks in the world. They consist of the Royal Victoria dock, built in 1855; the Royal Albert dock, completed in 1880; and the King George V dock, opened in 1921. Together they embrace 245 acres of water and extend along the river for three miles. More than half a million tons of shipping has been berthed in these connected docks at one time.

Twenty-six miles below London bridge is the most remote of London's shipping basins, the Tilbury docks. These were opened in 1886 to accommodate the largest of the vessels entering the port and those of the deepest draft. Its new entrance lock is approximately of the dimensions of the great locks of the Panama canal, with a depth of 45 feet 6 inches below high water. It is in the Tilbury docks that the greatest of the transocean passenger steamships berth—ships of close to 22,000 tons.

London is not dependent alone on inclosed docks. Along the 60 miles of river which supply the city with potential port facilities, are many miles of open wharves and quays. To these comes a constant procession of barges, coasting boats, and even sizable steamers.

For the past 10 years the great dock system of London has been under public ownership, managed by the Port of London Authority, a corporate body, whose members are in part appointed by the admiralty, the London County council, and other public organizations; and in part are elected by taxpayers and groups particularly interested in the port business. The Port Authority also controls some open wharfage, but the greater portion of this is under private ownership.

Vast Streams of Trade.

With its river, its scores of miles of wharves and docks and its vast warehouses and vaults, the port of London is a gateway and a treasure house through which and into which pours a stream of goods ranging from the barest necessities and the crudest raw materials to the most costly products of loom and factory, artist and craftsman. In part the value and volume of London's sea-borne trade are owing to its geographic situation between continental Europe and the Americas; in part to the city's status as head and heart of the world-wide British empire.

Many of the docks and warehouses devote themselves to certain specialties. The old Greenland dock and its neighbors are concerned largely with the Baltic, White sea, and Canada trade, for the most part made up of timber and grain. To the West India docks come thousands of tons of sugar, scores of thousands of gallons of rum, and hard woods. Sugar is also unloaded by the thousands of tons at the East India docks along with the spices, silks, rugs and dozens of other commodities from the East.

The quantities of goods that pass over London's docks and wharves is stupendous. The leading import in quantity is grain and meals; close to 70,000,000 bushels are brought in yearly, their value reaching $125,000,000. Such dissimilar articles as tea and fresh and frozen meats lead all imports in value. More than $165,000,000 worth of each arrives annually. The greater part of the tea is for consumption, the balance for re-export. The meat is practically all for consumption, and it is supplemented by a considerable quantity of home-grown meat.

On to the docks pour each year tons and tons of butter valued at more than $100,000,000, $50,000,000 worth of cheese, and more than 1,000,000,000 eggs. There is a steady stream of wines and spirits in hogsheads, "pipes," barrels and bottles. Most of these find their way to the underground vaults of the Port of London Authority where there is complete equipment for blending, bottling, storing and aging. There are more than a dozen huge vats each with a capacity in excess of 20,000 gallons.

Fortunes in Warehouses.

This is but a suggestion of the vast stream of goods that passes over the docks and into the warehouses of London. Enough tobacco is in storage to make a smoke screen for the navies of the world—the best tobacco that is afforded by the Americas, Greece, Turkey, Burma, China, Sumatra, Borneo, Cyprus and Africa. Other warehouses contain fortunes in rubber, ivory, metals, rare earths, drugs, perfumes, porcelains, fine fabrics and laces, feathers, furs and hundreds of other commodities that minister to the wants of a complex civilization. In 1928, the total net ship tonnage in and out of London was 55,423,681.

Although the London water front is called upon to care for ships and goods from all the world's continents and seas, it has not wholly a commercial flavor. The most important buildings in the empire, the houses of parliament, front on the river, and for miles along the banks extend the beautifully laid out embankments which furnish stately drives along the winding course of the river. The most famous of these is the Victoria embankment which extends between Westminster bridge, near the houses of parliament, and Blackfriars bridge, down the river near St. Paul's cathedral.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE PERFECT HOSTESS

MRS. Cucumber Green, whose real name was Margaret, but whose pretended name was Mrs. Cucumber Green, was planning for her party with Allie Baa.

Allie Baa was her favorite child. She was an adorable rag doll. No one could help but love Allie Baa.

Allie Baa could be depended upon, too. Oh, yes, she always saw to things in such a careful way.

So, one day, when Mrs. Cucumber Green said to Allie:

"Now, Allie, I want my party to be a great success and you, you know, will make it a success by being a very good hostess," she knew that was all that had to be said.

Allie was a perfect hostess. She would make everything pass off so well. Oh, Allie was perfect in every way!

Allie always understood so perfectly. When Mrs. Cucumber Green had a fall and hurt herself, Allie would snuggle up into her arms and drive away the hurt with her dear, loving affection.

Allie Always Understood So Perfectly.

When Mrs. Cucumber Green was greatly excited over different beautiful things that kept happening, Allie was ready to be jumped up and down with glee.

When Mrs. Cucumber Green was sick in bed with a cold, Allie would play with her when she wanted to play. But when she felt tired and wanted to go to sleep Allie would lie so quietly in her arms, not making a single sound, but just helping her "pretend" to have a rest.

Mrs. Cucumber Green's mother had made Allie a beautiful pair of new slippers and a little sweater and a scarf and a little cap. These Allie would wear to the party.

Oh, there was a great deal to be done that morning in Number Four, Green Lane, to get ready for the party!

The children were going to arrive at three o'clock, and they were going to bring all their dolls.

"Now, Allie," Mrs. Cucumber Green said, "I want you to see that they all have a good time and get plenty to eat."

Allie understood perfectly.

At last they were all ready and Mrs. Cucumber Green's mother helped dress her as she had helped dress her children.

Such a party it was! They played "house," which was quite the nicest game of all, and then had a supper of cocoa and bread and butter and a birthday cake with four candles upon it!

The dolls all behaved beautifully and were a pride to every mother.

It was surprising, too, what good table manners they had. Not one of them licked her fingers, but each waited for her mother to wipe her mouth daintily and nicely.

Nor did they cry for more candy or cake, nor did they grab from each other, nor did they act as though they thought one was getting more cake than another.

In fact they seemed to want their mothers to eat a great deal and have a good time. For when one of the little visitors put a piece of cake to the mouth of her small child and said:

"Will you have a little more, my darling?" the darling didn't take a single bite, but said in a squeaky voice—just as her mother wished her to say:

"No, mother dear, I thank you. It is better for you. Too much might make a doll girl sick. But you're a grown-up mother, and you can have all you want."

And when Mrs. Cucumber Green said to Allie:

"Do you think I should eat a second piece of cake at my own birthday party?" Allie answered:

"Oh, I think you should, mother dear. It will show them that you think what you're giving them is so good, and they will surely like it."

Could children be nicer? None of their mothers thought it was possible.

And when the time came for putting on the dolls' wraps they didn't cry or whine, but smiled in just the same sweet way as their hats and coats were put on, and they all said, just as they had been told, in voices very much like their mothers':

"We've had a lovely party, Mrs. Cucumber Green, and we thank you ever so much."

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

LADYBUGS

WHEN you were a child did you never take one of those little insects known as the ladybug in your hand and say:

Ladybug, ladybug, fly away home;
Your house is on fire and your children will burn!

Of course you did if you are a real Yankee, country bred, and never suspected that you were invoking the Norse gods and goddesses of old. Another way of conjuring with the ladybug is to place it in the open palm and, saying, "Fly east, fly west, fly to the one I love the best," blow upon it, then it will fly off in search of your destined love. German girls set the ladybug on the point of the finger and ask it when they will be married—in one year? In two years? etc. The ladybug takes flight at the proper count. In the great grain-raising sections of the Northwest Swedish farmers may be seen counting the spots on the ladybug's wing-covers to forecast the crops.

All this is because in the old Norse mythology the ladybug was consecrated to the goddess Freyja, the wife of Odin. With her brother, Frey, she presided over love and the growing crops. It was probably the bright markings of the wing-covers of the ladybug—sometimes called the ladybird—which caused it to be associated with Freyja in her capacity as goddess of love. The goddess' home was in the sun, whence also was believed to come the ladybug; and an echo of this belief is seen in the advice in our childhood's rhyme to "Fly away home; your house is on fire."

SMILES

GABBY GERTIE

"Many a man is bald because his wife is good at picking locks."

Dear Editor:

THINKING over the most interesting people I have met lately, I call to mind an antique dealer who lives with his relics in a shack without screen doors.

Wifeless, he lives alone except for three dogs and a horse—company enough for any man. No beds to make, no dusting to do, no one to tidy up around him. And on his dining-room floor is a rare oriental rug, worth, he says, several thousand dollars.

Some folks would think it wicked for any man to let his dogs race over such a rug. It's muddy and will undoubtedly get abused. He may never find a buyer for it. He could launder this up, sell it, and buy linoleum, but he loves that rug and is happy with it.

I admire his philosophy of life. Isn't it great to own something you love and to feel no need to turn it into money! After all, what good are possessions if we don't enjoy them?—Fred Barton.

The MONARCH TRADE MARK

A guarantee of Flavor, Purity, and Excellence. Monarch Quality Foods are sold by 40,000 Independent Retailers.

THE INDEPENDENCE

More than 300 cities and towns in 38 States have been visited by the great Monarch Food Ship of the Air, the "Independence."

INTERIOR VIEW

In the roomy interior of the "Independence" are displayed 200 Monarch Foods in their attractive containers, making it a miniature grocery store.

THE FLYING GROCERY

THIS beautiful, high-powered plane, with its three mighty Whirlwind engines, circles the cities high in the clouds, focuses public attention, attracts the populace to the airports, and there the people are told the story of the independent grocer and Monarch Foods.

All the old favorites are there, and many new ones—Monarch Cocoa, Monarch Chili Sauce, Monarch Catsup, Monarch Peanut Butter, Monarch Sweet Pickles, Monarch Canned Fruits, Monarch Canned Vegetables, Monarch Preserves, Monarch Food of Wheat, Monarch Coffee, Monarch Tea.

The quality of Monarch Foods has been impressively demonstrated to hundreds of thousands of American consumers, and the cause of the independent grocer has been advocated successfully. It has been proven that the independent grocer sells good merchandise at fair prices. Monarch Foods are not expensive.

Old Michigan Structure

Believed to be one of the oldest structures in Michigan is a log building erected by the Northwestern Fur Trading company on Beaver island in 1824. The building is in a good state of preservation and has been shingled and cared for by its numerous inhabitants. At present an Indian family is occupying it.

There are already too many legal holidays—another manifestation of the prevalent overlegislation.

Productive Cabbage

Common cabbage is said to be the most productive vegetable, for it is believed that an acre of ground will yield a greater weight of green vegetable matter in the shape of cabbage than in that of any other vegetable whatever.

Civilization universally requires the wearing of pantaloons.

How One Woman Lost 20 Pounds of Fat

Lost Her Double Chin
Lost Her Prominent Hips
Lost Her Sluggishness
Gained Physical Vigor
Gained in Vivaciousness
Gained a Shapely Figure

If you're fat—remove the cause! KRUSCHEN SALTS contain the 6 mineral salts your body organs, glands and nerves must have to function properly.

When your vital organs fail to perform their work correctly—your bowels and kidneys can't throw off that waste material—before you realize it—you're growing hideously fat!

Take half a teaspoonful of KRUSCHEN SALTS in a glass of hot water every morning—do not overeat and—in 3 weeks get on the scales and note how many pounds of fat have vanished.

Notice also that you have gained in energy—your skin is clearer—your eyes sparkle with glorious health—you feel younger in body—keener in mind. KRUSCHEN will give any fat person a joyous surprise.

Get an 85c bottle of KRUSCHEN SALTS (lasts 4 weeks). If even this first bottle doesn't convince you this is the easiest, safest and surest way to lose fat—if you don't feel a superb improvement in health—so gloriously energetic—vigorously alive—your money gladly returned. Leading druggists all over the world are selling lots of Kruschen Salts.

Concerning Luck

Hope nothing from luck, and the probability is that you will be so prepared, forewarned, and forearmed that all shallow observers will call you lucky.—Bulwer-Lytton.

Gigantic Painting

One of the largest pictures ever painted is the "Paradise" of Tintoretto, which hangs in the palace of the doges at Venice. It measures 84 feet by 35 feet.

"I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at Change of Life. Now I take it every spring and fall and it keeps me in good health. I am able to take care of an eight-room house and garden at the age of 71 years. I will praise the Vegetable Compound wherever I go for it is a wonderful medicine for women. They should give it a good trial by taking about five bottles."—Mrs. Clara Riley.

MRS. BERTHA STEPHENS
21 E. Ross St., Lancaster, Pennsylvania

"I was very nervous and rundown and weighed less than one hundred pounds. I felt tired and weak and I often had to lie down. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I read the advertisement in the paper. Now I eat well, sleep well, and have good color. In fact, I couldn't feel any better and I weigh one hundred fifty-five pounds. I am glad to answer letters from any woman who wants to know more about the Vegetable Compound."—Mrs. Bertha Stephens.

COLLECT FOR CLUB WOMEN

Keep us, O God, from pettiness; let us be large in thought, in word, in deed.
Let us be done with fault finding and leave off self-seeking.
May we put away all pretense and meet each other face to face, without self-pity and without prejudice.
May we never be hasty in judgment and always generous.
Teach us to put into action our better impulses, straight forward and unafraid.
Let us take time for all things, make us grow calm, serene and gentle.
Grant that we may realize it is the little things that create difference; that in the big things of life we are as one.
And may we strive to touch and to know the great common woman's heart of us all, and O Lord God, let us not forget to be kind.

—Grace Julian Clark

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, SEPT. 25, 1930 | NUMBER 39

The Home Bureau will meet Friday, September 26, in an all day meeting, with Mrs. Eva Wasson. Potluck dinner.

L. L. C.

On Wednesday evening, September 17, 1930, Mrs. Lora Leighty of St. Joe was the very hospitable hostess to the Ladies' Literary Club, for their first meeting after the summer vacaion.

Among the outstanding features of the program, arranged by the executive committee, was the singing of two club songs. Mrs. DeLora Curie was the originator of the one, in which the names of all the club members were mentioned. Also, members responded to roll call by expressing their aims for the coming year. If the club strives toward the goal set by its respective members, its success is assured.

During the business session, the Constitution of the club was read, and Mrs. Carl De Vore and Miss Reba Woods were elected to membership.

After more serious matters had been attended to, everybody went outdoors to toast weiners and marshmallows before the lawn furnace. Melons were served also. Before disbanding all participated in games and contests. Judging from actions the women were as glad to be together again as they were to welcome their new friends.

A SURPRISE ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION

Last Sunday being the birthday and wedding anniversary of Mrs. Lora Lighty, thirty friends and relatives got together and organized a real surprise for her.

Preparations had been made to go to the O. E. Ginther home for dinner and when she returned home after Sunday School to go to the Ginther home, she found the house full of friends, who had brought well filled baskets.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. J. N. George, Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Fry, Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Burnier and daughter, Vivian, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Quance and children and Mrs. Vina Quance and children, Mary, Fred and Wayne, all of Auburn; Robert Morr of Concord; Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hull, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Miller, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hursh, Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Ginther and Rev. B. W. Mayfield, wife and daughter of St. Joe.

A wonderful dinner was spread and a beautiful cake adorned the table, being presented by Mr. and Mrs. George.

The day was most enjoyably spent with the old friends.

COMMUNITY BETTERMENT MEETING A SUCCESS

A goodly number were present at the initial meeting of the Community Betterment Association held in the High School Gymnasium on last Sunday afternoon. The orchestra, community singing, and an address by J. N. Scholes constituted the program. Mr. Scholes masterfully outlined the present day conditions in the light of present day needs and the ways of approach to community betterment. The following are the high spots of his address:

Progress comes from people who pray and men's success is always due to the communities that have praying people.

St. Joe, as a community, is not in more dire need of reform than any other community. Our nice little town is not in distress—no call to arms to combat any great catastrophe in our midst. The idea in mind is to fulfill in our present day community obligatons that no one else can perform but ourselves and to find some basic method of discharging these obligations in the spirit of unity.

In the course of his discussion he gave a brief history of the progress of the township, east and west, showing the different shades of opinions prevailing then and now on different community topics bringing out the fact that people have actually made progress in broad minded thinking. His historical reminiscence dated back from before and since the coming of the B. & O. railroad.

In further development of his subject, he made plain that the aims of any well intended community. Betterment organization should not be to kill something off, to over throw or to crush present existing institutions, whose existence had proven to be for good in times past, but to link up all the spiritual elements of the community, cooperatively and coordinately for progress.

Institutions that do not believe in progress, naturally die, regardless of the kind of institution.

Men have a right to live ahead of their times—as all great men have always done. Living ahead, without destroying the will of the present generation. Good men are found in law, politics, schools, churches, and every where.

Our purpose is, that when we are through with this world, the community will be better. It is plain to be seen that a commercial revival of the small community is being sought, to restore the prestige of the once proud and industrious little community world. May be this is impossible and may be not.

How To Start

The character of our citizens should be the objective of community betterment. Our reputation at home will be our rating abroad. Good character in the organization itself is the first requisite.

What ever the organization is to be it must be worked out by personal sacrifice. We will get out of it what we put into it. Make friends—not enemies. Universalty of the Golden Rule—where people actually believe in it—is the basic running rule for church and community.

Progress not made by burning out sin by law enforcement. This is not our aim, but to the belief in the other fellow—fellowship. This persistant belief in the other fellow will make the world hear from St. Joe. If it is not to be this—then what?

In voting people usually vote against some one instead of for betterment. Constructive thinking is a necessity in all communities.

The church is not united in expressing its good will to the world.

Legal unity is not known to the world.

Religious unity not doctrinarily known.

Men's brotherhoods not possible by doctrine.

Men have debated 2,000 years on doctrine. The church can lead or defeat any community, as well as itself.. The Catholic Church which boasts of being the one true church is divided into seven different bodes. Unity is as difficult as being a christian itself. Unity would be beautiful, if possble in St. Joe.

Why do people who live, act, have their existence together in the home and community fail to be able to pray and worship together? Is it understandable?

The economic basis for unity is no real fundamental or vital argument for unity, although the financial savings derived from unity could be used to a good cause and advantage.

The great reason for christian unity is that the world might believe. Unity would not eliminate the number of ministers now engaged in the service of the church. The church (unified) would have an enlarged duty compared to the present state in which the field of contact and application would necessiate a field man, a pulpit man or other additional branches as education and recreation, etc.

The membership of a brotherhood is not to be called reformers—just good men together for good. Not down with or down with that but up with the right. These things constitute the real efforts of a Men's Community Brotherhood, properly used and functioned.

The next meeting will be held in one month from last Sunday. A better attendance is expected when family reunions and outside attractions are closed for the season or when the citizenry begin to realize the liberality and harmlessness of the aims of the institution. Everybody from everywhere are always invited—you included.

OPERATES ON FINGER

Lester Pugsley, who works with Wm. Randall, had the end of his index finger cut off some three weeks ago. Having regular medical attention it failed to improve and on Tuesday he went to Souder's Hospital at Auburn for an operation and had a portion of the finger removed, to insure proper healing. The accident occurred while working on a wind mill.

DEKALB COUNTY COUNCIL DATES

The following dates will be of interest to church and Sunday School officers and workers of DeKalb County. Please note.

County Council Meeting in Auburn Presbyterian Church, Sunday, October 5, at 2 o'clock, standard time. Hon. David Hogg to be the speaker.

Leadership Training School at the Y. M. C. A. in Auburn, October 13-17.

Young People's Conference in Garrett Christian Church, November 1-2.

County Convention in St. Joe, February 5-6.

RECEIVES APPOINTMENT AT LAFAYETTE

Lafayette, Ind., Sept. 23.—G. D. Goodwin, of St. Joe has received an appointment as Cadet Second Lieutenant in the Purdue University R. O. T. C. His appointment and rankings of the 105 senior cadets in the corps for the current semester were announced this week by Major J. E. McMahon, commandant.

The Purdue military unit is the most completely equipped motorized artillery unit among college R. O. T. C. units. Each year it graduates more trained artillery officers than any other school in the country. Two years of military training are required of all men in Purdue, except those physically disabled. The advanced miltary work is optional, and each year has seen an increasing number of men enrolled. In addition to the senior cadet officers, 168 juniors, a record number, have received appointments as second lientenants.

Upon graduation, the students who take the full four year course in military training at Purdue are commissioned as lieutenants in the reserve corps.

FALLS FROM POLE

Bruce Blair is sure a lucky fellow. Friday while at work for the Indiana & Michigan Electric Co., he had climbed 22 feet, when his spur let loose and he fell. As he proceeded to the ground he struck an iron spike in the pole which broke his fall and no doubt saved him from serious injury. After being in bed for a day, he was about Butler on Monday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Bose, of South Bend were guests in the L. D. Young home a few days last week.

VISITED BY AN ELECTRICAL STORM

A severe electrical and rain storm visited this community Monday night and the only damage reported locally were a number of telephone lines out of commission and the electric service was off until nearly noon due to transformers being burned out.

The gang of repair men were kept busy, while the office forces wer kept busy answering calls as to when will the service be resumed.

Little do we appreciate our wonderful public utilities until their service is crippled, and then we realize how much we are dependent upon them for our living.

The News was unable to turn a wheel until afternoon, hence you will notice a lack of the usual local news, in order to publish on time.

The restaurants were troubled over the lack of juice for their refrigerators, but after all, the repairs came through in good time and we have forgotten all about our troubles.

Not a loss was reported locally, while a number of barns and houses about Auburn were burned.

Many of our citizens were up ready to answer any call that might be given.

Lightning followed the aerial into the Jay Snyder home and damaged the plastering considerable, and a number of poles and trees were splintered about the community.

Miss Priscilla Borthwick returned to Defiance College last Wednesday to resume her studies, she being a member of the graduating class this year.

Active Money

A Necessity

The man who hoards his money helps to create business stagnation. People are so dependent upon each other that a lack of buying power in one class affects all and when a market is restricted it has a direct effect on the business prosperity of all.

Money in the bank is Active Money and it helps the individual and benefits the community. It helps to create conditions that bring an indirect, but nevertheless, a real benefit to all.

Put your money in our bank—we will make it Active Money.

DASH OF COLOR OR WHITE ENLIVENS FROCK OF BLACK

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

As to the "first" autumn frock, fashion gives the answer in terms of black and white. Wherefore the well-dressed woman is starting out at the dawn of a new season in a most arresting daytime gown made of black canton crepe or of the now-so-voguish faille silk or of satin (yes, satin is "in style" again), with the inevitable "touch of white" enhancing it with a sprightly air of chic.

It is just such good-looking frocks as the model pictured which are striking the high spots in the immediate style picture. A distinctive feature about this dress is that it is made "with a tunic." The revival of the tunic is one of the most outstanding events in present-day styling. The theme of the tunic is destined to be played in every key and with variations during the coming months.

This flare for the tunic may be easily accounted for, seeing that daytime modes have gone "Russian" this season. The coming winter fashions will dramatically declare the Russian influence in lavishment of fur, in cunning muffs and picturesque Cossack hats, in belted tunics, in flaring skirts, and in other details too numerous to itemize.

But to return to this charming black-and-white dress in the picture. It is made of faille silk, with white satin for the artfully draped collar and the unique placed-at-the-elbow cuffs. It seems as if trimming on the new sleeves has a way of going to the elbow this season. At any rate, most of the fall frocks are distinguished with novel and elaborated sleeves.

When it is not black with a touch of white, then it is black with a dash of color. A favorite combination is black with turquoise blue expressed in such beguiling effects as turquoise beads worked on black canton crepe, or a blue wool lace blouse worn with a black bolero suit.

Black is also forming an alliance with blue, especially turquoise, in the new fashions. The vogue for brown with white is also declared, touches of white with deep wine also stressing the trend to unusual color schemes.

In every instance the law of related color is observed in the accessories as well as in the costume itself. The new hats in black and white, likewise in black with a note of turquoise blue, are the pride of the milliner's heart this season.

Butter, Rich in Vitamins Is Good for the Health

Because butter is rich in vitamins that are necessary for the growth of children and the well being of adults, there is no substitute for it, according to J. R. Dice, head of the dairy department at North Dakota agricultural college.

"People, both young and old, who use an adequate amount of butter in their diet will be much less susceptible to disease, especially colds and diseases of the lungs, air passages and sinuses, than those who do not use enough butter," Professor Dice says.

Experiments with rats have shown the superior food value of butter, and that animals fed butter as a part of their diet were of good size.

Moisture-Proof Fabrics Recommended for Children's Play Suits

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Children from two to four are especially in need of comfortable, warm, non-restricting garments in which they can play out-of-doors in almost any weather without catching cold or spoiling their clothes. Mothers who are planning to make most of their children's fall wardrobes will do well to include one or more play suits of fairly close, moisture-proof fabrics. The selection of the material will depend somewhat on the climate and the kind of weather the child is exposed to.

Suit of Lightweight Wool Cloth With Knitted Bands.

The bureau of home economics has designed play suits of several different kinds, suitable for use in the fall and spring, in the coldest part of the winter or on rainy days. A leaflet describing them may be obtained from the United States Department of Agriculture. One of the most practical types is shown in the accompanying picture. This play suit is made of a closely woven lightweight wool fabric, similar to kasha cloth and somewhat resembling a light flannel. It has knitted wrist and leg bands and a knitted collar. The knitted finish is recommended because it confines extra fullness and keeps out wind without restricting circulation or muscles.

Self-help in dressing is encouraged by the front opening with large flat buttons. The back drop is finished with tab extensions at the waistline, so that when the belt is fastened the placket does not gap. Notice the fullness in the leg back of the knee which helps to give roominess in the seat. In most wool fabrics this fullness is shrunk into the seam. When cutting out these suits the side line of the back section should always curve out slightly at the point where this fullness comes just above the knee. If the line were straight there would be a strain on the seam when the child sat down or squatted on the ground.

All children's play suits should have pockets placed so that they can be easily reached. Welt pockets are used on the suit illustrated.

A tam with a knitted band completes this costume. The cloth part is made in two sections. All the knitted parts of the outfit are more satisfactory if small needles and sweater yarn are used to make them. The yarn may be of a contrasting color, but the effect is generally more pleasing if it matches the fabric in color and the contrast is one of texture.

Cotton, Silk, Rayon Favored by the Consumers

New light from the consumer standpoint is thrown on trends in the use of textiles in the home by a report recently issued by the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture. Cotton and wool growers as well as manufacturers of textiles and textile machinery are vitally concerned with the shift in textile buying habits.

The bureau has obtained replies from more than a thousand men and women, representing all sections of the United States, as to the textile fibers in use in their wardrobes and houses in 1927 as compared with 1922, and their reasons for change. The returns show that families and individuals with the larger incomes more frequently chose silk or rayon in preference to cotton for many garments. Likewise, those living in the larger cities, in many cases registered a similar change from cotton to silk and rayon. Women gave as their chief reasons for this change that silk and rayon are more attractive and easier to handle than cotton. Men based their preference for silk and rayon socks to cotton on style and comfort.

In household articles, however, cotton is more than holding its own, according to the report of 646 families. In the large cities and in homes with the higher incomes, linen, rayon, and silk were given preference to cotton for certain articles, but this was offset by the more extensive use of cotton and by the actual increase in number of cotton household articles in the majority of the homes in 1927 as compared with 1922.

Copies of the printed report may be obtained free by writing to the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., for Miscellaneous Publication 31-M, "The Changing Uses of Textile Fibers in Clothing and Household Articles."

Acidity

The common cause of digestive difficulties is excess acid. Soda cannot alter this condition, and it burns the stomach. Something that will neutralize the acidity is the sensible thing to take. That is why physicians tell the public to use Phillips Milk of Magnesia.

One spoonful of this delightful preparation can neutralize many times its volume in acid. It acts instantly; relief is quick, and very apparent. All gas is dispelled; all sourness is soon gone; the whole system is sweetened. Do try this perfect anti-acid, and remember it is just as good for children, too, and pleasant for them to take.

Any drug store has the genuine, prescriptional product.

FOOD SUGGESTIONS THAT WILL APPEAL TO ALL

By NELLIE MAXWELL

True happiness is to no place confin'd
But still is found in a contented mind.
—Shakespeare.

To direct a wanderer in the right way is to light another man's candle by one's own, which loses none of its light by what the other gains.—Grove.

Casserole of Tongue.—Wash one fresh beef tongue and cook until tender in boiling water to cover. Remove the skin and all unsightly portions and lay in a casserole. Blend two tablespoonfuls of flour and two tablespoonfuls of sweet fat, and one cupful of the broth. Add one teaspoonful each of minced onion and salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and one cupful each of diced carrots, turnip, celery, canned peas; pour around the tongue and cook in the oven well covered until the vegetables are tender.

Cucumber and Onion Sandwich.—Peel and chop fine two firm cucumbers and grate two mild onions, add pepper, salt and a half teaspoonful of sugar. Place in a sieve to drain and chill in the ice chest. At serving time add french dressing, drain and mix with mayonnaise to spread. Serve on buttered whole wheat bread and garnish with stuffed olives.

Lemon Icebox Cookies.—Cream one cupful of butter or a mixture of butter and other sweet fat, add one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, when well blended add three beaten eggs, two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, one teaspoonful of the grated rind, five cupfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, all well blended in the flour. Add candied orange peel, chopped nuts; raisins may be added to taste. Shape into rolls and place in the ice box. Cut into thin slices and bake in a quick oven.

Onion Soup.—Chop two cupfuls of onion, cook in two tablespoonfuls of butter, stirring often. When the onions are tender add four cupfuls of vegetable stock, one teaspoonful of salt, paprika and pepper to taste and two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley.

Peanut Butter Bread.—This makes delicious sandwich bread. Take two cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, one-third of a cupful of sugar, one-half cupful of peanut butter and one and one-half cupfuls of milk. Mix the peanut butter as for biscuits and bake one hour. Keep for a day before cutting.

Tomato Soup Sandwich.—Spread rye bread with creamed butter and cover with a leaf of lettuce. Cover the lettuce with canned soup undiluted, cover with another leaf and then with a slice of buttered bread.

Boston Cream Pie.—Beat the yolks of six eggs until creamy, add one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt and add one cupful of sugar very slowly, beating well, then add two teaspoonfuls of grated lemon peel, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and one cupful of flour folded after the beaten egg whites have been added. Sift the flour several times to make it very light. The layers will be very thin. Now to one cupful of whipped cream add three beaten egg whites. Sweeten and flavor and spread over the cake. Ice with a chocolate frosting.

Dried Beef and Cream.—Cut thinly sliced smoked dried beef into slivers with the kitchen shears and add to a rich cream sauce in a double boiler. Serve with baked potatoes. The real old time dish was prepared with real cream thickened. Whip the sauce with an egg beater before adding the beef.

Mesopotamian Date Pudding.—Take one cupful of flour, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one-half cupful of nut meats, one cupful of pitted dates, one cupful of milk, one-fourth cupful of honey, and one-fourth cupful of orange juice. Sift flour, salt and soda together. Add the dates to the milk, then the milk to the flour, add nuts and honey, stir in the orange juice. Pour into a greased baking dish and place over hot water to steam for two hours. Serve with hard or foamy sauce. This recipe serves ten.

Shrimp Omelette.—Cook one can of shrimps in boiling water ten minutes. Put through an ordinary food grinder, season with salt and pepper. Mix with egg and cook as usual.

Fresh and Canned Fruit May Be Used for Fruit Cup

Many combinations of fruit, fresh or canned, may be used for fruit cup. Use colors that blend or contrast pleasantly and combine acid fruits with sweet, and firm with juicy kinds. Cut large fruits into small, attractive pieces, mix lightly so that they keep their shape, sweeten slightly, chill before serving, and garnish the individual servings with sprigs of mint or choice bright-colored fruits. Good combinations are: Strawberries, oranges and apples. Purple grapes with seeds removed, grapefruit and apricots. Peaches, raspberries and pineapple. Watermelon, honeydew or muskmelon and oranges. Red cherries, pears and green grapes.

Ripe Olives, Source of Vitamin A, Make Most Delicious Sandwich

Ripe Olives Unusual but Delicious.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

There are a good many varieties of club sandwiches to be found on the quick lunch menu, but here's a new one, and a very appetizing one, too. Try it the next time you want something unusual for a luncheon or supper. Probably you'd better keep to yourself the fact that ripe olives have been found to be an excellent source of vitamin A—people will like these sandwiches enough without being told they are good for them! The suggestion and proportions are from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture and have been thoroughly treated and found satisfactory.

1 loaf bread
3 large ripe, skinned tomatoes, sliced thin
3 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
6 slices cooked bacon, crisp
1 cup ripe olives, cut from stones
Thick mayonnaise
Lettuce

Slice the bread, trim off the crusts, and toast until lightly browned. Make double-decker sandwiches with the toast and other ingredients arranged in layers of lettuce, egg, bacon, tomato and olives, with enough mayonnaise to moisten. Insert toothpicks to hold the sandwiches together and garnish the tops with crisp lettuce and a few of the sliced ripe olives. With a cold beverage and a light dessert this makes an ideal hot weather luncheon or supper.

STORY FOR THE CHILDREN AT BEDTIME

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"To be sure," said Mr. Turtle, "we won't have to pay high prices for our food and our goodies, for we get them ourselves, and thus far there have been no grocers or butchers in the turtle world.

"In fact, we don't pay anything for our food, nor do we receive any money for anything that we do.

"In fact, there are no creatures in the turtle world who ask for turtle money."

"As a matter of fact, there is no such thing as turtle money," said Mrs. Turtle.

"Correct, my love, you are always right."

Then they both grinned, for they had been having such a foolish talk, and they liked having foolish talks once in awhile.

Then they decided they would pay a round of visits.

They thought that they would tell every creature upon whom they called that they would be at home in Turtle-Grove-Pond after the following day and that they hoped they would have the pleasure of having their calls returned.

"It will not be greedy of us to go and visit them and have tea when we merely want to be sociable and when we want to have them come to our home, too."

"Where is Turtle-Grove-Pond?" asked Mrs. Turtle.

"Our home, my love," said Mr. Turtle.

"Have we moved?"

"Oh, no, but when we go calling we must have a name for our place so it can be put on the corner of our cards.

"Where Is Turtle-Grove-Pond?"

"That is the correct thing to do," said Mr. Turtle.

"Have you the cards ready?" asked Mrs. Turtle.

And to Mrs. Turtle's surprise and delight, she saw a great many leaves Mr. Turtle had gathered near his pond. In the corner was the name Turtle-Grove-Pond, which no one could have understood unless Mr. Turtle explained it to them.

But that he was quite willing to do.

The leaves had been marked by a family of bugs who like to do that work and who had made the little holes Mr. Turtle said spelled out the name of his home in Turtle language!

In the meantime, while Mr. and Mrs. Turtle went calling, the little turtles came out themselves. Their mother had buried the eggs in the sand and had left them as turtle mothers do.

They had hatched out all alone and were just as happy as could be.

When Mr. and Mrs. Turtle came back they greeted the little turtles as though they were strangers.

They liked them but they did not make any fuss over them. For, of course, how could they be sure that the little turtles were their own when they had left them to come out into the world by themselves?

They might have been, for all they knew, the turtle children of some neighbors.

But that is the way in Turtleland and the little ones got along by themselves and seemed to be perfectly happy.

And Turtleland continued to be very gay and jolly with calling and tea parties and gaiety.

Elfin Oak for Kiddies

The children who play in Kensington gardens, London, are to be surprised with a fairy oak figure. An ancient oak was hauled into the park and an artist, Ivor Innes, converted the root into a great gnome. Innes secured the idea when in the country, where he noticed a root which with a few daubs of paint became a perfect little imp.

Glass Pictures Produced

Stained glass of different colors may be fused into one picture by a process just invented by Basil R. Bayne, an artist of Gerrard's Cross, England. The invention is regarded in England as the greatest development in the technique of stained glass since the earliest days of the art. It is claimed that the use of leadwork and enamels is eliminated, and that the new glass can be produced more cheaply than other forms of pictures in glass.

Wild Turkeys Increase

The protection of the wild turkey hen during all seasons for the last 10 years has brought Alabama to the top in the production of wild turkeys. Along with Texas, Alabama has far surpassed the neighboring states in wild turkeys, according to a survey made by the Wild Turkey Conservation league.

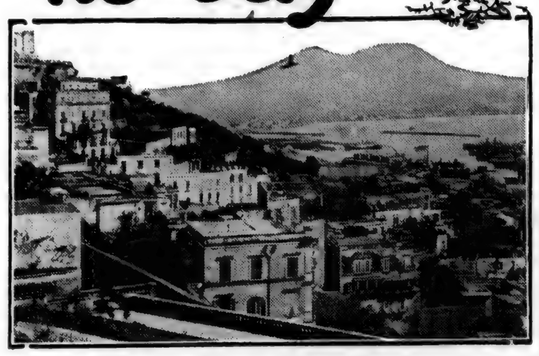
Naples and Its Bay



Mt. Vesuvius as Seen From Naples.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

WHILE not the center of the recent destructive Italian earthquake, Naples and the towns around its beautiful bay suffered considerable damage from the tremors. And that which harms Naples, with its almost perfect arrangement of sky, sea and mountains, harms one of the principal "journey's ends" of the world. Anything likely to alter this setting is of more than passing concern to thousands of former visitors, as well as to residents.

When the Neapolitan advertises, with the sloganeer's modesty, "See Naples and then die," he has in mind, of course, the city and surroundings taken as a whole. The city alone, although the largest and most populous in the Italian peninsula, is a hodge-podge of narrow streets and tenement houses, teeming with life and gaiety; sordid, yet possessed with a vast vitality. In buildings and monuments of historic and artistic interest, however, Naples cannot vie with the towns of central and northern Italy.

Naples is comparatively young among cities of the Mediterranean. In the eighth century B. C. Greek colonists from the near-by city of Kyme recognized the superior advantages of its great half-moon bay and laid the foundations for later Roman settlements. In time the district became the favorite residence of Roman magnates. Augustus frequently resided at Naples and Virgil completed some of his most beautiful poetry here.

Before the days of a united Italy, Naples was the capital of the kingdom of Naples. A large royal palace, with white marble stairways and a throne room filled with art treasures, bears witness to its former imperial wealth. Today Naples is Italy's most important seaport, connected by fast steamship lines with every part of the globe. Its streets are lined with factories, large and small, while the surrounding farm districts are fertile and productive. As a tourist center it is surpassed, probably, only by Paris.

Dirty But Picturesque.

For all its commercialism, dirt and squalor, however, Naples is extremely picturesque. Rising in amphitheater fashion on the slopes of the hills in the northeast corner of the bay of Naples the city is full of quaint, steep streets, where broad steps take the place of the slab paving of the downtown thoroughfares. Following the cholera epidemic in 1884 many of the narrow streets and high balconied tenement houses were replaced with broad avenues and standard buildings.

It is in the remaining canyon streets, however, that one finds the most typical Neapolitan scenes. All Naples lives outdoors—to cook, to work, to play, to gossip, and almost to dress! Street singers with their mandolins, charcoal sellers and venders of sweets and drinks add their colorful, bits to the daily pageantry. Macaroni factories line the streets of the eastern part of the city, the fringes of marconi on racks collecting a little of the dust every passing automobile and push cart stirs up.

For whatever the city lacks in neatness and beauty, its famous bay more than makes amends. The bay of Naples is a yardstick of marine perfection. Few who have seen the bay of Naples will grant that it is eclipsed elsewhere for spacious and perfect loveliness. Its dreamy headlands and the incomparable contour of Vesuvius in the center at once distinguish and sublimate it.

Fascinating to Visitors.

Many lovers of Italy feel that a country like Tuscany, with its softer colorings and gentler contours, is more restful and somehow more wholesome to live with, and that the Neapolitan scenery is too much like theater curtains come to life. Nevertheless, every person who arrives at Naples under fair skies and beholds this littoral for the first time cannot help being affected by its loveliness.

Many of the visitors feel something deeper than admiration; for them all of the coast scenery from Miseno to Salerno has a strange and lasting fascination. Then there are the siren worshipers who have heard the mystic song and are content to let body and soul rest here forever; and to such willing victims of the picturesque, Naples is not a noisy, nerve-racking modern city, full of beggars and rogues and fleas; it is the old "new city"—Neapolis.

In the bay of Naples the very atmosphere, to such Neapolitan specialists, seems more bland and limpid than elsewhere on the peninsula, lending to the distances a more magical and haunting charm; the curving shore is picked out and decorated with countless beauties, and high mountains descend abruptly to a tideless sea streaked with color, in which are set ethereal lilac-tinted islands.

From the Monastery of San Martino, overlooking Naples, a picture spectacle is spread. The great, blue, half-moon bay, dotted with red and white sails, and surrounded by a mountainous coast line, which fringes off into the Mediterranean at each end in rocky islets, looks more like a stage curtain than a reality. It is Vesuvius that "makes" the bay of Naples.

Lovely Colors on the Bay.

From Vesuvius, with the ruins of Pompeii at its base, the eye follows the curving shore line to the mountainous Sorrento peninsula, purple and hazy in the distance, ending with rocky crags of the Island of Capri. At sunset the colors are so rich, and at the same time so soft, it seems hardly possible that they are real. The bay is a rippling sheet of gray and green and blue. The rocky headlands and islands are the softest and most delicate lavender. A rolling stream of purple smoke rises from the crater of Vesuvius and floats across the sky, while, in the background, billowy pink clouds catch the last rays of the blood-red sun as it drops into the Mediterranean.

To many observers the fairest of the Neapolitan gems is the Island of Capri that lies in the blue waters just off the tip of the Sorrentine peninsula. From high in air to below the waterline the island is scarred and pitted with myriad vast pockmarks, some pillared with stalactites and stalagmites, some through which the never-quiet sea moans and sobs with the agonized wail of a hurt monster; one white, with little pools of pure, sweet water on its floor, only a few inches above the sea; one greener than emerald; one blue as heaven with row upon row of delicate pink corals and tiny scarlet jelly-fish studding the waterline like jewels, while the refraction of the sunlight tints everything with the most marvelously diaphanous color, through which the silvery ripples of the bottom sand, about 40 feet below, seem within arm's length.

Back on the mainland, the traveler can find beauties along this delightful coast even south of the bay. As he drives up over the crest of the Sorrentine peninsula the Siren islands loom in the distance, too far away for even the echo of the charmers' song to be heard. At Positano the road divides into two white ribbons, binding the town to the green hillside.

Scenes Along the Coast.

On by the caves of troglodytes, who have all the comforts of home—little patches of garden, amiable goats, olive groves, and grape-arbors—the road winds in and out, up and down the stern face of the cliffs, rising and sinking in great billowy sweeps, plunging hastily through short, black tunnels, racing around big and little bends. Now it skirts the shoulder of a cliff, with only an 18-inch wall between the wheels and the boulders hundreds of feet below.

Picturesque watch-towers stud the shore, ancient defenses against the Barbary corsairs. And then presently Amalfi, once the brave little maritime republic that maintained its independence so long in defiance of princes and emperors. In a low cleft of the hills the houses fairly pile upon one another, as though there were not room for them all on the hillside. Back on the mist-veiled crags loom the towns, and all day long, down the road that winds dizzily among the peaks, come old women and young girls, staggering under heavy loads of fagots gathered in the woods above the clouds. And when they are not carrying fagots they are always knitting—even when there is no war!—on the streets, in shops, gardens, fishing boats on the beach, gossiping by the fountain before the long stair that leads to the stately black and white and mosaic Cathedral of St. Andrew.

MILL WORKER BENEFITED

Picked Up After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Towanda, Pa.—"I was working in a silk mill and got so tired and rundown that I weighed only 89 pounds. I was not well enough to do my work. As soon as I began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to pick up. After being married for thirteen years, I had a baby boy and the next year I had another boy who now weighs 37 pounds and is healthy as a bear. The Vegetable Compound has helped me in a dozen ways and I hope others will try it too."—Mrs. C. B. Johnson, Webb Street, R. D. #6, Towanda, Pennsylvania.

Red Hot Mamma

Elinor Glyn at a Los Angeles tea was condemning modern morals.

"For these morals," she said, "it isn't our young folks, but their parents, who are to blame.

"A young chap was sitting beside a pretty girl in the moonlight.

"'If I kiss you,' he said, 'will you call your mother?'

"The girl laughed rather bitterly.

"'Gee,' she said, 'ma comes without calling if there's any kissing on the bourds.'"

From the Appearances

"I'm wearing my new gown this evening. Where do you think we should go?"

"Swimming."—Grit.

You are right, Alonzo. A breach-of-promise suit is a court dress.

Debt That World Owes to English Naturalist

The first man to dream of trenting the sea as a gigantic food farm was the famous English naturalist Frank Buckland, who was born in 1826 and died in 1880. During the last 20 years of his life he never tired of impressing upon his countrymen the importance of the fisheries and the need for wider knowledge of the habits of fish. He was the first to look ahead and conceive the idea of fish culture.

Though it is usually caught in rivers, the salmon is really a sea fish. It ascends the rivers to spawn, and the young salmon spends two years of its life in fresh water before going down to the sea.

Buckland found that nature's methods in the breeding of salmon were extraordinarily wasteful, not more than perhaps one egg in 10,000 ever producing a fish that grew to maturity. By introducing a scientific system he was able to bring about a wonderful increase in many of our great fisheries, and it is largely due to his early work that the salmon has been introduced successfully into such distant countries as New Zealand.—London Tit-Bits.

Glass-Bottomed Boat Fast

Fitted with a glass bottom for the study of the sea floor, a scientific ark will soon take to the shallow Pacific waters, along the Oregon shore. Running aground has no terrors for this strange craft, for it can crawl along the bottom propelled by four caterpillar treads like those of a tractor, says Popular Science Monthly. Its speed is 50 feet a minute. The boat is the invention of G. F. McGowan of Portland, Ore. It is 42 feet long, and is powered with a 75 horse power gasoline motor.

One's bungalow should at least be big enough to show one gable end from the midst of its mantle of vines.

Restless CHILDREN

CHILDREN will fret, often for no apparent reason. But there's always Castoria! Harmless as the recipe on the wrapper; mild and bland as it tastes. But its gentle action soothes a youngster more surely than a more powerful medicine.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given the tiniest infant—as often as there is need. In cases of colic, diarrhea or similar disturbance, it is invaluable. A coated tongue calls for just a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset—this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed.

Fletcher's CASTORIA

Bright Postcard

The "wisht you was here" picture postcards would be more tolerable to the slaves left in the office if all the girls on vacation who send them were as bright as the one who inscribed under a picture of a flock of sea gulls plying their voracious vocation the simple miltgrossian line "Grittings from de wolking gull."

Happy Woman Tells How She Lost 19 Pounds of Fat in 27 Days

During October a woman in Montana wrote—"My first bottle of Kruschen Salts lasted almost 4 weeks and during that time I lost 19 pounds of fat—Kruschen is all you claim for it—I feel better than I have for years."

Here's the recipe that banishes fat and brings into blossom all the natural attractiveness that every woman possesses.

Every morning take one half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast.

Be sure and do this every morning for "It's the little daily dose that takes off the fat."—Don't miss a morning. The Kruschen habit means that every particle of poisonous waste matter and harmful acids and gases are expelled from the system.

At the same time the stomach, liver kidneys and bowels are toned up and the pure, fresh blood containing Nature's six life-giving salts are carried to every organ, gland, nerve and fibre of the body and this is followed by "that Kruschen feeling" of energetic health and activity that is reflected in bright eyes, clear skin, cheerful vivacity and charming figure.

If you want to lose fat with speed get an 85c bottle of Kruschen Salts from any live druggist anywhere in America with the distinct understanding that you must be satisfied with results or money back.

Many a self-made man blames the job on his wife.

Most "original sin" is very unoriginal; in fact, downright stupid.

Skin Protection

SUN, wind and weather tend to roughen the skin. Protect it by using Cuticura Soap every day and Cuticura Ointment as needed. Nothing better for keeping the skin smooth, soft and clear. Cuticura Talcum is pure, smooth and fragrant, an ideal toilet powder.

Soap 25c. Ointment 25c. and 50c. Talcum 25c.

This fall we can look for jack frosts and political frosts, killing frosts, if you please.

Your popularity with some people dwindles away when you fail to hue to their chalk line.

If you want your home town to provide plenty of jobs, better patronize home town business.

"You can't be a friend of mine as long as you are a friend of my enemies,"—aw come on and loosen up.

The people who save money by not advertising, are frequently able also to save clerk hire owing to the small size of their business.

Speaking of having a mind of your own, people not only have their minds changed by others, but actually loose the whole darned thing.

Bear in mind, son, you are not going to make any advancement worthy of mention in this life without a good healthy fight. One fight will be from within and the other from without.

The people who can always remember the home town paper when they want something printed, should also remember it when they have some interesting piece of news to communicate.

Christian brotherhood isn't poison, destructive, or injurious in any way. It's a part of the christian plan. It's a slice of the same watermelon. If the brotherhood movement is dangerous, then so are the churches and the ministers that have been among us for lo these many years.

It seems that ignorance is in just as great a demand in some places as truth and knowledge are in other places. Smart men are not in demand where truth and veracity would lead to an intellectual disclosure of overt and burning questions of the day. Where ignorance is made a defense of persons or organizations beset by it—ignorant men are in demand.

A recent authority on crops states that the dry weather of his last summer was a blessing in diguise. The world's supply or surplus of wheat and other products are a greater draw back than adverse weather conditions. The shortage in the corn crop of this year, due to drought can be said to be a good thing considering the surplus in wheat, which can be substituted for corn in many cases, and which will remove the wheat surplus and thus restore the market which has dwindled below the cost of production. The English and Canadian wheat growers have the same yell as does the American farmer. The big western wheat growers and the Russian growers are largely responsible for the wheat surplus which the small American grower did not have to contend with in years gone by. A shortage in crops is most always a good thing instead of a calamity.

A Contrast

Much of the criticism now being leveled at the electric industry is reminiscent of the "trust busting" era of twenty years ago.

It is argued that a utility, merely by growing beyond a certain point, presents a danger to the public interest. Yet mass production of electricity has been one of the leading factors in the development of our industrial civilization.

The American people have a distinct memory of the time, not long ago, when they were served by small companies providing uncertain service at a comparatively high cost. They remember the frequent shut-downs and the endless dissatisfaction.

Contrast these conditions with those of the present, when almost all communities, even the smallest are provided with a high standard of 24-hour-a-day service at the lowest rate in history. The industry's record of expansion shows a hundred per cent increase in the number of customers and 1929. It is one of the principal employers, taxpayers and purchasers of commodities of all kinds.

The industry's budget for 1930 has been increased to the record total of $1,000,481,000. Every one of us will benefit from this expenditure, in better and broader service, in industrial expansion, in stimulated employment.

Ten Years of Woman Suffrage

At next November's election, the women of America will have been voting 10 years. People will have differing opinions about the results of this great change in politics and sex relations.

The most glowing and roseate predictions, also the most direful and gloomy forecasts, were made as to the effects on woman suffrage. Some prophets said that the higher idealism of women would sweep through our debased political life as a cleansing force, abolishing many evils tolerated by the too materalistic men.

On the other hand it was claimed that women would be coarsened and contaminated, they would neglect their homes, husbands, children, and many husbands and wives would quarrel so violently over politics that many divorces would follow.

The impartial observer laughs today, as he views the non-fulfillment of both kinds of predictions. He finds the homes as peaceful and well regulated as ever. If there is more marital infelicity, it is not because the women are absorbed in politics. Indeed, the main criticism of their political relatons, is that they are too indifferent, and that it is hard to induce them to vote.

And on the other hand, if politics is less hard boiled, the ordinary observer fails to notice it. In many cases women's point of view has done good, in many instances their inexperience of politics has led to mistakes. One is inclined to say with wise old Ecclesiastes the preacher, "the thing which hath been is that which shall be, and there is nothing new under the sun."

The majority of women apparently wanted the suffrage. As life in America is an equal partnership, the men felt that therefore they were entitled to it, regardless of what results might follow. Both women and men are gradually learning to vote with judgment, though both sexes neglect political duties to a deplorable degree. But anyway, if things go wrong now, the men don't have to take the whole blame.

The Third Degree

By W. H. COLCLOUGH

"Go on, Jackson, go on! I tell you there is no use losing two lives. We are lost, hopelessly lost. We can't both get out—I am an old man with only a few years left to live, anyway."

Jackson weakened under the battery of the old man's logic. Nevertheless, he continued to register protests.

"We can surely make it," he said. "I can't leave you, Mr. Burton. Let's struggle on together. You know these woods and I will help you."

"No Jackson, we are done for. Go on without me—go straight south. I don't know how far, but I know that's the direction. Go south and you will come to a river. Follow it the way the stream flows and you will be sure to come to a hunter's cabin. Stay there until morning. Then get help, and come back here—back track and get my body."

The old man wheezed his commands. He staggered.

"Well, Mr. Burton, I don't like to leave you this way, and—"

"Go, Jackson," said Mr. Burton. "You haven't long. The storm's increasing. Leave me here. Tell them you were game, but that I sent you away. Hurry, Jackson."

Jackson gripped the old man's hand and turned toward the trackless south and safety. In twenty paces he stopped. He couldn't leave him. What would people say? What would the men at the office say? Besides, this was a coward's trick. It wasn't the Law of the North.

Why did they get into this fix anyway? Mr. Burton was supposed to be the best woodsman in this part of the Canadian Northland, and hunted here year after year. That is how it happened that Jackson, a young executive in Burton's big plant, had accepted an invitation to go moose hunting. Burton was old, but he was experienced—used to hunting without bothering about a guide in this territory.

But the unexpected had happened. Night was coming. They had been lost for several hours, and the old man was exhausted. And what had started as a drizzling rain gave promise of turning into snow before morning.

Yes—it seemed as if he had a right to the chance for his life, but—

In two minutes he was back beside the old man.

"Mr. Burton—I'm not going. You can say what you like, but we stay together, and if we go out, we'll go out together."

"You fool, Jackson," the old man argued. "You must go!"

But Jackson proceeded to break off such spruce bows as he could gather and make a rude shelter under the trees.

It was cold. No fire. Garments soaked. The old man trembling. Up north the howling of a wolf. In three seconds, an answer strangely and menacingly near echoed through the woods. A large tree not far away split with a sound like a rifle. They huddled together as best they could for warmth. Jackson shivered. The old man stirred.

"Jackson, I hear bells," he said. "Listen, Jackson! Don't you hear bells? Let's try again, Jackson. I think I know, now, how to get out of this place."

Vainly Jackson tried to pacify the older man and point out to him the futility of trying to find the way through a Canadian forest at night. Any hunter, even a tenderfoot, knows the impossibility of such a task.

But the old man, president of a large business organization and used to having his orders promptly obeyed, insisted.

"I'll stay here," Jackson thought, "and let the old fool go on alone. He's crazy now." And he let Burton start off through the darkness.

But in a few minutes Jackson was following him.

"Look, Jackson, there's a light."

"Yes, a light, Mr. Burton." He might as well humor the wanderings of the half-crazed mind.

But—what was it? There was a light. Were they both crazy now? wondered Jackson as they stumbled on through the forest. It was a real light that shone and beckoned through the trees.

Then he felt a strange change come over the tottering old man. He straightened up and with resolute step marched toward the light. In ten paces they were in a small clearing. In the center stood a cabin with smoke pouring from its stove-pipe chimney. A wolf-like dog lifted his muzzle toward the sky and uttered a long-drawn howl and then went, with rattling chain, to his kennel.

Jackson pinched himself to see if he were awake. The door of the hut flew open. As Mr. Burton tramped in Jackson saw a middle-aged man in shirt sleeves smoking his pipe.

"You're late, chief," he said. "I was afraid you were lost—" "No, no, Brown," said Burton, "I sure wasn't lost. You couldn't get lost with Broncho howling like a wolf every few minutes the way she always does when I am out in the woods, even if I didn't know my way around this country as well as I do. No, Brown, I wasn't lost, but I had with me a young man I want to make manager of my western branch. I was testing him out. And, Brown, he'll do. I tell you he'll do, Brown."

HIT BY AUTOMOBILE

Ward Woodcox is limping about caused by being run into Tuesday afternoon by an automobile driven by Mrs. Hattie Widney. Ward and Pete Milliman had been doing work at the Curie farm and were on their way to town. The men were walking on the right hand side of the road and were near the Harvey Kimes home, when the car came up from the south, striking Ward, who was back of Mr. Milliman, throwing him over and injuring his leg and head. His tools were scattered about, while Mr. Milliman, who was just ahead was not hit.

Mrs. Widney was enroute home from market at Fort Wayne.

THE FUNERAL, in character, thought and purpose, becomes your bestowal of final care and kindliness, the last practical evidence of your love and respect: more than just alone a necessary procedure. That is the high ideal to which we adhere in the funeral service we offer. That, too, should be your ideal. That too should be your entire reason for preferably engaging our funeral service. And despite our higher standard of practices and perfect fulfillment in every detail, our charges are reasonably moderate. Our every feature is of greater advantage to those who choose us when the need for a mortician arises.

Why Mention of Thrift Grates on Auto Driver

Charlie when he had his other car developed a system that saved him a lot of pennies—perhaps as many as 100 in the months he labored with it. Charlie lives in a street off Main street, in Montello, where it is possible to coast the length of it because of the grade, and ride right into his garage. Faithfully he always turned off his ignition at the head of his street and saved gasoline the rest of the way.

Recently when fortune smiled on him, he traded for a new car. On his first trip home with it from the club at night he turned off the ignition and coasted down the hill. However, he forgot that the new motor was equipped with a gimmick which automatically locks the steering wheel when the ignition is shut off.

Just as Charlie was about to turn into his street the front wheels failed to answer his tug and he rammed a telephone pole with the right fender before he could bring the machine to a stop.

"It'll cost at least a sawbuck to straighten that out," he moaned, "and all to save a little gasoline."—Brockton Enterprise.

Significance in Name Clemens Made Immortal

Probably the best known nom de plume ever adopted by an American writer is that of Samuel Clemens, "Mark Twain." Usually it is regarded as just a proper name, chosen by the humorist from a book or some family record, as most such names are chosen. But the fact is that it wasn't a proper name at all until Clemens made it such, says the Golden Book Magazine, which tells the story:

"From the carefree days of his life on the Mississippi, Clemens passed to setting type on his brother's newspaper, to piloting a steamboat, and to wandering in the West. Shortly after, he began writing articles for a Nevada paper—clever, fun-poking skits. It was in 1863 that he first adopted the name of Mark Twain. 'I want to sign them Mark Twain,' he wrote. 'It is an old river term, a leadman's call, signifying two fathoms or 12 feet. It has a richness about it; it was always pleasant for a pilot to hear on a dark night; it meant safe water.'"

Women Geographers

The Society of Woman Geographers is a society, organized in 1925, by a group who felt that there should be some medium of contact between women distinguished in geographical work and its allied sciences—ethnology, archeology, botany, natural history, sociology, folklore, arts and crafts, etc. For active membership in this society only those women are eligible who have done distinctive work whereby they have added to the world's store of knowledge concerning the countries in which they have traveled. Corresponding members are those who fulfill the requirements for active membership, but who reside outside the United States of America and Canada. The associate membership admits widely traveled women who are interested in furthering all forms of geographical exploration and research.

Ancient Norwegian Town

Voss is situated about sixty miles from Bergen by rail and resembles very much the "Ostlandet," as the eastern part of Norway is called, being broader and having many pine woods. Voss is a very old village; how old is not quite certain. The inhabitants were christened in 1023, according to Snorre's Heimskringla, by Olav the Saint. The name occurs before that in the old sagas, and is once mentioned as a kingdom. There is a famous old stone church in the town proper and a Finne, a short distance from the railroad station, there stands the oldest wooden building in Norway, a so-called Finne-loft. The town itself is usually spoken of as Vangen, and the surrounding uplands as Voss, although the latter name is generally used for either.

Report Bad Driving

AND SAVE LIVES

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

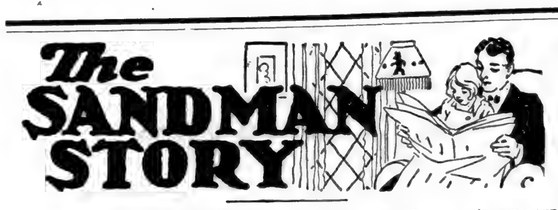
The SANDMAN STORY



MURIEL'S NEW TOOTH

FIRST there was one tooth missing. Then another.

And then a third.

All these three were missing from Muriel's mouth. They were all missing from the upper row of teeth. Muriel had lost a lower tooth some time before but another tooth had come now in its place.

But there were three teeth still missing. When Muriel laughed it seemed as though she thought things funnier than ever. It was such a funny laugh when three teeth were missing.

Not only was it a laugh and a grin

Peter Gnome Went to Take a Peek at Muriel.

and a smile out it was an expression which said:

"My mouth thinks things are funny, too. See my mouth with its three missing teeth laugh!"

If you will look the next time you see a little girl with three missing teeth (if you have that fine opportunity) laughing, you will see how much more of a laugh it is than the laugh of anyone else.

Or, if you happen to have three teeth missing at one time yourself, just take a look in the mirror, and you'll laugh to see yourself laugh.

Then, one day, came the signs of a new little tooth where a tooth was missing. It was just peeping forth. It looked like a jagged little tooth, but it would be all right when it grew.

Muriel used to put her soft, smooth little pink-red tongue where the tooth was appearing as though to say:

"Hello, tooth, I see you're on your way."

And the tooth would scratch Muriel's tongue ever so slightly and seem to be saying:

"Yes, here I'm coming along. Do you feel me?"

But only if you looked very closely at Muriel's mouth, could you see the new little tooth. You could still see the three missing teeth—or, rather you could see the places where three teeth had been.

And you could just barely see the little new tooth peeping out from its gum home.

One night after Muriel had gone to sleep Peter Gnome came to take a look at her.

You know that Peter Gnome loves children. Years ago there was one naughty little gnome and he caused a great deal of trouble.

Just as at one time there was a naughty member of the Bogey family.

They did such harm, for people went around and said that there was a naughty bogey man who would catch children if they didn't watch out, and that gnomes were up to all sorts of mischief.

There weren't any other naughty bogeys or gnomes, and the two of these who were naughty were sorry they had been naughty after they had seen the trouble they caused. From then on every bogey and every gnome promises as soon as it begins to go about, that never, never will one of them disgrace the family names again.

And they wouldn't, for they love children, and it hurts them terribly to think that they're punished for the naughty things of years ago by having people think they're mean and cross, too.

Well, Peter Gnome went to take a peep at Muriel when she was fast asleep.

Gently he lifted Muriel's upper lip just a little, and then he smiled.

There had been no jokes. No one had said anything funny. There had been no laughter.

But even while Muriel was asleep the three missing teeth—or the places where the three teeth had been—grinned in such a funny, funny way, that Peter Gnome smiled from one ear to the other. That was something he was able to do only when things were particularly funny. But just before he left he noticed the new little tooth.

"You're almost a joke of a tooth," he said, "but I suppose you will be a real tooth by and by."

POLICE PUT END TO ACTIVITIES OF GIRL DESPERADO

Newark (N. J.) Child Became Thief to "Help Support Family."

Newark, N. J.—A small girl fell into the hands of Newark police and with her calm admission that at the age of eleven she is adept at shoplifting and burglary, presented Newark correction authorities with a problem in juvenile delinquency.

Two weeks ago the girl was seen climbing on the fire escape of a large apartment building, in which a series of petty thefts have been reported recently, and was warned by the superintendent, James Kustura, to stay away. A few days later, when Kustura saw her climb down the fire escape from the roof and enter a fifth-floor apartment he notified police headquarters. Two detectives found the girl ransacking a bureau.

Record of Burglaries.

She made no attempt to deny her guilt, but gave police a full account of her induction into the business of thievery, and readily admitted six burglaries in the apartment house.

Two years ago, when she was nine, a girl of fourteen took her to a 5 and 10-cent store and showed her how to be a shoplifter, she said. She devised a scheme for entering apartments. She would ring a door bell, and if there was an answer she said she was looking for work, taking care of a baby. If there were no answer she tried to get to the roof and then down to the apartment.

Worked for Cash.

Her object always was cash. Jewelry and other articles did not attract her.

The girl was taken to the parental home, charged with juvenile delinquency.

The girl said she was the youngest of five children and had robbed to help support the family. She told her mother she got the money by caring for babies.

Huge Shark Tows Eight Men in Boat Out to Sea

Atlantic City, N. J.—A shark that weighed 1,200 pounds and measured 13 feet 6 inches towed a fishing boat with eight men aboard nearly three miles out beyond the fishing banks off Beach Haven Crest, fought desperately for more than an hour to free himself of a noose about his neck and was not subdued until it had been harpooned 15 times and shot three times with a .22-caliber rifle.

When Capt. Tunis Bohen, skipper of the Beach Haven Crest Fishing company, and his crew towed the shark's body back to Beach Haven Crest and opened it, it yielded five bushels of mackerel, bonita and weak fish. A woman's shoe was found in the stomach.

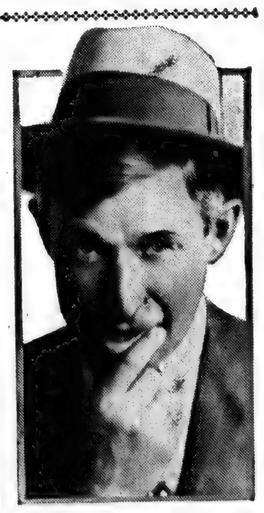
Snake Bite Just Part of Day's Work for Him

Port Jervis, N. Y.—As he picked huckleberries in Bear swamp in Sussex county, N. J., recently William McKean was bitten by a rattlesnake coiled beneath a bush. Killing the rattler, McKean cut away with a pocket knife the flesh around the wound above his left kneecap. Then, with his companions, he walked through the brush to their car and drove to Branchville, N. J., where antivenom treatment was obtained. After resting a few hours McKean returned to the swamp. He brought 70 quarts of huckleberries with him when he returned to his home.

Rare Presence of Mind Saves Railroader's Life

Whitehall, N. Y.—Ralph Wescott, twenty-five years old, of Whitehall, can tell of how he was run over by a locomotive. Wescott, a railroad employee, stepped into the path of a switch engine and was knocked down. He lay prone between the rails and the locomotive passed over him without harming him.

Will Rogers



One of the most popular stars in pictures, having become famous years ago as a stage actor. He made his first appearance in vaudeville in New York in 1905. After making several "big time" tours he joined Ziegfeld's Follies and other productions. His mother wanted him to be a minister. He is well known as an author and is stamped as the most popular comedian of the day. He was born at Oologah, Indian territory, in 1879. He learned to ride and rope while on a ranch in Oklahoma.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

CONSCIENCE

DEEP within the heart lies that important, unique and invisible thing called conscience. Robert Browning speaks of conscience as "The great beacon light God sets in all."

The poet Byron tells us that it is "The oracle of God." Channing, at the age of six, was about to strike a tortoise, when he heard a voice speaking to him. His appeal to his mother for an explanation called forth the statement that "It was the voice of God." George Washington called conscience "A little spark of celestial fire." Perhaps one of the best definitions of conscience is "Enlightened reason."

L. A. Barrett.

No person can run away from his conscience any more than he can run away from himself. Victor Hugo wrote a poem entitled "Cain." In this poem he describes the efforts of Cain to flee from an eye which followed him wherever he went. All attempts to shut out the eye failed. The last resort to shut out the eye was to build a tower with "strong granite for the canvas wall and every block clamped with iron chains. The walls were thick as mountains." But "The eye was in the tomb and fixed on Cain." The light of conscience burns within one's own heart. From its searching light no person can escape.

Conscience demands justice. The beautiful story of "The Scarlet Letter" by Hawthorne illustrates this fact as does also the story of "Ahab." When caught and convicted of stealing from Naboth's vineyard he cried: "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" To the gate of the vineyard the guilty king rushed in order to take the stolen property. "He found standing at the gate, waiting for him, black, motionless, grim, an incarnate conscience, the prophet that he last saw on Mount Carmel."

There is a story of a king who possessed a ring of great value. This ring had the power to prick the king with a sharp scratch whenever he entertained evil thoughts. Upon one occasion, when he contemplated an unusually wrong deed, the ring gave him such an exceedingly sharp prick that it brought blood to his finger; whereupon the king threw the ring away. Better to have kept the ring and heeded its warnings. This would have been a wiser act than throwing it away, for no person can run away from his conscience.

Lesson for July 6.

When called to go out from his own country and kindred, Abraham believed God and obeyed his command. True faith is proved by unquestioned obedience.

Lesson for July 13.

Jacob, a crafty schemer, through discipline at God's hands, became Israel, a prince with God. Before he could enter the Promised Land a change must take place. Self-will must be broken before there can be confidence in God.

Lesson for July 20.

Moses, educated first at his mother's knee and then at Pharaoh's court, was forced to flee from Egypt because of a premature effort to deliver the enslaved people. Forty years of training in the wilderness was necessary before he was ready to hear God's call.

Lesson for July 27.

In the time of national emergency, there being no man to judge Israel, Deborah was called to take this place. God bestows his grace upon whomsoever he will, regardless of sex.

Lesson for August 3.

Ruth chose to cast her lot with God's people. This choice brought her not only salvation but earthly blessings. Ruth's relationship to Naomi shows the vital fellowship centered in the God of Israel. National prejudices, hatred, and strife disappear on the part of those who are united in Jesus Christ.

Lesson for August 10.

Hannah asked God to give her a son, promising to dedicate him to God's service. God heard her prayer and she named her son Samuel, which means "asked of God." Samuel in his tender years was given to God, and he rendered a distinguished service for many years.

Lesson for August 17.

Saul was a man of fine gifts and had a great opportunity, but made a dismal failure because his heart was not right toward God. He had more concern for his own honor and welfare than for the glory of God. God is more concerned with having his commands obeyed than he is with the offering of sacrifices.

Lesson for August 24.

Friendship between David and Jonathan has been immortalized. This friendship was unique in that it took place between two men of rival interests. Jonathan was the natural heir to the throne, but David was God's choice. Jonathan knew this and magnanimously waived his rights.

Lesson for August 31.

Amos, a humble herdsman, was called from his life as God's prophet to stand before the king. He was not a prophet by succession nor was he trained in the schools. God selects his servants from even the humblest walks of life.

Lesson for September 7.

Josiah, the young king, was loyal to God. Two wicked kings had preceded him, during whose reigns God's law was lost. God put it into his heart to inaugurate a reformation, and in the process of restoring the temple, the law was found. When it was read before him, the king rent his clothes, and proceeded to institute his reforms on the basis of God's word.

Lesson for September 14.

Jeremiah, having heard God's call in his early years, zealously carried on his ministry. He called upon individuals to face their responsibility before God, assuring them that they would not be judged on the basis of racial heritage. Every man shall give an account of himself to God.

Lesson for September 21.

Jonah, a Jew, was called to preach repentance to a Gentile city. He sought to escape his responsibility by fleeing to Tarshish. God prepared a fish to swallow him. This was the means of his chastisement and return to his own land. After chastisement he was recommissioned. At his preaching the city repented, putting on their sackcloth and ashes. God is not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance.

PRESCRIPTION in use over 47 Years Really Helps Bowels

Don't you want this way of making the bowels behave? A doctor's way to make the bowels move so well that you feel better all over! Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin doesn't turn everything to water, but cleans out all that hard waste clogging your system. It cleans you out without any shock, for it's only fresh laxative herbs a famous doctor found so good for the bowels, combined with pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients.

A doctor should know what is best for the bowels. Let Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin show you how soon you can train the bowels to move freely, every day, the way they should. It's wonderful the way this prescription works, but it's perfectly harmless; so you can use it whenever a coated tongue or sick headache tells you that you're bilious. Fine for children, too (it tastes so nice) and they ought to have a spoonful the minute they seem fretful, feverish, or sluggish, or have a sallow look.

You can get the original prescription Dr. Caldwell wrote so many years ago; your druggist keeps it all ready in big bottles. Just ask for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and use it always for constipation.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

DOGS SEE SPIRITS

THAT the old superstition that dogs can "see spirits" is by no means extinct, even among people whose culture one would have supposed to have long outgrown it, is evidenced by the fact that at one of Eusapia Palladino's "seances" Hereward Carrington, a skeptical researcher in psychological field, brought a dog into the room on the chance that it might see, and give evidence of seeing, by its actions, the disembodied spirits, if any, which Eusapia claimed to be able to summon about her.

This is evidently a survival from classic times; a reminiscence of the fable myth of the double-headed (sometimes triple-headed) dog Cerberus whose business it was to guard the entrance to "the abode of shades." The supposition is rendered more probable from the fact that in one form of the superstition, apparently the older form, it is only dogs with double dewclaws who are possessed of the supernatural quality of "spirit-seeing." The superstition is older than the myth of Cerberus, undoubtedly having its origin with primitive man whose dog exhibited the traits which have descended to the pointer and setter.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

OUR WORD "ATTIRE"

HERE is a word which is interesting, particularly because, speaking metaphorically, of the undertones and overtones echoing from its commonly accepted meaning.

"Attire" we understand to mean "to dress." Actually, however, in its original sense, in the French, from which we get the word, "attire" conveyed the thought of "to attract," which, aside from the primary motive of protection against the elements, became the secondary purpose of dressing.

So today our word "attire" really combines both these ideas; that is, "to dress" and "to attract," the latter connotation being one that we undoubtedly have always associated with the word and which has always been part of it from the very beginning of its use.

Dear Editor:

NOWADAYS everybody is trying to be young. We just spent a weekend with a man who is gray haired but happy and his wife who is half-starved and slender and pathetically afraid of looking her years.

I can see several advantages in growing old. For one thing, you can meet Santa Claus halfway. Instead of waiting and being surprised with a gift you don't want, you can discuss matters with your relatives and get gifts you need and like.

For another thing, I haven't had to sit and listen to a ukelele for a long long while. This alone would reconcile me to my added years.

When you're young you are continually meeting disappointments because your hair doesn't lie flat or because the painter spills some paint on your sidewalk or because the salad has too much oil. When you grow older you know that nothing is ever as good as it ought to be, and so you're always prepared for the worst. It's a sane viewpoint to take. At least, it seems so to me today.—Fred Barton.

THE STORY

Renewing a childhood attachment, Ernestine Briceland, of a wealthy family, is attracted by Will Todd, newspaper artist, son of a carpenter. Ernestine's sister, Lillian, knowing their father would disapprove, urges her to end the affair, but Ernestine refuses. They make a runaway marriage. Briceland is furious, but helpless, as Ernestine is of age. Loring Hamilton, lawyer, wins Lillian's consent to be his wife. Will and Ernestine begin their married life in a single room in a humble neighborhood. John Poole, Will's best friend, gives a birthday party for Ernestine at Ruby Pastano's resort. Pastano irritates Ernestine by criticizing Will for bringing her to such a place. Conscious of approaching motherhood, Ernestine opens a savings account. Will's father dies suddenly. Lillian and Loring are married. Will's mother dies immediately after the birth of Ernestine's baby. Changes in Will's office fail to bring advancement and Ernestine again is looking forward to motherhood. Pastano acquires a summer home near that of the Bricelands.

"It would be nice," said Ernestine vaguely, feeling hurt because she had not known about papa, or the stone merger—feeling out of things, "but I want to be with Will."

In July they went to Langley lake, where Lillian was established and where somehow she appropriated the role of hostess, although it was not her house any more than it was Ernestine's. Will refused to worry about the Pastanos living on the point, and Ernestine saw that he lacked her own snobbish prejudices about the lake colony. He took Peter and went to visit the Greeks the first morning he was there, and stayed all day, romping with the young Pastanos, teasing Alexandria, who adored him, and eating Madame Pastano's pickled fish.

Ernestine had asked John Poole to come down for the two Sundays they were at the lake. She had come to love the man as much as Will did, and had grown into the way of ignoring his bad habits. He was admirably sober the first Sunday he came down to them, and Will and Poole spent the day in the wood path and on the water, making ridiculous sketches in the sand, carrying Peter about with them.

But the second Sunday was a day of misfortunes. Ernestine was ill and could scarcely rise that morning, and it seemed to her that Will was impatient and unsympathetic.

Loring telephoned that he had stripped his gears and put the car in the garage. He would have to come on the train, and Ernestine realized with dismay that John Poole would be with him. Lillian brought the two from the station in her car. John Poole was already fuddled with drink and elaborately polite, and it was easily seen that Loring was in a state of nervous exasperation. His face was flushed, his brow furrowed.

"I've got to go right over to Pastano's to see a man that's coming out there today," he said to Lillian as soon as they had had Sunday dinner.

"If you are going to see Ruby, I'll go with you," said Mr. Poole. "I have a most important matter to discuss with Mr. Pastano. 'Most important. He has a nephew—yes, I know"—as Will laughed—"he has forty-seven nephews—but this is a most particular one. This boy is to study modeling. He is to be the exception—an artist in a family of clever criminals. I'm to see Mrs. Pastano about him. I'll go with you."

He rose and took a familiar hold on Loring's arm.

"Will can take you over in the boat, after while," Loring said, "I must hurry, and Pastano can't talk to both of us at once."

"No, I want to go with you," insisted Mr. Poole.

Loring no longer made the faintest effort to conceal his disgust.

"Your desire is unrequited," he said, and Will laughed and came around the table to his friend and boss and took hold of him.

"You're coming with me, you old war-horse," he said. "You're drunk. I'll wager you haven't done a lick of work all week. We'll go over to see Ruby after while. Loring doesn't want you, John, so come along with me."

John Poole turned and detained Loring who was trying to escape.

"You don't want me?"

"No," said Loring nervously. "I've had enough of you—too much. I don't ever want to see you again as long as I live."

"Come outside and fight with me, and I will beat you, and then we'll go to Pastano's—together."

Loring was furious. "I won't fight with you—you old fool!—Will, for G—d's sake, take him off me. Why did you bring him down here, anyhow?"

"Don't be so hard with him," said Will, smiling wanly. "He's got a little money—he might come in handy some day. You've changed your mind about friends of mine before—Pastano and Wiston, for instance."

Loring turned to Lillian who stood, silent and grave, by her table. "If this is what I am to expect here it's the last Sunday I come down."

Will flushed. "So Ernestine is intruding now?" he said slowly. "Perhaps you have already consummated your intention of cheating her out of her privileges in this house as elsewhere—"

"Anybody could cheat Ernestine," exclaimed Loring. "She was cheated once and for good when she married you. She ruined her life then, and now she must endure anything because she lacks protection and is handicapped to boot."

Will took a step forward, his big hand raised, and though he still smiled his face was evil. He spoke low and rapidly, and with an indescribable effect of vituperation:

"You great big stuffed shirt—you imitation—you safe-player and bribe-taker, you! You coveter! Do you think I don't know what's the matter with you?"

There was a pause which lasted indefinitely. Loring had swollen to rage, and then he had collapsed, until he stood looking at Will with a dreadful, haunted face.

It was strange, Ernestine thought afterward, that none of them felt, even then, that Loring was afraid of Will. There was some other element which gave Will tremendous advantage. Before the blaze in Will's eyes, before his cursing breathless phrases, Loring fell into a strange dejection. The two men looked at each other in the stillness that swirled around them all. Will turned at last to Ernestine.

"Go get your things, kitten, and get the baby ready," he said in a gentle voice. "We'll all go back together. I'll go to the hotel and get a taxi to take us to the depot. We can get the afternoon train. Gather your things up again, John."

With tears running down her face, Ernestine obeyed him. Loring went off, cursing under his breath, and Mr. Poole followed him to shout unheeded threats and maledictions. Lillian helped Ernestine to get ready, both of them crying.

"It's the end," said Ernestine. "We can never see each other again now. Our lives are separated indefinitely," and Lillian was thinking, "What will mamma say?"

"I'll call you up, when I get in town. Write to me, Ernestine. Don't let them tear us apart—"

"My life is with Will—yours with Loring," said Ernestine, and wept afresh, trying to stem the tears, trying not to care, but feeling the nervous, uncontrollable necessity for weeping.

In the train, going back to Chicago, she still cried now and then. "Why does Loring hate us so?" she asked at last in a low tone. "Especially me? Why does he hate me? He seems to want to wound me, to strike at me. He's done it before. But I've never harmed him. Why does he hate me, Will?"

"Hate you?" exclaimed Will, and looked at her strangely, his dark bright eyes searching her pale face for guile. "He doesn't hate you, Ernestine. But forget him—I'm glad something has happened. They've only made us unhappy, anyhow."

* * * * * * * *

It was nice to be home again. Ernestine went about her little house with a feeling of comfort and joy.

Will was not due at the office until the end of the week, but on Monday, as Ernestine was finishing up a washing for the baby, he got dressed to go downtown. As she kissed him goodby and watched him go, then turned back to the routine of home, Ernestine felt a sense of well-being blot out yesterday's turmoil. She resolved not to think about it, nor to worry.

It seemed to her that Will had barely had time to go to town and come back again before he stood in the kitchen doorway, his eyes upon her with such a look in them that she gave a little cry and her hand flew to her throat.

"Will—what's happened?"

He put his hat down slowly. He hung his head, unable to speak to her, but at last he got it out.

"I've lost my job."

"Will—"

He said no more.

"Tell me—what happened?".

"Craps."

Ernestine sat down weakly in a chair by the kitchen table and gave a foolish-sounding laugh.

"Unarm, Eros—" she exclaimed and grinned at him. "I'm glad. You would never have quit, and now you'll get a job where they'll appreciate you."

"Ernestine!" he said, and choked. "I'll make good for you—I will! You'll see—some day."

* * * * * * * *

Mr. Poole had not been at the office when Will was dismissed by Mr. Wiston. It was some days before he learned the details and gave them to Ernestine. The fellows had all surrounded Will with affectionate greeting on his arrival in the office unexpectedly. They had at once planned to eat supper in a crowd. Somebody produced dice to determine immediately who would have to pay. They squatted on their heels in a close ring between the sloping desks, and Tommy Tucker cried a fierce schoolboy "jiggers" at them. Will held the dice, and he straightened up and turned about boldly rattling the cubes in his big hand, and faced Mr. Wiston.

Mr. Wiston made quick work of him, almost, it seemed to Will, or so he said, as though he were glad of the chance. Within ten minutes after his arrival, Will walked out of the Sun offices, his possessions, done up in a paper package, under his arm, while half a dozen indignant but futile youngsters mourned after him.

But John Poole would not have it.

"You fire my help and you fire me," he told Wiston, and he left bag and baggage.

Nobody had thought of this. Mr. Wiston remonstrated with him, but nothing would satisfy John Poole except Will's reinstatement, and that Wiston would not concede.

So Will had added to his own anxieties a sense of responsibility about John Poole, of concern over Ernestine's break with that part of her family which was in or near Chicago.

Mr. Poole let it be known in newspaper circles that he and his assistant were available, but to his astonishment he had no offers. He was old, he had been identified with the Sun for many years. The Sun's rivals were busy developing their own artists and establishing them. It was only a year or two longer, it was said, for John Poole, and anyhow he would probably be back at the Sun within a month.

Patti Only Member of Fair Sex at Banquet

In 1859 Adelina Patti made her debut at the Academy of Music in New York in "Lucia," says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle Magazine. Not since Jenny Lind had a singer so captivated her audience. To the end of their lives many of her admirers insisted that she was the last one entitled to be called "la diva."

Twenty-five years later, in 1884, Patti again sang at the academy. To her honor a banquet was planned by a number of prominent New York men, including Judge Daly, William Steinway and Nathan Stetson. Naturally the wives of these men were expected to be present, but they virtuously refused to sit at the table with Patti, who had been divorced from her first husband, the Marquis De Caux, and married to Nicolini, the Italian tenor.

Extremely embarrassed, the gentlemen sent a committee to put the case to Mme. Patti as delicately as possible, and ask her if she would consent to be the guest of themselves only. Patti consented unhesitatingly, and she was the only woman present at a party of some seventy masculine admirers, in the ballroom of the Hotel Brunswick.

Date From Colonial Times

The Pennsylvania Dutch are descended from Germans who settled in Pennsylvania during the Colonial period. They began to migrate to Pennsylvania about the time the Quakers did. Many of them were from the Rhenish Palatinate. It has been estimated that in the years 1708 and 1709, more than 30,000 Germans went to England, and were transported to America in English ships.

J. Waddy Tate, the "hot dog" mayor, said at a dinner in Dallas:

"The post-war son thinks himself superior to his pre-war father. Well, he's superior in general dissipation, and that's about all.

"A cop went with a pre-war father to bail out his post-war son the other morning, and on the way to the station house the father said good-naturedly:

"'O, my boy George is all right. Just like me, in fact. The only difference between us is that when I put in a day's work I don't feel much like runnin' round at night, and when George puts in a night's runnin' round he don't feel much like workin' next day.'"—Detroit Free Press.

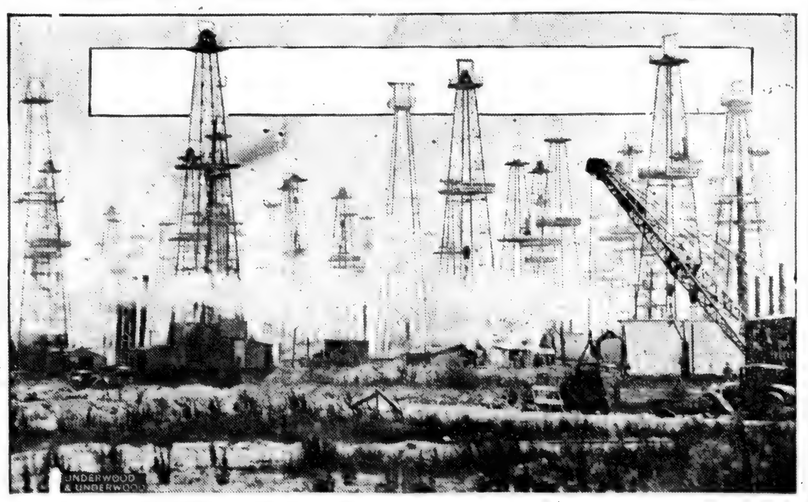
This Was "Worthless" Land a Few Months Ago

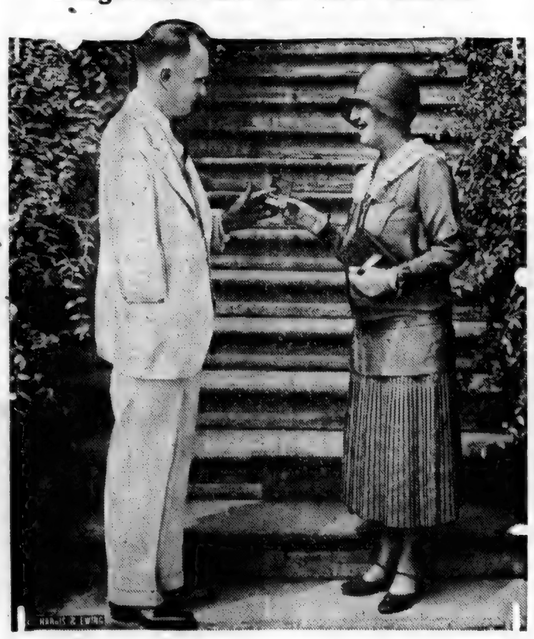


View of the new oil field at Venice, one of the busiest in southern California, where new wells are being spudded every day and not a dry hole has been drilled. A few months ago this was practically "worthless" land, waiting for a real estate boom.

Ancestral Home of Lees to Be National Shrine

Stratford Hall, ancestral home of the Lee family in Westmoreland county, Virginia, which is to become a national shrine in memory of Gen. Robert E. Lee. The house was built in 1729 by Thomas Lee, two of whose sons signed the Declaration of Independence, and two of whom served in the first constitutional convention. The estate was also the home of Lighthorse Harry Lee of Washington's army, and of his son, Robert E. Lee.

Forget-Me-Nots for Mrs. Hoover



Capt. Fred Kochli, D. S. C., representing the Disabled American Veterans, called at the White House to present Mrs. Hoover with a pair of forget-me-nots, to be worn by President and Mrs. Hoover on Armistice day in honor of the dead and disabled of the World war.

Opium Seized on an Oriental Liner

United States customs officers seized opium valued at $34,500 during a search of the Dollar liner President Jefferson after its arrival in San Francisco. The dope, packed in 300 tins, was found after a search that covered the entire vessel.

SOLDIER RULES PERU

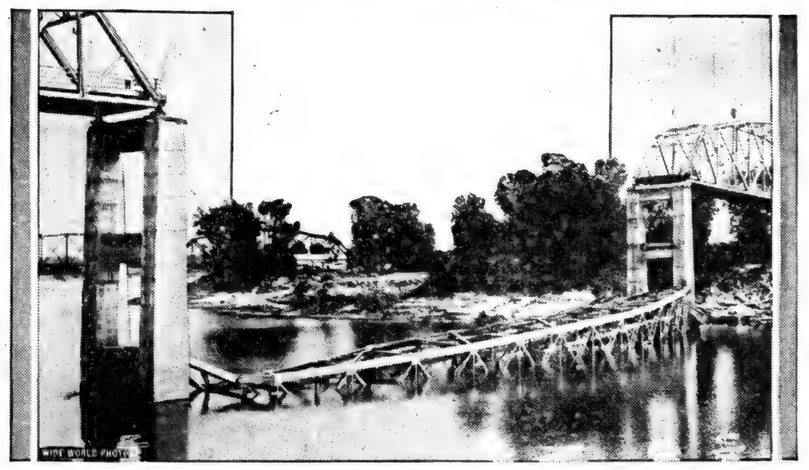
New Bridge Dynamited; Labor Troubles Blamed



The new $500,000 concrete and steel highway bridge over the Red river at Garland City, Ark., after it was wrecked by four charges of dynamite. Explosives set under each corner of the span and expertly timed hurled the 300-foot span into 35 feet of water. It is said that labor trouble was the cause of the dynamiting.

Her Work Was Never Done

A. J. Dunlap

The old farm had an awful lot
For women-folks to do;
No matter how Ma managed things,
Her work was never through.
Three times each day the hungry ate;
Three times each day they dined,
And spoiled the labor of her hands,
And left a wreck behind.

A baby with a throbbing tooth,
Would always fuss and fret,
When springtime came with rugs to beat
And clucking hens to set;
And weekly wash-day rolled around,
And days of ironing, too,
And if she paused to rest at all,
She'd patch a shirt or two.

The bards too long have paused to place
The chaplet on the brow,
And sung the praises of the man
Behind the sturdy plow.
The time has come to recognize
The value and the charm
Of her who fed the hungry men
And chickens on the farm.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, OCT. 2, 1930 — NUMBER 40

KINDNESS PROBABLY SAVED LIVES OF FORT WAYNE COUPLE

A luncheon invitation was believed last Tuesday to have saved the lives of an elderly Ft. Wayne couple.

Wednesday they received a scribbled note with a Chicago postmark from a stranger who had ridden with them recently from Celina, Ohio, to Fort Wayne.

"Look under the rear seat of your car," the note read. "And you will find a revolver with which I intended killing you in order to get your money and the car for a drive to Chicago.

"I got chicken hearted because of your kindness and decided not to harm you and lead a straight life in the future."

The gun, a .38 calibre revolver, was found under the seat, and it was believed the man had put it there after eating lunch with them upon their invitation.. He was roughly dressed, the couple said, and had virtually forced himself upon them when they stopped at a melon stand near Celina.

Does this incident prove anything relative to curbing of vice? In many cases crimes have been averted by deeds of kindness—in many other cases crimes have been committed because of lack of kindness or direct result of inhuman treatment. Most crimes and criminals are the result of hard noses, and hard boiled, mean people who wont go to the trouble of using the man of the world decent and human.

REV. STOLL CHOSEN AS ASSOCIATION OFFICER

The first meeting of the year of the DeKalb County Ministerial association met Monday at 10 A. M., in the Y. M. C. A. O. B. Noren, the president, during the past year, was in charge. Newly elected officers are as follows: President, G. D. Stoll of Spencerville, dent, G. D. Stoll of Spencerville, and secretary - treasurer Donald Dunkin of Garrett

A program committee consisting of Ernest Lewellyn, O. B. Noren and O. R. Keller was appointed.

Heretofore the association has met monthly in the Y. M. C. A. The meetings this year will be held in the various churches throughout the county. The order of meeting will be a general discussion hour at 4 P. M. the last Monday in each month. This is to be followed by a luncheon and a general mass meeting at 7:30. Various preachers will speak from time to time in the mass meeting. This meeting is open to the general public. The next meeting will be held in the Waterloo United Brethren Church.

INCREASE IN FIRE LOSS IN INDIANA DURING YEAR

Indianapolis, Sept. 30.—Fire loss in Indiana increased $576,321 during the fiscal year just closing as compared with last year, according to a report prepared yesterday by Alfred M. Hogston, state fire marshal.

Total loss for the fiscal year ending October 1, 1930, was $8,602,988, as compared with $8,026,667 for the year ending October 1, 1929.

Despite the higher loss, the number of fires decreased 1,037, Mr. Hogston's report showed. There were 3,968 fires this year and 5,005 last year.

The report showed a reduction both in the number and cost of fires in cities of more than 5,000 population. The increases were in small towns and rural communities.

HIGH'S RESTAURANT MOVED MONDAY

High's Restaurant, St. Joe, managed by Mr. and Mrs. Fred High for three years, has been moved to Spencerville, where they will assist Mr. and Mrs. Chas. High in caring for their place of business, due to their failing health.

We are indeed sorry to have them leave the business circle of St. Joe, but of course they are doing the one and only thing.

During their business career at this place they have financed every public undertaking very liberally and have always proved themselves as loyal boosters.

We wish them success in returning to their home town and home people.

FLAT TIRE PUTS CAR IN DITCH

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Hull had a narrow escape from being seriously injured, Monday evening on their return home from South Bend, when a rear tire went down and they landed in the ditch, top down, just east of where the old Hines saw mill was located some years ago, on the Auburn road.

When the tire went down the car began to swing sideways and before it could be stopped it had turned across the road, striking the berm, and it upset into the ditch on the south side of the road.

The car was closed, and after they got their bearings they each crawled out their window. Mrs. Hull being bumped in the neck by the collapsible seat and receiving several scratches, while Mr. Hull escaped uninjured.

The car had a front wheel smashed, fender bent slightly, a dent in the top of the radiator and a dent in the side of the top, the body escaped without a scratch.

Ernest Steward, of Spencerville came along just after the accident happened and sent Mrs. Hull back to Auburn and he came on into St. Joe and notified the Hanna Garage to go to the scene of the accident.

The car was towed into the garage for repairs and Mr. and Mrs. Hull are about their work after their exciting experience.

"THIRTY YEARS AGO" WITH SOME VARIATIONS

Under the title "Thirty Years Ago" the Buzz Saw publishes the following:

Fourth of July lasted from two or three weeks before until two or three weeks after.

Nobody advertised.

We put our shirts on over our heads.

Nobody wore a wrist watch.

Women didn't vote.

Anybody could hitch up a horse.

There were no water meters.

A maid cost two-fifty a week.

"Bootleg" signified a tall glass of beer.

Everybody had tonsils and kept them.

Nobody had appendicitis.

A five-cent cigar was a cigar.

We collected cigarette pictures.

And tobaco tags.

And stamps.

And catnip.

Everybody kept a dog, and who didn't keep a cat

And a lot more people kept the Sabbath.

* * * *

We want to add:

We took baths in the kitchen in the washtub.

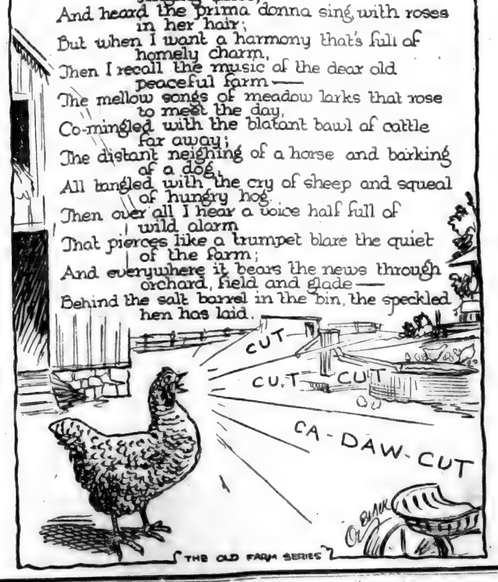
Slept on straw ticks.

Carried a lantern on the dashboard of the spring wagon.

Music of the Farm

by A. J. Dunlap

They talk about the music of the far off host of stars,
Of songs the winding river sings across its sandy bars.
I've heard the echo in the hills of breezes singing there,
And heard the prima donna sing with roses in her hair;
But when I want a harmony that's full of homely charm,
Then I recall the music of the dear old peaceful farm——
The mellow songs of meadow larks that rose to meet the day,
Co-mingled with the blatant bawl of cattle far away;
The distant neighing of a horse and barking of a dog,
All tangled with the cry of sheep and squeal of hungry hog;
Then over all I hear a voice half full of wild alarm
That pierces like a trumpet blare the quiet of the farm;
And everywhere it bears the news through orchard, field and glade——
Behind the salt barrel in the bin, the speckled hen has laid.



Drove through mud, loose rocks or dust most of the time.

Drank out of shallow wells, and nearly everybody had bowel trouble in the summer time.

Ironed with flatirons heated on a hot kitchen stove.

Calico was five cents a yard and looked worse.

Women wore corsets from their hips almost to their necks, and those corsets were seldom washed. No wonder they had to wear corset covers.

Everybody kept a dog and cat; that' the truth, but not the whole truth. Nearly everybody kept a cow, some chickens or pigs, or maybe all three. And flies—

Maybe a lot more people did keep the Sabbath 30 years ago, we won't argue; but at least a lot more people are keeping it today because they want to and not because they are forced to, or because there is no place else to go. —Tri-State Mason, Cincinnati, O.

And with all these things we now call handicaps the people of thirty years ago were contented and happy, call it "ignorance and bliss" if you want to but the chief source of people's dissatisfaction now days is that people know too much, or think they do. Good time in those days didn't cost a year's salary and had the effect.

UNION RALLY DAY SERVICE AT CONCORD

One hundred and twenty-five attended the Sunday School at Concord, Sunday morning, when St. Joe and Harlan congregations were counted in with them in the Rally Day service.

The morning program was of interest. The review of the quarter was conducted by persons selected to review high spots of certain assigned characters, and it proved quite interesting to the audience, as review lessons are not liked by the average scholar.

The secretary tallied 125 in classes and the offering amounted to $8.41. After the talk by the pastor, the pot luck dinner was spread in the basement and everyone enjoyed the good eats and the meeting of the members of the three churches.

The afternoon program was of a miscellaneous nature and the appearance of the children made it rather entertaining. Some special numbers were furnished by several members from the Springfield Lutheran Church of near Harlan, which was greatly appreciated by the audience.

Many people came for the afternoon program only.

Among the out of town guests were Mrs. Josie VanFleit and Frank Smith, of Garrett. Mr. Smith is conductor on the B. & O., and this event afforded them both an opportunity of seeing many old friends of former years.

SAYS THAT WILL ROGERS IS JUST A GROWN UP BOY

Will Rogers is just a grown up boy, according to Betty, his wife, who has given her first interview to the American Magazine.

"Clothes mean nothing to him," says Mrs. Rogers. "If he heard that the Prince of Wales might be in pajamas and slippers, he would run across the street and say 'Hello, Prince. How are you'?"

Will can never remember where he has put important papers. Mrs. Rogers has to find them for him.

He seldom has any money in his pockets .

He is 50 years old and gets along with less than seven hours sleep.

He reads all the newspapers in town at breakfast and throws them on the floor as fast as he has finished with them.

He owns a hurdy-gurdy, piano, violin, banjo, drum, mandolin and guitar and can't play any of them. But he still tries.

He is always late to meals except breakfast. He eats anything, usually. Just now he is dieting. His diet consists of huge platefuls of sliced onions. Somebody told him onions would make him thin. Dinner is his most important meal, for then he begins his visit with the children from school.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Leighty of Washington, D. C., are here for a few days during the apple harvest. They spent last week in Wisconsin, arriving here Monday.

E. R. Kinsey is making a trip today (Thuraday) to Holgate with a load of furniture for Glen Wineland. Glen is at present working at H. K. Tower, but expects to take work at Holgate soon, He will soon be married to a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Scott of Auburn and will start housekeeping in Ohio.

HOGG TO ADDRESS SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS IN AUBURN

Arrangements are complete for the first of the fall and winter activities of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education. The initial meeting will be held in the Auburn First Presbyterian Church on the afternoon of October 5th starting at 2 o'clock.

David Hogg, of Fort Wayne, member of congress from the twelfth district, will be the speaker. The music will be furnished by the County Young People's Choral Society.

Ward Jackman of Auburn, county president, will preside.

During the week of October 13 to 17 the annual Leadership Training school will be held in the Y. M. C. A. Rev. Donald Dunkin, pastor of the Garrett Baptist Church, will be dean of the school.

This year three courses will be held instead of four as has been customary. Under the leadership of Miss Pauline Roth, of Fort Wayne, "Principals of Teaching" will be the study subject. The second course will be a study of the Old Testament conducted by Rev. B. M. Bechdolt, pastor of the Garrett First M. E. Church, and the third study will be "The Life of Jesus" which will be conducted by Dean Dunkin.

The county school will draw its scholarship from Sunday Schools from all over DeKalb county.

Tomato and Cottage Cheese Make Tasty Sandwhich

Cottage Cheese and Tomato Salad.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A substantial salad, with bread, crackers, rolls, biscuits, muffins, or toast, followed by a simple dessert, is ample for a hot weather luncheon. Iced tea or a fruit drink completes a meal that can be eaten either indoors or out, and that will be sufficiently attractive for guests.

The salad illustrated in the picture is appropriate for a luncheon of this kind. It consists of a mound of cottage cheese on lettuce leaves, surrounded by sections of tomato and topped with a spoonful of mayonnaise dressing. The lettuce should be washed thoroughly and crisped in the refrigerator for several hours in a clean cloth or paper bag. Cut each tomato into sections at the time you are ready to arrange the salad on individual plates. The following recipe for mayonnaise is from the bureau of economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mayonnaise Dressing.

1 egg yolk
¾ to 1 cup oil
2 tbs. lemon juice or vinegar
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
Paprika
½ tsp. sugar

Mix the spices. Add one tablespoonful of the acid, which may be either lemon juice or vinegar or a combination of the two. Add the egg yolk and beat slightly. Then begin adding oil, about a teaspoonful or two at a time, and beat thoroughly. Continue adding oil until a heavy mixture is formed. The remainder of the acid may be worked in, as the mixture becomes very thick. Do not use more than one cup of oil with one egg yolk.

Tomato Preserves Liked for Lunches and Supper

Haven't you often wondered just how the delicious preserves of little yellow, pear-shaped tomatoes were made? Here's a recipe from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. You will find these preserves very acceptable for lunches and supper as an accompaniment to cream cheese and crackers.

4 lbs. yellow, pear-shaped tomatoes
6 lbs. sugar
1½ quarts water
2 lemons, thinly sliced, with seeds removed
4 to 6 pieces ginger root

Cook the lemons until the skin is tender in one pint of water. Boil together the remaining water and sugar to make a sirup, and drop in the tomatoes, ginger root, and the cooked lemon rind and liquid. Boil until the tomatoes are somewhat clear and the sirup thick. Remove the scum and pour the preserves into hot sterilized glass jars. Seal and store in a cool dry place.

FAIRY TALE FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"I think I am to be congratulated more than any of you," said the egg beater in the kitchen.

"And why?" asked all the pots and pans as they creaked a little.

"Because," said the egg beater, "the reason is so simple. You can see for yourselves." And it turned around a little.

"Do tell us, we don't see," said the frying pan.

"Very well," said the egg beater, "I will tell you. In the first place—think of my name."

And the tins and pans thought, but they came to no decision as to why the egg beater's name should make them understand why it was so fine.

They had always been so used to seeing the egg beater that they really had not thought much about it.

"We give up," they said. "You will have to tell us."

"Very well," said the egg beater. "I will tell you. You see, my name means that I beat eggs.

"But not only do I beat eggs. I beat cream and all other things they wish to whip into a fine, fluffy state."

"True enough," agreed the other pots and pans.

"But you see," continued the egg beater, "the wonderful part is that I am not cross.

"Imagine being used only as a beater. Imagine forever whipping everything that comes near you.

"Isn't that enough to make an egg beater cross? But, I ask, am I cross?"

And all the pots and pans creaked and said:

"No; you are not cross."

"Then," said the egg beater, "it only goes to show that my disposition is quite perfect.

"Even whipping and beating everything that comes my way does not make me cross."

"You have a fine disposition," they all agreed. "And you don't let yourself be ruled by what you have to do.

"My Disposition Is Quite Perfect."

"You might be cross and horrid and always blame it on the fact that you whip everything.

"Yes; you should be congratulated."

The egg beater felt very happy, but the cheese grater was speaking now.

"Listen to me," said the cheese grater, "and think of what my name means."

"What?" asked the others.

"It means I am greater than anything else. No other pot or tin pan is named by my name."

"Oh," chuckled the gravy spoon, a big, good-natured, easy-going spoon, "you don't understand at all."

"What don't I understand?" asked the cheese grater.

"You don't understand that your kind of a grater does not mean the same as a greater person or a greater object.

"Oh, no; none of us should become conceited. Let's all just be friendly, nice pots and pans and kitchen things."

And all the others creaked in agreement and thought this was a very good idea.

Two Classes of Canned Food Approved

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The housewife will have a choice of two classes of canned foods under the amendment to the federal food and drug act enacted by congress and just signed by the President, says W. G. Campbell, chief of the food and drug administration, United States Department of Agriculture.

This amendment, known as the "Canners' bill," authorizes the secretary of agriculture to promulgate from time to time reasonable standards of quality, condition, and fill of container for each generic class of canned food except meat and meat products and canned milk. Such standards are now being formulated by the department. The law also authorizes the secretary to prescribe a form of statement which will clearly differentiate substandard articles from those which meet the standards.

The value of this law to the housewife will be the assurance that the canned foods she purchases meet a definite standard established by a government agency, Mr. Campbell points out. The amendment will not constitute a bar to the manufacture and sale of wholesale canned foods of a quality lower than the standard, but such products must be labeled informatively so that if the housewife wishes a less expensive canned product she will be able to buy it with full knowledge of its character—presumably at a lower price—and with full assurance that it is a wholesome product and neither adulterated nor misbranded.

Distinguish Rayon From Silk by Burning Test

Rayon may be distinguished from silk or wool by the burning test, says Marion Weller of the home economics division of the University of Minnesota. Rayon burns as cotton burns, with a flash and the odor of burning paper, leaving a gray ash residue. Wool and silk burn slowly, the flame easily going out, the residue a black hard globule, and the odor like that of burning hair.

"Rayon is so much cheaper than silk that it is often taken for granted it need not be handled with as much care," says Miss Weller. "If the highest satisfaction is to be obtained, rayon fabrics should be laundered with the same care given to silk. There was a time when rayon would go to pieces or dissolve in water, but one of the recent improvements in its manufacture is in its 'washability.' As a result, one of the principal uses for rayon at the present time is in hosiery and underwear, both of which require frequent laundering.

"Rayon has found a permanent place in the fabric field and the consumer should learn to recognize its characteristics and uses."

Sorrowful Fact

It is a statistical fact that the wicked work harder to reach hell than the righteous do to enter heaven.—H. W. Shaw.

REVIVAL OF STIFF SILKS IS NOTED IN EVENING FASHIONS

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

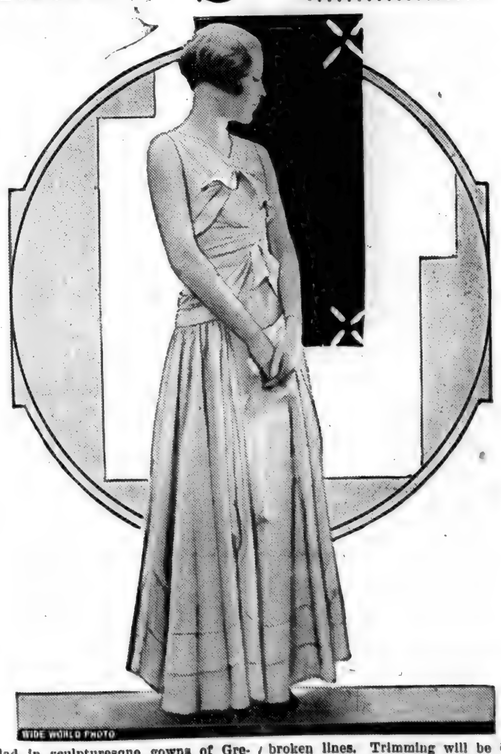
Stiff silks are coming into vogue again. Thus in the realm of fabrics as in all phases of the mode, old fashions are becoming new fashions. We are even going to use pile velvets again, not, however, to the exclusion of the filmy, sheer, transparent velvets which have captured the heart of the feminine world. As to satin, which has taken a new lease on life, it also shows a tendency to an increasing firmness of texture.

This favor for stiff, crisp silks is reflected in the many taffeta gowns which the couture of Paris is creating for dine and dance wear, especially for the younger set. The pretty dress in the picture is typical of the quaint and youthful styling given to taffeta. It is an entrancing French model made more so in that the designer works the taffeta in two colors—pink and blue.

This favor for rich materials is having its effect on the styling of the new gowns or is it that the adoption of formal, classic and majestic "lines" demand the more elegant weaves? Be that as it may, formal dress is declaring an era of sophisticated simplicity in which richness of fabric is made the theme paramount.

It would almost seem as if the exquisitely simple styling which is so smartly in vogue for the evening mode is resolving itself into two distinct types—the quaint old-fashioned silhouettes for the youthful party frock, versus the stately and the classic for the more mature.

The former is bringing in such charming effects as the off-the-shoulder decolletage of mid-victorian days and full-all-around skirts whose hemlines are even all around. The new flowered taffetas and printed satins are "darling" made up in these "period" frocks.



WIDE WORLD PHOTO

As to majestic femininity it will be clad in sculpturesque gowns of Grecian inspiration. Rich materials will fall of their own weight in simple unbroken lines. Trimming will be conspicuous by its absence. The satin dress will appear to the eye utterly simple, but in actual construction, it will be a labyrinth of intricate seaming and expert fabric manipulation.

English Poets Laureate

We know of no prohibition which prevents the selection of a woman as poet laureate of England, says a writer in the Washington Star, except the fact that there is no precedent for such choice, and there probably is no woman whose work is sufficiently notable to make such a selection possible. In theory the choice is said to be made by the prime minister.

TESTED RECIPES THAT WILL BE LIKED BY THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The world goes up and the world goes down
And the sunshine follows the rain,
And yesterday's sneer and yesterday's frown
Can never come over again.
—Charles Kingsley.

Southern Spicy Gingerbread.—Add two beaten eggs to three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, three-fourths cupful each of shortening and molasses, the shortening melted. Then add two and one-half cupfuls of flour sifted with two teaspoonfuls of soda, two teaspoonfuls of ginger, one and one-half teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, one-half teaspoonful each of cloves, nutmeg and baking powder. Mix and add one cupful of boiling water. Bake in a shallow pan or in individual pans. Served with whipped cream it makes a party dessert.

Tomato Juice Cocktail. — Strain canned tomatoes—you know the vitamins in tomatoes are still active in the cooked vegetable. Press the pulp lightly to extract all the juice. To three cupfuls of the pulp add the juice of half a lemon, one tablespoonful of sugar, a whiff of celery salt and paprika to taste, a little pepper and salt. Put into a shaker with half as much ice and shake vigorously. Serve in cocktail glasses with tiny sandwiches of whole wheat bread.

The Best Gingerbread.—Take one-half cupful of melted shortening—lard is good—one teaspoonful of salt, a tablespoonful of ginger, one cupful of sugar and one cupful of molasses, one scant teaspoonful of soda, dissolved in one cupful of boiling water. To three cupfuls of flour add the dry ingredients. Beat one egg, add the sugar, then all the other ingredients and mix well, add the boiling water in which the soda has been stirred at the last. Bake in a sheet or in gem pans. This is always good.

Potato Salad.—Take a pint of diced freshly cooked potatoes. Cook the potatoes with their jackets on, then peel them and cut into dice. Add a cupful of celery, a small chopped onion, salt and pepper to season and enough french dressing to moisten well—not enough to drain before finishing the salad. When ready to serve add a handful of blanched and shredded almonds and a diced cucumber. Add plenty of mayonnaise and serve.

Ginger Ale Julep.—Put one and a half cupfuls of granulated sugar into a pitcher, add the strained juice of six large lemons, stir until the sugar is dissolved. Chill on ice. Shake with cracked ice and chill well. Add one-half dozen bruised mint leaves, add two pint bottles of ginger ale and serve in glasses of ice. Garnish each glass with frosted mint. Dip sprays of mint into egg white thinned with a little water, then dip into powdered or finely granulated sugar.

Banana Bread Pudding.—Break three slices of bread into small pieces, pour over this two cupfuls of hot milk and one-half cupful of sugar; let it soak. Add two beaten egg whites. Slice three bananas into a pudding dish and pour over the mixture. Bake for half an hour. Serve hot with:

Mousseline Sauce.—Boil one-half cupful of sugar, one beaten egg, and cook until it coats the spoon. Flavor to taste, add one-half cupful of whipped cream when the mixture is chilled and serve cold.

Compote of Pears.—Take six pears, one and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one pint of cranberries and one cupful of water. Peel, core and quarter the pears. Cut up the cranberries, add water to cook, strain the juice and add the sugar. Boil, add the pears and cook them until tender but not broken; they should be a clear pink. Lift into a glass dish, boil the sirup until thick and pour around the pears. Serve with whipped cream.

General Lee Cake.—This is a fine sponge cake made as usual and baked in layers. Spread with the whites of two eggs beaten stiff, one pound of powdered sugar, the grated rind of one orange and the juice of one orange and one-half of a lemon. Spread on the cake before it is cold.

Ornamental Frosting.—Place in a double boiler the whites of two eggs, four tablespoonfuls of cold water; place over hot water and beat while heating until the frosting is stiff. Flavor with one-half tablespoonful of vanilla. This is an icing which may be used in a pastry tube to decorate cakes and fancy cookies.

Party Sandwich Rolls.—Use fresh bread. Cut slices thin as possible and remove the crust. Lay crisp lettuce leaves that have been dipped into mayonnaise on the slices. On top put shavings of boiled ham, roll up and fasten with a toothpick. Garnish with pickles and radishes.

Appleade.—Take a glass of apple jelly, dissolve and add lemon juice and sugar if needed. Chill and serve, adding iced water and a sprig of mint to each glass.

Kitchen Is Cozy Place to Serve Meals; Saves Many Steps

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When the kitchen is very large, common sense dictates that some of the meals be eaten at one side of the room rather than that the homemaker should be obliged to take many extra steps to serve them all in the dining room. This was the usual way of living in most old-fashioned country homes where a roomy kitchen was the center of many household activities. It often had a sewing corner, a reading corner, a play place for the smallest children where their mother could watch them while she worked, and a corner or side where all but the most formal meals were served.

One reason for this sensible plan was, of course, the pleasant warmth given out by the kitchen stove in winter time. Probably more consideration was given to this point than to saving the mother, but she benefited, nevertheless. The chief mistake made in the old-fashioned many-purpose kitchen was likely to be in placing the meal table somewhere in the center of the room.

The picture taken by the United States Department of Agriculture in a farm home shows how attractive a dining corner in the kitchen may be if a little thought is given to it. The chairs and table did not originally belong together. They were made harmonious with gay colored paint. Simple curtains, suitable for kitchen surroundings, have been hung at the window. With a runner and a bowl of flowers this dining center makes a pleasing spot in the room for the homemaker's eye to rest on while her hands are busy.

New York's Visitors

The Merchants' Association of New York, in a recent report, reveals that more than 800,000 visitors attended the hundreds of trade expositions and conventions held in the city during last year. The theaters, hotels, stores and restaurants benefited to the extent of some $75,000,000 spent by the out-of-towners.

To Change River's Course

Work has begun on changing the course of the Gelenig river in western Victoria, Australia, so that it will run through the wheat and sheep country of the Wimmers district. The project calls for a 25-mile channel through mountains.

The violet being innately modest, can't be made much larger than it is by the florists.

Makes Life Sweeter

Children's stomachs sour, and need an anti-acid. Keep their systems sweet with Phillips Milk of Magnesia!

When tongue or breath tells of acid condition—correct it with a spoonful of Phillips. Most men and women have been comforted by this universal sweetener—more mothers should invoke its aid for their children. It is a pleasant thing to take, yet neutralizes more acid than the harsher things too often employed for the purpose. No household should be without it.

Phillips is the genuine, prescriptional product physicians endorse for general use; the name is important. "Milk of Magnesia" has been the U. S. registered trade mark of the Charles H. Phillips Chemical Co. and its predecessor Charles H. Phillips since 1875.

The SANDMAN STORY

DEXTER'S CIRCUS DREAM

IF YOU asked little Dexter what he loved above everything else in the world he would say: "The circus."

If you asked him why, he would say:

"Because every year it is bigger and better than ever."

To be sure that was what the bills said before the circus came and it was what everyone said, every time, about the circus after they had seen it.

There was something about Dexter that there is about everyone—a real love of the circus.

Dexter, maybe, loves it more than anyone, though when I think about it I am sure there are just hundreds and hundreds of people—big, small and in-between people—who will say:

"He doesn't love it any more than I do."

Now, one night Dexter had a dream and as it was one of the loveliest dreams ever a lad had, and as Dexter loves to share with others, you will hear of this dream.

"Greetings, Our Best Circus Greetings, Dexter," They Said.

In his dream he thought he was in a beautiful field with soft, warm grass uopn which to lie and, above was the blue sky with the sun shining brightly down.

As he sat down in this beautiful field he heard the sound of music and it sounded to him like a band.

And then he thought he heard the sound of tramping feet.

The music came nearer and nearer. Dexter rushed toward the direction from which it seemed to come.

And there, before him, was a circus parade.

The elephants were there, swinging their trunks.

There were cages in which were sea lions, tigers, lions, leopards, a rhinoceros, a hippopotamus and her baby, and monkeys and many, many other animals.

There were giraffes. There were beautiful ladies riding in handsome chariots and upon lovely ponies.

There were many, many clowns.

There was the band, and in front of all was the drum major, very handsomely dressed, and performing in a splendid manner.

As they approached Dexter they bowed. Even the animals bowed.

"Greetings, our best circus greetings, Dexter," they said.

Then they went into the field, with Dexter running along beside them.

First he went along by the members of the band, then by the animals, then by the clowns, then back to the band, then to the ladies.

They were all so wonderful.

"We're going to give you a private show," they said. "We are going to have a whole, three-ringed show, just for you."

So Dexter sat now at one end of the field and all the clowns and animals and horseback riders and trapeze performers set to work to fix everything right, and then performed their tricks.

They bowed before Dexter and he clapped and clapped. Oh, it was so wonderful having a circus just for himself alone.

Yet, he did keep thinking how he wished his different friends could be with him. They would have enjoyed it so much!

The band kept playing all the time, all the time, all the time, until just as the show was about to end, the band seemed to be blowing whistles—then one whistle, one great, long whistle.

Dexter found himself sitting up in bed. He had been dreaming. Now he was listening to the whistle of the circus train and it was early in the morning.

The circus was to be that afternoon, the parade that morning.

Dexter hurriedly got dressed.

Then he rushed to the railway station. There was the circus train. They were unloading.

And everyone would be seeing the circus in the afternoon. He had loved his private dream circus, but he was glad, after all, that the real circus, which was to be bigger and better than ever, would be for everyone!

John McCormack

John McCormack's first picture in the "talkies" was "Song O' My Heart." McCormack's part is singing rather than talking, and he is one of the greatest artists in pictures today. He was born at Athlone, Ireland, June 14, 1884. He made his debut in America in 1909, thereafter devoting his time to opera and concert work. He owns a large stable of horses. He speaks and sings in English, French, Italian and German. His home is in New York.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

FLOWERS

SOME one has said that flowers are the only beautiful thing God made into which he forgot to put a soul. It would seem, however, that some flowers possess at least the semblance of a soul, for they all but talk to you. They seem to say, "my beauty I give to you. I have grown it for you. You have taken good care of me and thus I reward you. I give you my very best efforts." When the drought is on and everything is burning up for lack of moisture, the flowers seem literally to ask you for water and the protection of a reasonable amount of shade. Flowers may not have souls in the sense of possessing self-consciousness, but they do possess, in common with all plant life, and perhaps to a more marked degree than most plants, the element of self-preservation. They struggle against great odds in order to grow, and make every possible effort at self-expression.

L. A. Barrett.

Should a rose become dwarfed in its development it may hang on the bush face-downward and seem to say, "This is not my fault. You have neglected me!" In the majority of cases the accusation would be correct. When it smiles at us with all its radiant beauty it seems to say: "This is your reward. I am trying to tell you how much I appreciate your painstaking care of me during the days I was growing." Yes, flowers may become true and valuable friends.

Flowers may teach us valuable lessons. The development of the appreciation of beauty is one of these lessons. Beauty is an abstract ideal. In order to be recognized and appreciated it must be seen in some of its manifested forms; for instance, in a cathedral, landscape or sunset. The beauty expressed in the flowers, however, seems a little more real because we have had a part in the creation of that beauty.

It is a source of great satisfaction to realize that when we keep a garden of flowers we are co-operating with the Infinite Creative Power in helping to make beautiful the great outdoors. This is no small satisfaction. To realize that we have a part in the task of making this world beautiful may bring to us a deeper satisfaction than professional emoluments or business profits. "Happy they who can create a rose or erect a honeysuckle," wrote the poet Gray.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

WHY IS IT CALLED A MAGAZINE?

THE moment we hear the word "magazine" we at once think of a publication, printed and distributed periodically, weekly, semi-monthly or monthly as the case may be—in fact, from this circumstance the publication is often called a periodical.

This application of the word "magazine" to a periodical publication is a clean-cut instance of how old words are requisitioned to supply names for new things, as is the magazine in its present form.

The word "magazine" comes to us from the Arabic "makhzan." This was the name given by the Arabs to the Spanish storehouses when the Arabs occupied Spain. When Ferdinand and Isabella reconquered Spain they kept the name in the form of "magazen."

From this primary meaning of a place where things were stored it soon acquired the sense of a place where things were kept while awaiting sale. So, in the romance languages it is still used as the equivalent of our phrase "department store." Gradually it was adopted into the English language to indicate a periodical publication which contained a mine of reading matter.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

HORSESHOES

THE idea that it is lucky to find a horseshoe and that it should be attached to the house, points up, is regarded by the best authorities on folklore as being a Druidical survival. The superstition is peculiar to regions where Druidism once flourished and the Druidical places of worship, as exemplified by Stonehenge, made their inner circle of stones a broken, or open, one. The idea that a horseshoe brings the best luck when you find it lying with the points toward you—the sacred, inner circle open to you, as it were—bears upon this theory.

Druidism passed, but the superstition survived—for a superstition outlasts empires and religions—and when horseshoes became known in England the superstitious found, ready at hand, a representation of the ancient symbol of the broken circle. The idea that in attaching the symbol to the house the points should be up had a Druidical signification which has been lost. People now-a-days say it is "to prevent the luck running out."

Dear Editor:

ONE day I set out to do the unexpected all morning.

Meeting a doctor, I asked, "how is your digestion this morning?" He nearly collapsed, because no one ever gives a care about the doctor's own worries.

The dentist I asked if he ever had a toothache. The garage man I encouraged to talk about his recent flat tire. The waiter I asked, "Did you have a good night's sleep, and how did your breakfast set?"

Everybody seemed happier after leaning on my sympathetic ear. I gave the world a chance to air its worries instead of asking folks to listen to mine.

But what a long morning it made for me!—Fred Barton.

Successful Search for Pet

The love of a Portland (Maine) man for his dog, which led him to institute a search extending from Maine to the Middle West, was rewarded when Tam, the Scotch terrier of H. Ben Eastman, which disappeared from Portland simultaneously with the departure of a circus on June 3, was found frolicking with the other animals of the circus menagerie in Dayton, Ohio. Tam was in the possession of an animal trainer, who said he purchased the dog for $10 when the circus played Portland.

Roger Babson says business is bound to improve and offers four suggestions for speeding it up. They are, reducing the overhead by moving men from the office to the field; giving better measure to customers; discovering new products and new uses for present products; and spending more money on advertising. He stressed the latter as the most important and advised all to increase their advertising appropriations. We are afraid that it will take more than a Babson to convince the average man who reduces his advertising with the first adverse wind. It takes more than an average business man to push business when it needs pushing the most, possibly the answer as to why small towns remain small.

People's President

John J. Raskob's chickens have come home to roost, and now the mighty Raskob with all the money to carry on the democratic campaign, and who hired an expert calumniator to abuse the Presiden, has himself become an issue in the campaign.

Raskob went a little too far with his attempts to besmirch the President. The President is the highes official in the land, the President of all the people, and the people do not enjoy seeing unjust slandr and libel of the high official. The people still hold the presidency in great respect and take as an insult to the nation itself the besmirchment of the President. Raskob's paid man kept up the beamirching until he was revealed and denounced by a democratic writer and now Michaelson is keeping in the background. Raskob did his work too well and the people resent the work of Michaelson, fathered by Raskob but also endorsed by the democratic National committee.

Raskob is not only an issue in the present campaign, but he is an issue in the democratic party, for the former republican, now a democrat because he is wet and carried the democratic party with him in 1928, is not so popular as formerly with the democratic brethren. And, the democratic party does not believe in slandering a President of the United States, the people's President.

Advertising on Postage Stamps

If ever you receive a letter bearing a stamp inscribed with some slogan like, "Eventually, why not now?" or "Four out of five have it," credit the phenomenon to Representative Emanuel Celler of New York. It is Mr. Celler's idea that the Post Office Department can eliminate its deficit by selling space on postage stamps for advertising purposes.

The New Yorker explains that he does not "advocate," but only "suggests" this money-making scheme to the government. The suggestion is inspired by information he has received to the effect that France, Germany and New Zealand sell marginal space on their stamps to private concerns, and that Bavaria and Italy have doubled the size of their stamps and sold the additional space. Mr. Celler further recalls that the United States itself has used the stencil employed to cancel stamps for slogans. Stamps have also been used to call attention to various expositions.

Representative Celler is to be commended for his resourcefulness. But haven't we enough with advertisements staring at us in the street cars, screaming at us over the radio and greeting us at every road bend, without encountering them on friendly epistles?

If this plan is adopted, think of the extra "licking" that will have to be done.

We guarantee to satisfy you when we accept your order for printing.

Making School Attractive

Every parent's problem today is: How can I help to make school a happy adventure for my child?

Here's how: By creating an atmosphere of security in the home. By lending a willing ear to seemingly trivial childish cares, but so momentous and disturbing to his child mind. By trying to grasp his point of view and by listening tolerantly and advising him with the understanding of a big brother who has not yet had time to forget how the worries of a kid can plague a fellow's mind.

Don't assume a patronizing attitude. Don't give way to a feeling of superiority. Children like to talk about ther affairs. Inspire your child, or children, to confide in you. Only in this way is it possble to know the things he enjoys, and only by a knowledge of his likes and dislikes is it possible to really understand him.

No two children are exactly alike. The observant adult has noticed differences even in new born babes. Some cry and fuss. Others are placid and calm. They enjoy sleping. After they are fed, it is hard to tell that there is a baby in the house.

Every child, no matter what his temperament or disposition, needs love, understanding and a sense of freedom. And as there can be no self-expression without self-control, we must aim to teach our children politeness and habits of behavior which will make them well liked by others, children and adults.

The home must not pull against the school. If there is home work, see that the children have a quiet room. Don't wait until the school report shows deficiency in reading or arithmetic before helping the boy. Take an interest in his lessons. Encourage him to come for parental assistance. Help him with his reading lesson, and see to it that he acquires a love for books by reading aloud to him and then having him read back, making a sort of game of a school subject he finds hard and may therefore develop a distaste for.

His room should be free from distractions. Turn off the radio. He needs quiet in which to study and think.

If a child is not especially bright, don't force him to struggle over his studies until he gets results. Help him along, not by doing the examples, but by explaining to him. Write a note to his teacher; ask her if she will please take the time to make long division clear to your Harold. She will, and will thank you for calling it to her attention before it is too late and the boy has received a low rating.

Let's create a harmonious atmosphere at home in the morning so our children can start the day smiling, happy and eagerly looking forward to the events of the day.

Children in the surrounding community are favored with all the conveniences that the people can afford, to make their school life pleasant and profitable, and yet we see too many times how ungrateful they are to their communities.

A deeper appreciation of what we have should be taught at school and at home.

Miss Agneta Horn spent from Saturday until Tuesday at Kendallville with her parents, taking a few days rest from her work as operator at the central office.

D. W. Myers and family of Edon, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Sam Kees, who are staying in the Myers home for the winter, were here Sunday, guests in the Geo. Kees home.

15, 25, 50, 60 and 100 watt bulbs at the Light Office at St. Joe. Also 50 and 100 watt 220 voltage, and 25, 50 and 100 watt bulbs in 32 volts for Delco plants. All at News office. 3tf.

The west end garage is reported as now being in the hands of Carter Bros., of Fort Wayne. This property is being traded about so frequent that one hardly dare say who owns it.

Mr. Chauncey Hall and lady friend, Mrs. Gladys Cook, of Muskegon, Mich., were dinner guests of Mrs. Jane Coburn and family, on Friday of last week. They were enroute to New York City. Mr. Hall is an acquaintance of Clarence Coburn; the acquaintance being formed when the latter was employed in Muskegon.

Wm. Lucas made The News a call Monday, advanced his subscription a year ahead and attended to other matters about town. Mr. Lucas walked from Spencerville and when asked why he did not try and get a ride to St. Joe, he remarked that he did not want to disappoint folks here, because they were expecting him to arrive on foot and he did not wish to get here ahead of time. In his travels he came across some grapes and because they were wild said he had a heck of a time to catch even one bunch. He did manage to slip up on one small bunch and brot it to the editor. He expects to take refuge from the cold weather in West Virginia and visit with his sister, and when everything gets peaceable again, will probably get back home.

EIGHTEEN TAXING UNIT RATES ARE CUT

A table prepared by County Auditor Estell Dawson shows that the property owners of eighteen of the twenty-three taxing units in the county will pay taxes on lower levies in 1931 than in 1930.

In four of the units the rates are higher. In one, Auburn, there is no change.

Of the reductions, Waterloo leads with a cut of 36 cents on the $100 valuation. Butler township follows with 35 cents, Concord township with 33 cents, Wilmington township with 23, Grant with 21, Keyser and Stafford with 19 each, St. Joe with 18, Richland with 14, Butler city with 12, Spencer with 11, Corunna with 10, Newville township with 7, Jackson with 6, Union township and Altona with 5 each and Garrett with 3 cents.

Ashley raised its rate 14 cents, Franklin township 6, Troy township 5, and Fairfield 1.

Wilmington township has the distinction of the lowest levy among the townships, with $1.37, and Altona has the lowest among the towns, with $2.23.

Smithfield is high among the townships, with $2.69, and Garrett among the towns, with $3.63.

No remonstrances were filed against the levies.

The rates in each of the units for 1931 follow, together with the 1930 rates:

Auburn, $2.94, $2.75 poll. Last year, $2.94.

Butler city, $3.02, $2.50 poll. Last year, $3.14.

Garrett $3.63, $250 poll. Last year, $3.66.

Report Bad Driving
AND SAVE LIVES

AAA INDIANA

This is the insignia we have used for many years.

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

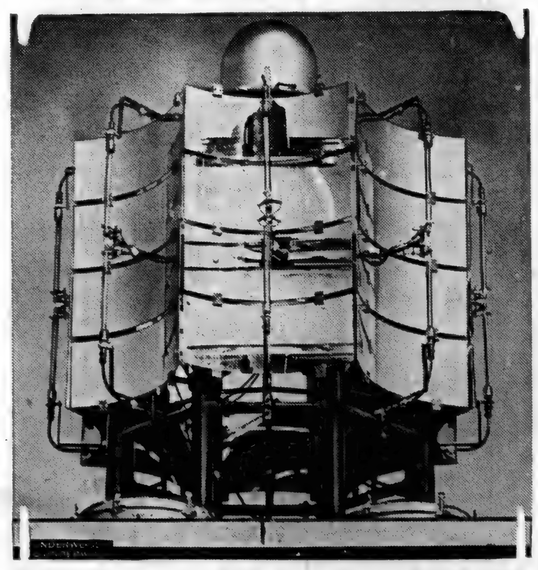
Sophomores and Freshmen in Picturesque "Brawl"

These "knights," mounted on human steeds, are taking part in the annual "brawl" of the sophomore and freshman classes at St. Mary's college, near Oakland, Calif. The sophs triumphed.

Beautiful Mess Hall of a Soldiers' Home

A striking view of the new modernistic mess hall at the National Military home at Sawtelle, Calif. This attractive building replaces an old frame structure which burned down, and is part of the program costing $1,000,000 of the $2,100,000 government appropriation for replacing old buildings with new brick, concrete and steel construction.

Chicago Has a New Kind of Beacon



A close-up of the reflector light on the new La Salle-Wacker beacon in Chicago. The eight parabolic mirrors, each five feet in height, magnify and reflect the rays of the sun during the day, and at night red neon lights are reflected in the mirrors, sending out beams to eight points of the compass.

Young Marines Report to the Boss

Catherine, Mary and Edward Fordney, children of Major and Mrs. C. L. Fordney of Saginaw, Mich., "reporting for duty" to their grandfather, Maj. Gen. Benjamin H. Fuller, who also happens to be the commandant of United States marines. The children were visiting their grandfather in the marine barracks in Washington. Major Fordney is also in the marine corps.

RESERVE BOARD HEAD

Eugene Meyer, Jr., who was appointed by President Hoover to succeed Roy A. Young as governor of the federal reserve board. Mr. Meyer was managing director of the war finance corporation under Presidents Wilson, Harding, Coolidge and Hoover until he resigned a year ago.

LEADER IN GERMANY

Sensational to a degree unequaled in German post-war politics is the sudden rise to leadership of Adolf Hitler, Austrian author of the Munich Putsch in 1923, who has become a political power of the first rank as a result of the Fascist landslide in the recent reichstag general election. The party's power advanced from 12 to 107 seats. The Fascist party ranked second only to the Socialists in the official final totals and, with the Communists, who also advocate overthrow of the young German republic, has more backing than any other party excepting the Social Democrats.

ZACHARIAS AND ELISABETH: LIFE IN A PIOUS JEWISH HOME

LESSON TEXT—Luke 1:5-80.

GOLDEN TEXT—And they were both righteous before God, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Helping to Make Our Homes Good.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Helping to Make Our Homes Good.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What I Owe to My Home.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Makes a Home Christian?

I. A Godly Husband and Wife (Luke 1:5-7).

The name Zacharias means "Jehovah hath remembered," and the name Elisabeth means "A covenant maker."

1. When they lived (v. 5).

"In the days of Herod the king." They lived in a day when godlessness was rife. The priesthood was corrupt, and the ruling classes most wicked.

2. Their character (v. 6).

Both were righteous before God. Many appear to be righteous before man who are not righteous before God. They were so mated that they walked in the commandments of the Lord blameless. The highest in wedded life can be attained only when both husband and wife are united in Jesus Christ. Their practical living was manifested in obedience to God's commandments.

2. They were childless (v. 7).

Though this godly couple were well mated and possessed the joy of the Lord in their souls, there was a real lack in their home. No home is quite ideal into which no child has come.

II. A Son Promised (Luke 1:8-23).

1. By whom (vv. 11, 19)?

Gabriel, a special messenger of God, appeared and made known the good news to Zacharias.

2. When (vv. 8-14)?

While officiating as priest this good news came to him. From verse 13 the implication is that Zacharias had been praying definitely about this matter. While he burned incense, which is typical of prayer, the multitudes without were praying.

3. Characteristics of the child (vv. 15-17).

(1) Shall be great in the sight of the Lord (v. 15).

Though the people did not greatly esteem him, he was highly esteemed by the Lord.

(2) Shall drink neither wine nor strong drink (v. 15).

He was to be a Nazarite, separating himself from sensuous things and dedicating himself unto the Lord (Numbers 6:1-6).

(3) Shall be filled with the Holy Ghost (v. 15).

The energy of the divine Spirit was needed to enable him to lead the people to repentance (v. 16).

(4) Shall go in the spirit and power of Elijah (v. 17).

In this power he was to prepare the people for the coming of the Savior, and the salvation which he was to bring.

4. Zacharias asking for a sign (vv. 18-23).

Although the aged priest was earnestly praying for the salvation of Israel, the gracious promise of the angel which was the beginning of that salvation staggered his faith. The angel gave him a sign. Because he refused to praise God in faith for this gracious promise, God caused his tongue to be silent until the promise was fulfilled. God wants us to believe his promises no matter how contrary to reason they may seem.

III. The Promise Fulfilled (Luke 1:57-64).

1. Neighbors and kinfolk rejoicing with Elisabeth (vv. 57, 58).

2. The child circumcised and named (vv. 59-63).

On the eighth day they circumcised the child and named him "John" (v. 13). By means of writing Zacharias made known the name which he would have by divine instruction.

3. Zacharias praises God (v. 64).

At this time God opened the mouth of Zacharias, and he offered up praise to God.

IV. Zacharias Prophesying (Luke 1:67-80).

1. Praising God for fulfillment of the promise of salvation (vv. 67-75).

This was according to covenant promise.

2. John to be called "The Prophet of the Highest" (vv. 76-79).

He was to go before the face of the Lord to prepare his ways.

3. The growth of John (v. 80).

He grew and waxed strong in the Spirit, and was in the deserts till the day of his showing unto Israel.

The Favorite Book

The Bible has been the favorite book of those who were troubled and down trodden.—Henry van Dyke.

After 40
Bowel trouble is Most Dangerous

Constipation may easily become chronic after forty. Continued constipation at that time of life may bring attacks of piles—and a host of other disorders.

Watch your bowels at any age. Guard them with particular care after forty. When they need help, remember a doctor should know what is best for them.

"Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin" is a doctor's prescription for the bowels. Tested by 47 years' practice, it has been found thoroughly effective in relieving constipation and its ills for men, women and children of all ages. It has proven perfectly safe even for babies. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients, it cannot gripe; will not sicken you or weaken you; can be used without harm as often as your breath is bad, your tongue is coated; whenever a headachy, bilious, gassy condition warns of constipation.

Next time just take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative. See how good it tastes; how gently and thoroughly it acts. Then you will know why it has become the world's most popular laxative. Big bottles—all drugstores.

"No," answered the Wall Street man, "but it takes genius to remain one."

KILLS RATS
NOTHING ELSE

K-R-O (Kills Rats Only) killed 238 rats in 12 hours on a Kansas farm. It is the original product made by a special process of squill, an ingredient recommended by U. S. Government as sure death to rats and mice, but harmless to dogs, cats, poultry or even baby chicks. You can depend on this. K-R-O in a few years has become America's leading rat and mouse killer. Sold by all druggists on a money back guarantee.

Cost of Learning to Fly

Learning to fly costs a private pilot an average of $550 and eight and one-half weeks of his time, a survey of the Department of Commerce reveals, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. Tuitions for private licenses in approved flight-instruction schools were found to range from $345 to $650, exclusive of board and room, and courses ran from five and two-third weeks to two and three-fifths months as average minimum and maximum.

Daughter Is Healthy Now

"My thirteen-year-old daughter Maxine was troubled with backache and pain when she came into womanhood. I knew Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound would help her because I used to take it myself at her age. Now she does not have to stay home from school and her color is good, she eats well and does not complain of being tired. We are recommending the Vegetable Compound to other school girls who need it. You may publish this letter."—Mrs. Floyd Butcher, R. #2, Gridley, Kansas.

It was dull in Chicago that summer. Mamma was still in Europe, and Ernestine felt that she could not confide in Lillian about Will. There were times when she was frightened about her own health. She felt faint in the heat. She could not eat at all. She had not felt this way before Peter was born, but then she had been strong and well. She couldn't understand this—her feet were swollen until she could not wear her shoes. Mrs. Schluss and Mrs. Pryor expressed their anxiety. Only Will, engrossed in his own troubles, was unaware of her frailty. She presented to Mr. Poole and to Will a superb calm, and a facetiousness that was easier for her than tragedy.

Will found some work for an advertising agency, which he brought home to do. He might have taken one of the jobs papa had offered him from time to time, but papa was in Europe and Loring in charge of his affairs.

Ernestine could not forgive Will for playing baseball in the streets with John Pryor and a half a dozen other half-grown boys, when he came back from his fruitless jaunts after work. "He doesn't care," she thought, and longed to wound him, to strike through his carelessness. She grew almost morbid—"Perhaps he'll have reason to waken—to understand that life's a job for a man."

Will took five dollars, almost the last of their cash, one morning early in August and went out, looking very clean and spruce, and with the light of adventure in his eye.

"I'll find work today, or stay out till I do," he told Ernestine and kissed her on both cheeks.

Peter clung to him ecstatically.

"Peter loves Will the better," she thought, pressing any thorn at hand against her heart. After he was gone, she went to her trunk and got out the bankbook she had obtained that day two years ago, when she had come out here and found Will's father dead. Here was a secret source of supply of her own. She looked at her bank balance. It was enough to pay for herself and the new baby, if she went into a two-bed ward, as Doctor Grey had planned for her. This was her money. Will would have to manage for himself and Peter. She decided to go and get the money and have cash in the house if anything happened. But she would not let Will know she had it.

She put the small bankbook on the dining room table and went about the clean and tidy house, washing dishes, setting the rooms in order.

There was a long letter from mamma in the morning mail. Ernestine did not finish reading it, for she had to go and lie down on her bed, seized with such pain that she could scarcely forbear crying out. She felt within herself no light at all, no buoyancy, no spark of life. She was dull, leaden, submerged. She felt she ought to make some effort to resist this spiritual inertia but she was too ill. She wondered if her child would be born too soon. This thought goaded her into action. She rose and gathered from her trunk Peter's little baby garments, long since washed and mended and laid away. She made the things she might need for the baby into a bundle and put it in her dresser drawer. She would get her money. She would arrange her own affairs—with competence. When the call came, she would be ready.

But she must rest first. She made herself a pot of fresh tea, asked Mrs. Schluss to look after Peter, and at length in the early afternoon she started off on the long walk to the street car.

She rode interminably, withdrawing her spirit from the concussion of the heat waves that came up from the stone pavement into the street car. Walking in a mist she reached the bank and went inside. She opened her purse, but found among its contents no bankbook. Like a picture in a dream she could see the leather square of it on the dining room table in the little house. She had left it at home.

If she had been in normal condition she would have realized that it was quite possible for her to establish her identity at the bank. She had made many small deposits. The teller would have remembered her. But as she stood in disappointment, the world grew black before her eyes, and for a straining moment, fully conscious but blind, she stood in silent terror.

The blindness passed, and she picked up her purse and went out of the bank, turned, half instinctively, toward Mrs. Bennett's. A strange girl was at the door, a colored girl who rolled her eyes at Ernestine.

"Mis' Bennett's out, ma'am. Will you wait?"

Ernestine left without a word, and went back to the boulevard. The darkness, the blindness was coming down on her again. She felt that she was going to faint. She could not hold on any longer—there was nothing with which to cling—she no longer cared.

The great bulk of the bus was moving down toward her—gigantic, menacing. She felt that it would crush her, and moved back a little on the sidewalk, her horrified eyes fixed upon the monster which seemed to swell and grow, and then, strangely, to rise from the pavement and to turn slowly and gracefully about in the air. She knew it was delirium, she knew that the bus could not act that way. But her knowledge could not pierce her fear of confusion. And then the bus lunged at her—the blindness came down again, and Ernestine, alone and very ill, fell down upon the pavement of the boulevard with a soft and plaintive moan.

CHAPTER IX

Loring Finds Ernestine

It was nine o'clock when Lillian reached Chicago from Langley lake in obedience to Loring's frantic telephone call. She turned the car into Erie street, as Loring had instructed her, and stopped before Mrs. Bennett's door, her hands falling from the wheel of the car with nervous weariness. She went up the stairs quickly, her heart full of repressed terror for Ernestine. She could not imagine what might have happened to her. It wasn't time surely for her baby. Loring had been brief and unsatisfactory over long-distance.

"We Don't Know, We Can't Find Her."

The door was opened by a colored maid who stared in silence.

"Is Mrs. Bennett in? I'm Mrs. Todd's sister. They told me to come here—"

The girl gave a squawk and threw her hand up over her mouth and rolled her eyes at Lillian.

"Can you tell me where Mrs. Todd is?" asked Lillian sharply.

"Lawd, Miss. Wisht I cud. Nobody knows. But you better c-min and talk to Mis' Bennett. She kin tell you the fac's."

Trembling seized Lillian, but she followed the girl in silence to Mrs. Bennett's sitting room, and, in a moment found herself confronted by a plump little woman whose face was gray and ravaged. Lillian looked at her with pleading eyes, afraid to trust her voice. Her throat was dry and closed.

"Please—where is she? What has happened?"

"We don't know. We can't find her."

"Tell me—please."

"She's not been well—you knew of course that she was expecting another confinement?"

Lillian nodded, realizing that she was ignorant of the date.

"Well, since Will's been out of work, she's not been well."

"Will out of work? I didn't know that." Her heart was shaken with remorse. Will out of work, and Ernestine ill, and she had known nothing of it—playing bridge and golf and swimming at the lake.

"But where did she go? Who was with her last? What happened?"

Mrs. Bennett tried to be coherent.

"She left her little boy with a neighbor and went out alone, early in the afternoon. Evidently she intended to go to the bank, for Will found her bankbook lying on the table. We can't find out whether she was at the bank or not. No one noticed her, and she did not withdraw any money. But she came here about four. I was out and she left, but the maid said she looked as though she were going to drop then. That's the last that's been seen of her. Will got home about three, and he began to worry because Ernestine had not told him she was going out, and it was so hot, and she's not been well. He decided to come over here to the bank, and when he found that she hadn't been there, he went to your mother's. Ernestine wasn't there. Then Will came here, and Mr. Hamilton met him here. I phoned to Mrs. Schluss for them, but Ernestine wasn't at home yet.

"Wherever she was she would have come home to Peter, as Will argued, and I agreed with him. Will was nearly distracted—the men quarreled bitterly, and Mr. Hamilton called up Ruby Pastano and the papers, and organized a search—of course, people in the city go off and are delayed and don't get home on time. But, you see, now it's nearly ten and we haven't heard anything of her. Mr. Hamilton has notified the police. They'll find her—unless—"

"What do you mean?" cried Lillian sharply. Her hands were shaking so that she could scarcely hold her purse and gloves.

"Well—your husband—Mr. Hamilton, he's got the idea that she may have destroyed herself. But Will says no—she wouldn't do that."

"Will is right. Ernestine wouldn't do such a thing."

"But pregnant women get wonderful queer notions in their heads," insisted Mrs. Bennett dolefully. "Mr. Hamilton was nearly wild. He told Will that he had killed Ernestine—it seemed hard for Will to hear, but he brushed it away like nothing." She paused.

"Mr. Hamilton's got a taxi for us out there—had it since six o'clock. I don't know how much this'll cost him."

"That doesn't matter," said Lillian impatiently, and tried to control her perturbation. She was disturbed anew at the thought of Loring violent, uncontrolled—she had never seen him so, except on the other occasion of his quarrel with Will. But this was worse. He had always been so fond of Ernestine—as though she were his own little sister. She felt a great relief to think that he had taken charge of the search. He would find Ernestine if she were to be found.

But the thought of her sister out in these hot streets, lost, ill and alone, caused her such anguish that she could scarcely breathe. What would mamma say to her? Mamma loved Ernestine the better—always had. Mamma had really left Ernestine to her.

The door was flung open and Loring stood there. His eyes were glittering with fear or fever. He looked at her as if he scarcely knew her.

"Lillian!" he exclaimed.

"I drove," she told him, "all the way. I've been so worried."

"You had cause to worry," he said grimly. "When we find Ernestine she is going home with us—to stay. Don't you agree? She's got to have somebody to take care of her."

"Of course, Loring."

"I've news of a sort," he said slowly, and they stared at him. "I don't know what it's worth. There was a woman taken to the County hospital this afternoon—from this neighborhood. She was a young woman, and she was to be confined. It might have been Ernestine. I've sent Will out there, and I came by to see if you were here"—to his wife—"and to wait here for a phone call."

The telephone shrilled, and the sound leaped through them all. Mrs. Bennett picked up the receiver with a trembling hand, while they all watched her in straining silence.

"Yes—yes—this is Mrs. Bennett. . . . Oh, he did. . . . Oh, thank you. . . . Her sister is here. I'll tell them."

She turned from the phone.

"It's the hospital office. Will has identified Ernestine, and he's there with her. Oh, Mr. Hamilton—you found her!"

"Get your hat," said Loring. "And come with us. Never mind your keys, Lillian. We'll take the taxi."

Advises Use of Slogan to Overcome Dejection

Slogans are advocated as an aid to a healthy mental outlook by James D. Weinland, who considers their effect and lists a number in an article in Hygeia Magazine.

A good slogan can brighten our whole horizon, fill us with courage and be an emotional stimulus. It directs and holds the attention to a bracing thought. For instance, when a man is down in the dumps it is comforting to think that "the men who try to do something and fail are infinitely better than those who try to do nothing and succeed," or that "there are more chances and opportunities in life than we know."

There are slogans hidden away in the world's literature that fit almost any mood or desire, says Mr. Weinland. Proverbs are rich in them. Poems are jeweled with them. Each person must select the ones that mean most to him. Used at the right time the words can penetrate like a sharp dart into a mood and dissipate it. They act like a bugle call marshaling the forces of our resolution and ordering them into action.

Boxwood of Slow Growth

Boxwood is sometimes called the living antique. Truly it is, as the proportions of the plant determine its age, and a reproduction is not possible unless one chooses to wait a hundred years and have one grow.

Hunan Province, China

Yangtze Boatmen Near Hankow, China.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

RECENT revolutionary activities in China have been largely in the province of Hunan, just south of the Yangtze, and in Changsha, its capital; and have threatened besides the busy life of Hankow, metropolis of Hupeh province, on the north bank of the great river. Changsha was captured by the Communist forces and was systematically looted.

The resident of Changsha is noted for his self-esteem. He considers himself China's "top-side-man." Capital of a hilly province, one part of which is occupied by a large lake which acts as a reservoir for the Yangtze floods, Changsha maintained its exclusion of the "foreign devil" until the beginning of this century. Recently it has been closely linked with New Haven, Conn., for there is, just outside the rapidly disappearing wall, in which the inhabitants once took great pride, one of the best Christian mission schools in China, which is Yale's contribution to the education of the Chinese who cannot come to America.

In Hunan the necromancer has exerted much power and Changsha was so well protected by the lucky constellation under which it was founded and by the Holy Hill which guards it, that it was thought a profanation for the "foreign devil" to enter. In 1910 there were serious riots, mainly directed against the growing commercial power of foreign firms, but it had, too, its astronomical accompaniments, for it was the approach of Halley's comet which touched off the explosion.

Long before Yale established the "Yale in China" college and hospital in Changsha, the city was closely related to America for it was in the capital of Hunan that many of the firecrackers which formerly announced the Independence day celebration were made. While maintaining its own independence, Changsha furnished the explosives which enabled the American boy to proclaim his "Glorious Fourth."

Much Coal in Hunan.

A large part of Hunan is an unworked field of anthracite and bituminous coal and at Pinghsiang, which is connected with Changsha by railroad, there is one of the mines which furnishes fuel for the great iron works at Hanyang.

Among the great men who have been among Changsha's chief products the most famous was General Tseng Kuo Fan, whose co-operation with "Chinese" Gordon was largely instrumental in putting down the Taiping rebellion. General Tseng was not only a soldier and a statesman, but a literary man as well, and his collected works of 156 books were edited by Li Hung Chang.

Changsha lies on the north-south China railway. Trains compete with the light draft steamers which make the 220-mile trip from Hankow. With about 500,000 inhabitants, it rules in peace time a province of 22,000,000, and is one of the cleanest cities in China.

Many of the streets are long and straight and at one time the city itself was divided between two magistracies. The bazaars are full of life and interest, some of the candles being famous for miles around.

One of the interesting sights of the city is the wheelbarrows that climb stairs. Some distance ahead of the regulation wheel there is another smaller one. In climbing over flagstone steps or bridges, the handles of the wheelbarrow are lowered until the auxiliary wheel rises above the next higher step. Then the wheelbarrow, which often carries three or four hundred pounds, see-saws from wheel to wheel until the next level stretch of flagstones is reached.

The Episcopal mission has a live Boy Scout troop and the visitor who watched tent-pegging, fire rescue, stretcher making and other Boy Scout activities would marvel at China's quick changes. For until after the Boxer trouble, Hunan's capital excluded the dreaded foreigner from its walls whose brick battlements, rising above the site of a former wall constructed in 202 B. C., were themselves built while Shakespeare was alive.

Hankow a Great River Port.

Hankow, about 190 miles north of Changsha, is one of the world's greatest inland ports. Lying 600 miles up the Yangtze, the city is as important geographically to either of the warring factions as Chicago would be if a civil war were raging in the United States. Hankow has only one railroad, but the rivers and streams of China form commercial arteries from which produce from nine provinces flows into the Hankow markets, while the port is equally important as a distributing point for foreign commerce destined to the Chinese interior.

Hankow occupies the north bank of the Yangtze where the Han pours in its muddy torrent. On the opposite side of the Han lies Hanyang, and across the nearly two-mile-wide Yangtze is Wuchang, a venerable town which was flourishing when Hankow was a fishing hamlet. Both Hanyang and Wuchang now are a part of "Greater Hankow" with more than a million and a half inhabitants.

The Hankow river front is an amazing conglomeration of shipping. There are ungainly junks, but they move about the water in the hands of expert river men as easily as modern vessels in our busy eastern harbors. Some of them, displaying rotten hulks with gaping holes above the water line, cause the traveler to wonder how they stay afloat, while now and then a huge high-pooped craft, adorned with brightly painted carvings and plates that make it look like a floating circus wagon, edges its way slowly shoreward.

Small sampans dart here and there by the muscle-power of two perspiring coolies whose families, under matting-covered awnings, fill the air along the shore with the singsong chatter of the Orient. It is estimated that 25,000 native boats ply in and out of Hankow and its sister cities. Meanwhile modern steamboats from lower Yangtze points come and go on schedule.

The walled city in the background also seethes with commercial activity to the tune of noises that strain the visitor's eardrums. Some of the narrow lanes are paved with flagstones while others are mere ruts. Nevertheless, they are the playgrounds of thousands of children and the busy streets of a city which has been called the "Hub of the Universe."

Business and Noise.

The children yell at play; the vendors cry out their wares; coolies, bearing heavy burdens, warn passersby to dodge their bulky loads; beggars groan and moan; and rickshaw boys, without regard to pedestrians, shout as they hurry their fares through a jumbled mass of humanity. The yells of carriers of wealthy Chinese, as they bear their dignified masters, can be heard above the din, and the traveler wonders if these men are not employed for the strength of their vocal chords.

But this is not all. Along the sidelines, the merchants bicker in loud voices with prospective purchasers in front of their shops. The frenzied spirit of bargaining somewhat resembles miniature civil wars.

To the foreigner, the pedestrians in their loose-fitting clothing resemble pajama-clad citizens on parade, but the wearers are by no means ready to retire. Business in Hankow is almost a religion, and nearly every man seen on the street has to do with the enormous amount of commerce that flows through and past the busy port.

If a traveler knows the advertising code in Hankow, he can locate any type of business by reading the shapes and colors of the shop signs which project over the narrow thoroughfares. For instance, gold platers use salmon-colored boards with green characters. Druggists' boards are gilded. Black, gold, red and green are the predominating colors.

Approach the river front, along the Bund, and the scene changes. Here are buildings in Russian, English, German, and French architecture. But Hankow's most amazing spectacle is the panorama of junks of many types, ungainly, but performing like trained seals in the hands of their expert rivermen and thousands of these craft line up for miles on both sides of both rivers. It is estimated that 25,000 of them ply in and out of the three cities.

When a Man Marries

By JANE OSBORN

(Copyright.)

ON SATURDAY afternoons they went about looking at small inexpensive apartments and until Joan became used to it she felt acute embarrassment.

"You silly child," assured Andrew as they walked along down a side street in search of an apartment they had seen advertised. "There is nothing the least bit shocking about what we're doing."

"Only, you are going to live there before we are married," said Joan with embarrassment. "That might be funny."

"We don't have to tell every agent our plans," Andrew assured her. "And when we have definitely settled on the apartment we can explain matters and there won't be anything surprising about it."

It was late winter and Andrew and Joan did not intend to be married until the following autumn. Meantime they had decided that they ought to select their apartment now while they would have a wider selection than in the autumn. As a matter of economy Andrew would make his bachelor home here until autumn, cooking his own breakfasts by way of economy and dining at an inexpensive restaurant when he did not dine at Joan's home.

The apartment that they finally agreed upon was two flights up in a house without an elevator. It was a back apartment, with two windows looking out on a rather pleasant back yard and with the rest of the windows on a court. The rent was—oh, very little for these days—even less than Joan and Andrew had planned in their most frugal moments.

"We'll make the kitchen the main room—we'll eat there and I'll have the walls painted a cheerful yellow, with blue and white gingham curtains at the window. We'll have a nice big bedroom—so two rooms ought to be enough. Then we won't ever have to worry about living beyond our income and we can save a little besides."

By way of answer Andrew pressed Joan's warm little hand. "There aren't many girls like you, Joan," he said. "You don't seem to care a bit about money."

"I don't," said Joan with interest. "In fact, Andrew, I've always looked forward to starting married life just like this. That's one of the things that makes marrying you so nice. Of course I love you, but I'm so glad you aren't rich. And I want to start in eating in the kitchen the way mother and father did. I can just see that little kitchen, after you've painted the walls yellow and I've made the blue and white curtains for the windows."

Soon after that Andrew signed a year's lease for the little apartment, and having sent on a couch, a bed, a bureau, a kitchen table and a few cooking utensils, started in keeping bachelor's hall by himself. The weeks passed slowly enough through the long summer, and the first glorious days of autumn. There were days when he did not see Joan even for a minute, days even when he did not have time to write to her or to telephone to her, but Joan bottled up her disappointment, convincing herself that Andrew really loved her just the same.

But as the time approached for the wedding clearly something was worrying Andrew. Then one day Joan asked him if he would meet her at the apartment. She hadn't intended going there at all, but she wanted to send some furniture and she wanted to plan with him where everything should be placed. Then somehow Andrew was urged to disclose the cause of his anxiety.

"I don't know how you'll take it, Joan," he told her, standing there in the little kitchen. "But I can't keep it from you. You see things took an unexpected turn at the plant. For a year or so I've been working out a process. I contrived a little appliance and made some changes in the method and—well, it's turned out better than I dreamed. In fact, it's going to save the company a great deal of money every year. Of course, I have no patent on the appliance. It was all part of the day's work. But they're doing the right thing. I've been made one of the directors of the concern and they've given me a ten-thousand-dollar bonus, and in place of my regular fifty a week I'm going to get twelve thousand a year."

Andrew told this as if he were confessing some misdeed. "It would all have been fine," he said, "only I know how you feel about money. I know you want to start here in two rooms, eating in the kitchen. It's been part of your dream. It's funny, though, having the money come my way when I really don't need it or even want it."

"But Andrew," she cried, "we could build our own house—and sublet this and—and I've always dreamed of having a house with a sun parlor, and built-in cupboards in the dining room, and a shower bath and a cedar closet in the attic and—and—"

"Then you're glad," gasped Andrew with relief.

"Why, of course, you old sweetheart. Of course I'd marry you if you didn't have a penny, but I've always longed for a little luxury."

A Cruise for Love

By LEETE STONE

(Copyright.)

SIDE by side; moored so close to each other that they could just clear with the shifting of the tides in a shimmering, moon-clad bay, floated two crafts. A portraiture of ironic contrast. One was the palatial steam yacht, Versailles, the pleasure hobby of young Gregory Anson, who was using his youth to poke the lissome prow of his pet into all unfamiliar ports that dotted the seven seas. The other was a long squat lumber scow, recently free of a load of cypress from some southern port.

Gregory had guests for dinner this night. From the open portholes of the dining salon floated gay laughter, serious talk and the congenial, warming clink of fragile glasses. In addition to two chums, his fiance and her mother, who were making the cruise with him, there were on board a famous portrait painter and a noted engineer. All but Gregory and Lona Lascelles were lingering at table.

These two had excused themselves and were up above leaning against the bridge rail.

"You're very silent . . . not like yourself at all tonight, Lona," Gregory finally murmured.

"What's the matter, old girl? You know I love you; know I'll do everything to make you happy—why, we've grown up together! You ought to know me by this time."

"That's just the trouble, Greg dear. I do know you. Oh—I'm a foolish idealist, of course. I love you, and you're everything I want . . . except . . . except that you've never earned a dollar in your life. You've never worked, fought, striven for anything you wanted in your life—not even me. I fell into your arms like a ripe apple because—well, because you are, adorable; but Greg, I've always dreamed of marrying a man who, if he had to, could make his way without a dollar to start with. Greg, dear, if you knew women a little better I think you'd understand. Sorry if I seem to hurt you. A woman's got to do more than just love a man; she's got to look up to him—it's her nature!"

"Yes, Lona! I understand. While you were talking I wanted to give you a good shaking; just as I used to do when you filched candy out of my pockets at school. But I got a sudden flash at your viewpoint. And I guess you're right, Lona. I've never earned a dollar; never even traded pocket-knives when I was a kid. Exercised the golden spoon, sure enough. Well, old girl, this ought to be remedied. There must be a way. Have you any suggestions? Because, you see, you mean so much to me that I don't want you unless I can have every bit of you; love, respect, understanding; the whole business that goes with the right kind of marriage."

"By Jove! What a portrait!" A deep voice from behind them exclaimed. It was Weyman Harris, the painter. He stood gazing over the opposite bridge rail at the squat scow, evidently having just come up on the deck.

Hardly a hundred feet away, squarely etched in bright moonlight, rose the boxlike little cabin of the scow with its one dark window. Sitting in a nondescript chair tilted back against the wall of the cabin was a man; a young man, sound asleep. A man whose every rugged feature, clearly visible, bore the stamp of toil and strife. One knew that those closed eyes had sailed many seas and had seen them from the struggler's angle.

Weyman Harris stepped quickly to the paneled wall of the wheelhouse, thumbtacked a tiny sheet to it, and was at once immersed in sure, rapid pencil strokes; turning his head every second to look at the model.

Greg and Lona still remained in rapt contemplation.

"Yes, my lads; it's worth a try," came finally from Greg in what must have been an unconscious whisper.

"What did you say, Greg?"

Gregory did not reply. He lit a cigarette, withdrawn with elaborate care from a gold case; put four fingers in his mouth, from which at once there issued a shrill and piercing whistle. The sleeper, a hundred feet away, jumped from his chair as if he had been shot and looked about him warily.

"Say, friend!" Gregory called clearly. "Come over a moment, please. I want to see you."

A few moments later, having rowed over in the scow's little punt, the stalwart sailor stood on the bridge facing Greg and Lona.

"Yes, sir!" he said expectantly.

"Who's your chief over there?" from Greg.

"Captain Janson, sir. He's ashore."

"Well, laddybuck; you've got a new job at a hundred a month and keep. You're going to report to my captain at once and get a suit of whites. Deckhand on the Versailles—six months' cruise."

"D'you mean it, sir . . . why, that's—that's twice what I get on the barge . . . ah, but say; I can't leave the old man flat, y'know."

"That's all fixed. I'm taking your place. When he comes back he'll find me and I'll square you."

Gregory Anson turned to Lona, and there was that in his eyes that thrilled her. "Lona, fix this boy up with Captain Smith. I'll see you sometime, somewhere—just now I'm going to work for you." And Gregory started down for the little punt bobbing at the side.

EMPHASIZING THE POSITIVE IN CHILD TRAINING

"I want all the children who drank a glass of milk for breakfast to stand up," said the kindergarten teacher.

Six out of a class of twenty-five stood up. The teacher shook hands with these six and made quite an ado over them. Receiving so much attention and hearty commendation made these children feel that they occupied the center of the stage. Nothing could have delighted them more.

The children who did not drink milk for breakfast, sat unnoticed. "The waters closed over them," so to speak. If instead, the teacher had said, "Why, Teddy Smith, think of your not having a glass of milk! I'm certainly surprised," Teddy would have enjoyed the attention he gained through the reproof.

The next morning when all the children who had drunk milk for breakfast were asked to stand, almost every child got up. This kindergarten teacher thoroughly understood the teaching of child psychology, that it is good procedure to praise the desirable act and ignore the undesirable.

The best schoolmen, today, do not ask the child to correct misspelled words, badly punctuated or ungrammatical sentences—the old grammars were full of these exercises—instead, they place the emphasis on the correct word and sentence, so that the child gets a mental picture of these and forgets the incorrect. They give the child positive suggestion instead of negative. They know that if we call Jack a gentleman, he will instinctively straighten up and brush his clothes, but if we call him a "tough," he will slouch down and scowl at us.

The mother who is an up to date disciplinarian talks about how well Bob remembers to remove his cap and to fold his napkin. She calls attention to his shoes upon the rare occasions when they are polished, commends the orderly arrangement of Jane's bureau drawers, always says "Thank you" to her high school son when he gallantly seats her at the table.

And the father who is quite up to date in this important science says within Bob's hearing that it is fine to have the walks shoveled so promptly. This provides a stronger incentive towards future effort than nagging. Father also expresses enthusiasm over the lad's progress in school—the gain may be slight but Bob feels encouraged and the chances are good for a higher grade on the next report card.

Clara's mother belongs to an old school that still has too many followers. She pursues the opposite coure. She is always finding fault because her conscientious little daughter does not stand among the highest in the class. Clara is becoming nervous, sheds bitter tear, and refuses to eat. The child is physically unfit for good school work. Last semester her grades were lower than usual. Clara needs commendation rather than upbraiding.

Never take away a harmful amusement without substituting something equally interesting in its place. Jean's mother like Clara's was not up to date. Four-year-old Jean was digging in the dirt—a very healthful and natural activity. Her mother stopped her because she was soiling her dres. Jean fretted and got into so much mischief, her mother was almost "beside herself" before the afternoon was over. There would have been no trouble if Jean had been dressed in overalls and provided with a sand box. Wisely selected toys and play equipment prevent naughtiness.

Bossy, obstreperous, and difficult children are often changed entirely when the parents stop nagging—stop saying, "Don't do that!" at every turn—and provide for them big building blocks, a jar of clay for modeling, or a work bench and tools. These things help children to use any over abundant energy and iniative in constructive work.

HOME BUREAU

The Home Bureau met at the home of Mrs. Eva Wasson, September 26. Club opened by singing, "My Old Kentucky Home," followed by the business session in charge of the president, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick. Roll was called with twenty members responding with suggestions of a new dish for hot lunch. Secretary's report was then read and approved. This was followed with a quartette by Mesdames Borthwick, Washler, Hamilton and Curle. Mrs. Mae Miser then a gave a reading, "My Trip to Boston," both numbers were enjoyed very much. Mrs. Leona Mason gave a very interesting paper on "Cigarette Advertising."

A round table discussion was then conducted by Mrs. Vada Wyatt, which had been prepared by Mrs. Pearl Simanton. This was very interesting and instructive to all. We were pleased to have with us as guests Mrs. Rickett, Mrs. Nichols and Mr. Davis, three children were also present. Three new members were added to the roll.

At the noon hour a bounteous pot luck dinner was served which was enjoyed by all. Committee in charge: Vada Wyatt; Millie Shull, Lizzie Milliman and Mrs. Don Washler. The committee served chicken, mashed potatoes and noodles.

THE EARLY HATCHED PULLET

By Prof. H. D. Munroe

A fall or winter molt in a flock of early hatched pullets can be prevented, in most cases, by good management. Good management means strong, healthy pullets that start to lay at an average of from four to five months. It includes having the birds in a fat condition when they start to lay and keeping them in this condition. Thin birds usually molt. The pullets should be housed when the first one starts to lay. The houses should be cool in summer and moderately warm in winter.

A feeding program to maintain egg production and at the same time keep up body weight is necessary. Anything that will keep the birds well and hearty will help to prevent the winter molt. The fall or winter molt is often a blessing in disguise. The flock that goes into a neck molt will, of course, drop off in production. While in the molt they gain in weight and are in much better condition to produce strong, healthy chicks. The flock that molts during the winter will lay eggs later the following fall when eggs are high in price. So, do all you can to prevent the molt but don't get discouraged if one occurs in the early hatched pullet flock.

Pullets should be put in their laying quarters the day after the first pullet starts to lay. This will be during the hot summer weather if the pullets were hatched early. Great care should be taken to make these houses comfortable during these months.

During the summer, as the hen flock drops off in production, cull the flock every two months. When enough birds have been sold to empty a pen, clean it and keep the hen sout. When the pullets start to lay put them in the clean pens. Be sure that plenty of ventilation is allowed. All windows and curtains should be removed. If there are no windows in the north side or back of the house make temporary openings under the dropping boards. Do not be afraid of drafts during the summer. See that these birds just off of the range have lots of fresh air.

In housing the early pullets do not crowd too many in a pen. If there are empty pens enough for two hundred hens, select two hundred of the best developed pullets for these pens. By reducing the number of pullets in the colony houses the slower developing birds will have a better chance to grow and the pullets in the laying houses will not be crowded. Allow four square feet of floor space for each pullet in summer as well as in winter. As more hens are culled from the flock, clean another pen and put in the pullets that have developed later. Crowded, poorly ventilated houses often cause the early pullets to lose weight and then molt soon after they start to lay.

WHAT YOU SHOULD WEIGH

And just how do you compare with the regulation weight as given for persons between the age of 45 and 49 years?

Check yourself according to the following table:

4 ft. 11 in.	129 pounds.
5 ft. 0 in.	131 pounds.
5 ft. 1 in.	133 pounds.
5 ft. 2 in.	136 pounds.
5 ft. 3 in.	139 pounds.
5 ft. 4 in.	142 pounds.
5 ft. 5 in.	146 pounds.
5 ft. 6 in.	151 pounds.
5 ft. 7 in.	155 pounds.
5 ft. 8 in.	159 pounds.
5 ft. 9 in.	163 pounds.

WHY NOT SELL IT?

On every farm there is machinery, implements, stock or other things that are not being used and should be turned into money to be used for other purposes.

In every home there is furniture, trunks and other articles that might also be sold. The money could be put to use or in a bank to draw interest. Why not sell such things now?

Or perhaps you have chickens, eggs, plants or seed, or service of some kind that you want to find buyers for. A small ad in this paper will help you find buyers.

Every week these little salesmen are selling goods and service for your neighbors, and at a very low cost. Look around now and have your ad in our next issue. Phone it in if you wish.

$224 in cash was scooped from the till of the Tom Foster general store at Antwerp, Saturday night, while Tom stood by and watched how it was done. A youthful bandit came in and purchased some sox and he followed Mr. Foster to the register for his change and pulled a gun and ordered the cash. He was a boy of about 22 years. He escaped without anyone seeing him except Mr. Foster and the clerk. No trace has been found.

Lieutenant Governor Edgar Bush will address the people of De Kalb county in the assembly room of the court house at Auburn on tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock, October 3. This will be the first public gathering of the fall campaign as outlined by Atty. H. C. Springer. The meeting last Thursday evening at the commercial club dining room was taken to the court house for the speeches because of the immensity of the crowd. More were present than could be fed, so the restaurants were called upon to feed the overflow. Besides the local republican county candidates, Congressman David Hogg and Attorney General James Ogden were the speakers.

NEWVILLE BOY COMMITS SUICIDE

The body of the man who committed suicide at a down-town hotel in Fort Wayne Monday night, September 22, by taking poison was identified Sunday as that of Wallace Webster, 26, of R. R. No. 6 Butler, Newville, DeKalb county.

Millard Smith and Robert Hablawetz of Newville saw Webster's picture in the Sunday edition of The Journal-Gazette and at once recognized Webster.

They came to Fort Wayne Sunday and looked at the body which has been held at Schone's Sons' funeral home. They identified the body without hesitation and recognized the man's clothing.

Webster's father, Eugene Webster, is visiting a daughter in Iowa and could not be reached. Webster made his home with his father and worked on the elder Webster's farm.

On Sunday, September 21, Webster said that he was going to Fort Wayne. He was taken to Auburn by Byron Miller and Kenneth Wasson, both of Newville. When they reached Auburn Webster was said to have gotten out of the machine and started for Ft. Wayne and that was the last any of his friends saw of him.

Webster committed suicide about 9 o'clock Monday night. He had gone into the hotel about 20 minutes before and claimed that he had a headache. He was taken to a room where he remained a short time. Then he walked into the hall and asked for a glass of water. He said that he wanted to take some headache powder. When the water was given to him he removed the ice and poured the contents of a small bottle in the water. After stirring it he lifted it to his mouth and said, "It is good time powder." Police were called at once but Webster died before he could be moved.

At first it was believed that he was an ex-convict for he had made the remark that he had no name and had been known by number only for the last two years.

With only this information to work on police concentrated their search through the various bureaus of criminal identification. The man's classification could not be found in the national bureau at Washington, D. C., the state bureau at Indianapolis, the Dayton, O., bureau of the Ohio state prison bureau. Then it was reported that he had been a patient at the government hospital at Marion but he could not be identified there.

His measurements and fingerprints were taken by Detective Sergeant Ernest Frankfather and Plainclothes Officer John Roth and filed with various bureaus in hopes of identifying the man.

Smith and Hablawetz informed Dr. L. S. McKeman, county coroner, Detective Sergeants Walter Bernhardt and Richard Barrett and Plainclothes Officer George Swain they had identified the body.

Webster formerly lived at Ferndale, Mich., with his mother who died two years ago.

The body will be held at Schone's Sons' funeral home until the father can be informed of his son's death.—Monday's Ft. Wayne Journal-Gazette.

TONKEL ROAD TO BE STATE ROAD NUMBER ONE

Announcement was made in Ft. Wayne Wednesday by the Fort Wayne Motor club that the Tonkel and Leo roads between Auburn and Fort Wayne had been designated by the state highway commission as state road No. 1 and was being marked.

However, the road, the paving of which was recently completed, has not yet been formally accepted. The state furnished an inspector for the construction of the highway and the commission must file notice of acceptance before the county commissioners take such action. This may be done at the session of the county board that starts Monday.

State road No. 1, according to the announcement at Fort Wayne, will extend from the junction with No. 27 at Main and Seventh Streets in Auburn to the corner of Washington Boulevard and Clinton Street at Fort Wayne.

The Fort Wayne Motor club also announced that between Fort Wayne and Garrett, paving of road No. 27 which has been in progress several months, will be open to traffic about Oct. 15. Most of it is already in use.

NEEDLE SHOWS UP AFTER 25 YEARS

A needle swallowed twenty-five years ago by Mrs. Zella Hinman of Waterloo, was extracted from the upper part of one of her legs last Tuesday at the home of her brother, R. D. Smalley of Auburn.

The unusual experience of Mrs. Hinman started from a practice of holding needles in her mouth while sewing. In some manner she swallowed one and until eight weeks ago she never had experienced any trouble from it. At that time she was saized with excruciating pains which were so intense that at times she was unable to stand on her leg. Swelling appeared and inflammation set in. Mrs. Hinman was bedfast part of the time.

On advice of her physician Mrs. Hinman poulticed her leg and the head of the needle made its appearance. With the aid of a pair of tweezers it was extracted.

AUTO FATALITIES DECREASED IN AUGUST

There was a decided decrease in accidents and fatalities for the month of August according to the report of the Accident Department of the Auto License Department made public by Otto G. Fifield, Secretary of State, today.

The report shows that there was a decrease of 147 accidents over July, and a decrease of 55 fatalities over the previous month.

The report shows that there were a total of 1,194 persons injured during the month of August as against 1,305 for July. This is a decrease of 111. Of the 138 fatalities for the month 22 children under the age of 15 years were killed.

A further analysis of the report shows that the total accidents for the six months period from March 1st to September 1st were 5,676, and the total of 1,016 fatalties, and a total of 6,908 injuries.

Mr. Fifield said that he was pleased to note the decrease in injuries and accidents for the month, and attributed it to the hearty co-operation of the various enforcement officers all over the state, and the willingness that had been displayed by drivers of automobiles to obey the traffic regulations. He also stated that he believed the Driver's License Law was beginning to show its effect and that the average driver would be more careful to protect his license to operate a motor vehicle.

At the hospital an interne was very businesslike.

"Her husband has identified her. Yes, he is with her now. No, you can't come in—well, only for a moment."

There lay Ernestine in the stiff, long-sleeved, hospital shirt, her hair black between her white face and the white pillow, a nurse beside her counting her respiration, Will crouching there, his face against the covers. Her eyes were opened, flushed with fever. She was talking—pleading—in delirium. Ernestine, the darling sister—in this dreadful place!

"You will all have to go," said the nurse, snapping shut her old-fashioned watch and darting a resentful look at the interne. "We cannot have anybody in this ward after hours. Mr. Todd, you will have to go."

"Ernestine," cried Lillian, and Ernestine said quickly:

"Will's coming. I tell you my name is Briceland B-r-i-c-e-l-a-n-d—I think there's more. The bus ran over me—it leaped at me—"

"She was crushed?" exclaimed Lillian, and the nurse said:

"No—she's just delirious. Please go."

"Can't we have her moved to a private room? Can't we move her?" It was Loring now.

Will had lifted his face, and he stared at Ernestine and gently smoothed her cheek, while her bright eyes turned on him.

"Papa—you must find Will—he'll worry," she urged him.

"I can't say about moving her. You'll have to see the floor doctor. She is very ill to be moved—please leave the ward now."

The nurse was definite. Training and authority were behind her, and they withdrew. Even Will had to leave her, but Ernestine made such an outcry that the nurse permitted him to come back until Loring should make arrangements to move Ernestine.

Lillian found herself in a tiny reception room furnished barely. Loring had gone to the office, Mrs. Bennett to the phone booth downstairs. For a moment Lillian thought she was going to be sick. She clung desperately to the arms of the chair. She was the only woman in the room. A black man stood near her, twisting a cloth cap in his hands, his lips moving soundlessly. There was another man, shabby, unclean, suffering in patient silence, and they were joined by a third and then a fourth vague quiet figure.

Lillian's feelings were not of pity but revulsion. She could not bear it—Ernestine here with the scum of the earth—mamma's baby—their beauty—in this place that smelled of lysol, that was as full of the sounds of sickness and suffering as purgatory is full of groans. This place was hell, it was nightmare. There came from the streets the clang of an ambulance—and a stretcher moved in the hall. Loring was beside her, beckoning.

"We are taking her to the Presbyterian hospital. They'll have a room and a nurse for her when we get there. Also a good doctor."

Lillian followed him in confusion. The ambulance she had heard was for Ernestine. The taxi threaded after it through the streets, and again there was delay. Mrs. Bennett left them to go back home. Will was with Ernestine and the stretcher. But now, at last, a small freshly painted room, as clean as a scalded dish, a high narrow bed, by an open window, an electric fan on a white dressing table, a chair or two, and a graduate nurse, capable, cool. There was a doctor, too.

Lillian stood just inside the door. The doctor was silent for a long time, examining Ernestine, reading the copy of the chart that had been sent with her.

"Uremea—and some albumen," he said as though any of them knew what he meant. "The baby will be premature—if we can get her through her confinement now swiftly, she'll be all right. When did you say she was expectant?"

Will named the date. The doctor nodded with satisfaction as though his worst fears were confirmed.

"Well, it's a nasty case," he said, "but perhaps we shall pull her through. Miss Nana"—he turned to the nurse with a rapid fire of instructions and requests and laid his coat aside. "Now—there's nothing any of you can do but give us elbow room and quiet. She's already had two convulsions. When the next comes we shall be ready for her—" The horrid word shot through Lillian's mind like a sword thrust. No—no—only idiot children—only diseased and terrible people—only the poor and helpless were so afflicted. Not Ernestine—oh, God—not Ernestine!

The doctor put them out with deliberate firmness, allowing Will to stay.

"If you go across the street, there's a nice little hotel there. Tell the clerk I sent you, and go to bed. Miss Nana will call you if there's any change, or if she's delivered. The battle is ours, now."

Lillian knew that it was as hard for Loring as it was for her to accept this dismissal and leave Will behind. Will was so futile! He would have left her in that other dreadful place.

In silence they crossed the street, registered at the hotel, and were assigned a room. They moved about in silent misery, looking out of the windows at the walls of the hospital.

"Did you know Will lost his job?"

Loring hesitated. "Yes," he said at last. "I knew it."

"But why—"

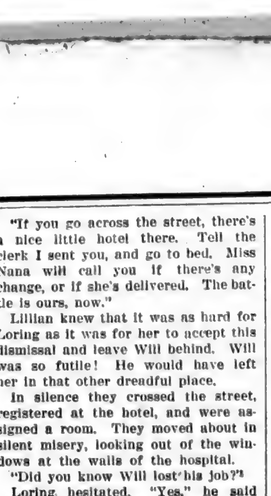
"I didn't know how Ernestine would take it, if I butted in. I thought she would let us know if she needed us."

"You know how proud she is—"

Loring moved restlessly. "I think I'll go back to the hospital. You stay here. No need for both of us to go. I'll call you if you're needed."

Weary and confused, Lillian took off her clothes, bathed in the tiny bathroom and lay down across the bed, partly dressed again. Her whole thought was strained at first toward the hospital and the possible issue of Ernestine's illness. Then her thoughts turned and turned, from Loring to Ernestine, to Will, to mamma and papa and Ernestine and back to mamma again. Mamma had allowed papa and Loring to dictate to her about Will's father. That had really separated Ernestine from them long ago. They had offered Ernestine their love and help only at the price of betrayal of her marriage. Tears came to Lillian, and eventually, tired and sad, she fell asleep.

Daylight streaming over her bed wakened her. She rose, dressed, went across to the hospital and asked for



She Sat There and Watched Him Prepare Supper.

Will, wondering as she did so whether or not she should have asked for Loring.

Will came to her in the reception room, looking at her from dull heavy eyes, silent, waiting.

"How is Ernestine, Will?" she asked him softly.

"She is still very ill," he answered, and added as an afterthought: "The baby is a girl."

He was exhausted, unshaved, sad and awry. As he stood there looking vaguely about him he seemed to Lillian the most forlorn and helpless human being she had ever seen. She pitied him, but he vexed her.

"Oh, Will," she said impulsively, "you shouldn't have allowed Ernestine to have this other baby—so soon, when you weren't prepared. You should have protected her." He averted his face, but she saw his flush.

"I've got to go back upstairs," he said, and added, as he turned to the door, "Loring has already lectured me on birth control. He's left the hospital. You must have missed him."

Lillian was ashamed. She had not intended to say such a thing. It was none of their business, really. At the hotel she stopped at the desk for the key, but Loring had it. She went up in the quiet elevator. When she opened the unlocked door of their room and went in, Loring was lying back in a chair by the open window, his hat on the floor beside him, his collar and tie lying upon it. He was staring straight before him, and when Lillian came to his side he looked up at her with a piteous expression.

For a moment, standing there, a dart of such pain went through Lillian that she cried out. This was what Ernestine could do to Loring. She knew, with a gripping pang of conviction, that nothing that could ever happen to her would cause him such anguish—such rout. This was what Will meant when he said that he knew what was the matter with Loring! She fell on her knees beside him, sobbing, and laid her face upon his knee. His hand fell on her shoulders. He mistook her fear and pain.

"She'll be all right, Lillian," he whispered. "God grant she will! The doctor said that a day or two will tell. It's uremic poisoning."

He sat forward in his chair, and his clenched hand fell on one knee, while the other arm held her convulsively.

"Thank God you weren't there. Thank God you will never know how she suffered. Will fainted once, and the nurse brought me into the room. They were fighting death like a physical foe. I helped to hold her—" He gave a stifled cry and tore the buttons from his shirt as he expanded his lungs against the crushing fear that lay upon him.

"Oh, Lillian," he cried to his wife, "I don't see how she can live—after last night. The doctor thinks she will, and so does Doctor Grey. He's with her now. But I don't see how she can survive that struggle. But one thing is settled for us, for ever." He pulled her tear-wet face up from his knee, and looked at her with blazing eyes. "You and I will have to be enough. No child is worth such anguish. No life is worth—death. No children—for us."

She hid her face against him. Her arms held him close.

"I don't care, if only you will love me."

He pressed her to him but his eyes had flown to the windows of the hospital, and she felt a tremor pass through his big frame.

* * * * * * *

Ernestine stayed in the hospital until the baby was a month old. Will borrowed the money from Mr. Poole and paid the hospital bill, paid the nurse and the two doctors, the day she was to be discharged. Loring protested in vain. The removal to the expensive private hospital had been his suggestion—it was he who got the nurse, who got the two doctors; he had planned to meet all these expenses. But Will was deaf to him. He was going to pay Ernestine's hospital bill, he declared, if he had to rob a bank. What business was it of Loring's? It was Will's wife—Will's child.

Legally the debt was Todd's. There was nothing that could be done about it, but the argument increased the bad blood between the men. Ernestine wanted to go to her own home, she told Lillian. Mamma was hurrying back from Europe. The house at the lake was closed. Lillian remonstrated with Ernestine's determination to go back to the house out in Mayfair.

"But what will you do?" she asked, and her face grew red. "Will isn't even working."

"Yes, I am," said Will. "I started today. Mr. Poole is going to open an independent studio, and I am going to work for him. He's got hold of the copyrights to his old strip and we are going to syndicate it ourselves. It will bring us in a lot of money. I'm to get fifty dollars a week to begin with . . . and we'll be all right."

Lillian's dismay was increased, not diminished, by this news. The combination of Will and Mr. Poole was worse than nothing, it appeared to her.

"I don't know what 'mamma' will say," she protested feebly, but neither Ernestine nor Will seemed to be moved by that.

It was a wonderful day when Ernestine went home. All the way home in the taxi Will held the baby in one arm and Ernestine in the other, and his face was shining with joy when at last they stood in their little kitchen, she weak and trembling in his arms. He was starved for her, but he kissed her gently, got the rocker and filled it with cushions and placed it by the open kitchen door. She sat there and watched him prepare supper.

"Will," she said, when they had eaten, and he had closed the door against the fall dusk, "you're like you used to be. You're like you were that day we met upon the street, when I first fell in love with you. Tell me, what is it?"

"The new job, I guess. I'm crazy about it, Ernestine. In the first place, to be working again is good—and to be working for John Poole.—And then, Ernestine, I think we're going to do it.—I believe we'll make a success—a big one."

His enthusiasm was boundless. While he washed the dishes he talked to her, and then they put the children to bed, and he drew Ernestine onto his knees.

"Tell me, Ernestine—it was an ungodly business—but you aren't sorry, are you? Now that you're both home again—you're glad we've got her—aren't you?"

They sat looking at the baby. Will pressed his cheek against Ernestine's shoulder.

"Tell me," he implored her.

Ernestine understood his need for assurance. He was still suffering from the humiliation Lillian and Loring had heaped on him.

"They said—I shouldn't have allowed—allowed," he exclaimed sharply at the word. "I never thought about it."

"We're married, aren't we?" asked Ernestine, and as his bright look questioned her she shook her head a little.

"That's all," she said. "That's the answer. I'm your wife—I love you—of course I'm glad."

He kissed her passionately. It seemed so long since she had been in his arms like this—close, close.

"Oh, Ernestine," he said, "I don't deserve you. The future is uncertain. But if ever a wife deserved a good husband, you do. But, sweetheart, it's hard, it's been harder for you than for me; don't think I don't know it. But it's been worth the risk, hasn't it?"

"As long as we hold together," she whispered. "As long as we love."

And he poured his kisses upon her thin flushed face.

"I'll make up to you for everything—you'll never be sorry," he told her. And she lay against him, yielding, tremulous and in love, forgetting everything else for him as she had forgotten again and again.

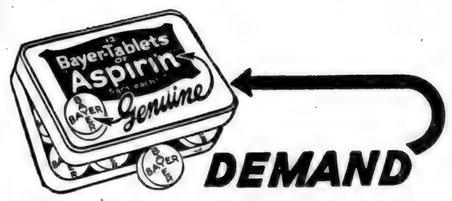
ASPIRIN..

Beware of Imitations



Unless you see the name Bayer and the word genuine on the package as pictured above you can never be sure that you are taking the genuine Bayer Aspirin that thousands of physicians prescribe in their daily practice.

The name Bayer means genuine Aspirin. It is your guarantee of purity—your protection against imitations. Millions of users have proved that it is safe.

Genuine Bayer Aspirin promptly relieves

Headache — Sore Throat — Rheumatism
Colds — Neuralgia — Neuritis

SAFE No harmful after-effects follow its use. It does not depress the heart.

Aspirin is the trade-mark of Bayer Manufacture of Monoaceticacidester of Salicylicacid

"Legally Dead" Mexican Loses Vast Properties

Juventino Ledesma is a man who has been officially pronounced dead and is unable to recover vast properties belonging to him while officially alive. His nephew, Jose Alveres, inherited from him when news reached Mexico that he had crossed the Great Divide in Canada and declares that he can have no dealings with a dead man. Forced to abandon Mexico for his participation in a revolution against General Obregon, Juventino Ledesma started life anew as a lumberer in Canada. Rolling logs down a stream three years ago, he and a score of men lost their balance in a rapid. Knocked on the head by a log, the swift current carried him away and he was discovered unconscious many miles beyond the site of the mishap. Suffering from amnesia and unbalanced mind, he was reported missing until recently when he unexpectedly appeared before his nephew, Jose, to claim his property.

Canada's Mighty River

Only England's Thames and Germany's Rhine are comparable to the mighty St. Lawrence in the lure it holds for the traveler. Yet the St. Lawrence has a character completely its own. It is the throbbing artery of eastern Canada. During the centuries it has been known to civilization it has changed from a river of remote, unknown origin to a great seaway, crowded with the commerce of the seven seas.

When Food Sours

Lots of folks who think they have "indigestion" have only an acid condition which could be corrected in five or ten minutes. An effective anti-acid like Phillips Milk of Magnesia soon restores digestion to normal.

Phillips does away with all that sourness and gas right after meals. It prevents the distress so apt to occur two hours after eating. What a pleasant preparation to take! And how good it is for the system! Unlike a burning dose of soda—which is but temporary relief at best—Phillips Milk of Magnesia neutralizes many times its volume in acid.

Next time a hearty meal, or too rich a diet has brought on the least discomfort, try—

Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments

WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

MARY, THE MOTHER OF JESUS: AN EXAMPLE OF MOTHERHOOD

LESSON TEXT—Luke 2:15-19; John 2:1-5; 19:25-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—But Mary kept all these sayings, pondering them in her heart.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Mary, the Mother of Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Mary, the Mother of Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What We Owe Our Mothers.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—A Mother's Influence.

I. Who Mary Was (Luke 1:20, 27).

She was a Jewish maid of Nazareth. The first information we have of her is that she was engaged to be married to Joseph, a carpenter of the same village. The custom among the Jews was for betrothal to take place about a year before marriage. During this interval the woman remained with her parents.

II. Mary Accepted Motherhood at God's Command (Luke 1:26-56).

1. God sent Gabriel to Mary (vv. 26-38).

It was during this interval of betrothal before Joseph and Mary were married that God sent the angel Gabriel to announce to Mary that she was to be the mother of Jesus. More than seven hundred years before, Isaiah prophesied that a virgin should give birth to a son whose name should be called Immanuel—God With Us (Isaiah 7:14). Though at first perplexed, she accepted the annunciation with remarkable courage and devotion. Mary accepted motherhood at a tremendous cost. She was conscious of her virgin purity. She knew that to become a mother under such circumstances would expose her to suspicion and shame. This was the view that certain Jews took of the matter, for they cast into the face of Jesus, that he was born of fornication (John 8:41). Her faith was such that she responded with noble courage.

2. Mary visits Elisabeth (Luke 1:39-45).

In her embarrassment she set out on a visit to an elderly kinswoman named "Elisabeth," where she could have the help of a woman of spiritual discernment.

3. Mary's song (vv. 46-56).

Having sought the sympathy and encouragement of her friend, her triumphant faith carried her beyond the misunderstanding and shame which awaited her, and caused her soul to burst out in a wonderful song of praise. As pointed out by another, three features of her character stand out in this song:

(1) Her heart purity.

Only a pure heart rejoices at the nearness of God.

(2) Her humility.

She forgot herself and gave her heart in praise to God.

(3) Her unselfishness.

She did not primarily think of the undying honor which would be attached to her, but the blessing which would come upon future generations through her.

4. The birth of Christ at Bethlehem (Luke 2:15-19).

What Gabriel announced to Mary was now being fulfilled. Caesar's decree concerning taxation brought Joseph and Mary to Bethlehem for the fulfillment of Micah 5:2. Because of the crowded inn, the birth of the world's Savior took place in a stable.

III. Mary's Faith in Her Son (John 2:1-5).

1. Her anxiety (v. 3).

The arrival of Jesus and his disciples put a drain upon the resources of the host, for their invitation seemingly came after their arrival at Cana.

2. Mary presents the need to Jesus (v. 3).

The clear implication is that she requested him to embrace this opportunity to present his Messianic claims by working a miracle.

3. Jesus asserts his authority (v. 4).

He respectfully reminded his mother that he had now passed from her authority and that his Father's will was supreme.

4. Mary's confidence (v. 5).

Perhaps as he asserted his authority he gave her a sign by which she understood that he would not fail her in her hour of embarrassment. Accordingly she directed the servants to carry out whatever instructions he should give.

IV. A Dying Son's Thought for His Mother (John 19:25-27).

It is beautiful to note the tender care which Jesus in his dying hour manifested for his mother. He committed her to the care of John. John accepted the responsibility of a son and took her to his own home.

Where Andree Perished

Wellman's Map, Showing Frithjof Nansen Land, Where Andree's Body Was Found.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

FRITHJOF NANSEN LAND (formerly Franz Josef Land) has, after a third of a century, given up the body of August Andree, believed to have been lost forever in the Arctic ice.

The Swedish explorer disappeared in his balloon in 1897, north of Spitsbergen close to the place at which Nobile's dirigible later disappeared. Explorers were at first hopeful that he had drifted eastward to Franz Josef Land. Walter Wellman, assisted by the National Geographic society, led an expedition to Franz Josef Land the following year and thought it likely that he would find Andree at Cape Flora, on one of the southernmost of the islands which was known by Andree to be a headquarters and a frequent point of call for explorers. Andree was not at Cape Flora, however, and no trace of him or his balloon was ever found in Franz Josef Land until a few weeks ago.

Although the islands are desolate and ice-mantled and have never been inhabited, it is possible for men to exist there, even through the winter, as the history of Arctic exploration proves. The land was discovered accidentally in 1873 by an Austro-Hungarian expedition bent on finding the northeast passage. Their ship, caught in the ice, drifted to the southern extremity of the island group, and the crew wintered in her fast in the ice.

In 1881 a British party of 25, its ship crushed, wintered on shore, living partly on bear and walrus meat. Wellman and his companions spent the winter of 1898-99 on shore, and the Zeigler expedition wintered over in 1904-5.

Group of Many Islands.

Its Austro-Hungarian discoverer named the land "Franz Josef Land" under the impression that it was a large land mass, perhaps even of continental size. Later exploration disclosed that it is a group of many islands. Thirty of these are ten miles or more in length and the remainder—scores of them—are small. Several of the islands are as much as 50 miles long. The group lies slightly farther north than Spitsbergen, and its center is as far east of King's bay as New York is east of Detroit. It is as far north of the Murman coast of Russia and the northern coast of Norway as Chicago is north of New Orleans. It is about the same distance from the North pole.

The land's name was recently changed to Frithjof Nansen Land by a vote of the Russian Association of Science. The island group's new name is appropriate because the islands were the scene of one of the most dramatic episodes in the life of the late Frithjof Nansen. The land which has been named for him literally saved his life and preserved him for the valuable humanitarian career that reached a climax when he, in cooperation with Herbert Hoover, saved the lives of millions of famine-stricken Russians.

Nansen took a small party on board the specially constructed vessel Fram and entered the ice floes off northern Siberia in 1893 with the hope of drifting with the ice across the North pole. They drifted for 35 months, locked in the ice, without sighting land and without a single contact with the world. Nansen and his crew were believed to be lost.

When Nansen found that the Fram was not drifting toward the pole, he determined to dash, with a single companion, over the ice to the top of the world. Johansen was picked to go with him. They took three sledges, 22 dogs and two kayaks (Eskimo canoes). They did not attain their objective, but they made a new "farthest north," 86 degrees and 12 minutes, just 228 miles south of the pole. From their northernmost point the two men turned south and began one of the longest marches ever made over Arctic ice. Finally they were reduced to two dogs.

After many days they reached Eva island, one of the outlying islands of what is now Frithjof Nansen Land. Building a stone hut, they lived on the isolated isle through the winter, subsisting chiefly on bear meat. Next spring they started south for the main islands of the group. Nansen's kayak was attacked by a huge walrus that drove its tusks through the fragile craft, but Nansen scrambled out on a cake of ice as the tiny boat filled with water, and they made their way to the southern islands.

There they met, to their great joy, Frederick Jackson, leader of an English expedition. Although Jackson had met Nansen years before, he failed, for the moment, to recognize in the bearded, black-skinned, sooty-haired wanderer the famous blond Norwegian explorer. Nansen and Johansen came home on the English party's whaler; the Fram arrived a few days later. Nansen, who had been given up for dead, received a tremendous welcome.

The sea between northern Spitsbergen and northern Frithjof Nansen Land is usually packed with an almost unbroken expanse of ice so that navigation northward is seldom possible. Even the narrower channels between the Frithjof Nansen islands are eternally frozen, but the larger channels become ice free in summer. Between southern Spitsbergen and the southern islands there is often open water in summer. Farther south, however, the ice is usually packed, and this floating barrier must be traversed by ships steaming from Russia and Norway to Frithjof Nansen Land.

Because of its far northern position and the greater distance the Arctic arm of the Gulf stream must flow to reach it, Frithjof Nansen Land is marked by Arctic conditions to a greater extent than Spitsbergen. It has been called the world's "most characteristic polar land." Most of the islands are plateaus less than 1,000 feet high, covered with domes of ice. At some points the black basalt crags that form the edges of the plateaus protrude from the white ice and snow. Coastal lowlands are of small extent save on two or three of the westernmost islands.

Vegetation and Animal Life.

The vegetation of the few snow-free spots is scant, consisting only of lichens, mosses, and several grasses. The animal life, too, is meager—for the most part, a few polar bears and fewer foxes on land; walruses and seals in the water. The bird life is the richest. Great flocks of little auks, dovekies and other birds frequent the islands from March to September. There are no reindeer or hares.

One important item for castaways is the existence of considerable quantities of driftwood along the shores of the inter-island channels. This is evidently wood cast out into the Arctic ocean by the great northward flowing rivers of Siberia such as the Obi and the Yenisei.

Not only has former Franz Josef Land become a memorial in its entirety. Because it is divided, and subdivided, into numerous islands, large and small, with numerous channels and capes and headlands, it has demanded innumerable names.

The history of exploration in the islands by men of various nationalities is in large part written on the map: British Channel, Alexandra Island, Harmsworth Straits, Cambridge Bay, Wilczek Island, Wayprecht Sea, Crown Prince Rudolf Land, Pierpont Morgan Strait, Vanderbilt Sound, Graham Bell Island, Whitney Sea. Austrians, English, Americans, Norwegians and Italians have had a hand in seeking out the secrets of this icy island group.

One of the latest explorations in Frithjof Nansen Land before the expedition which found Andree's body this summer was in 1925 by a British party which carried into the region the first modern radio equipment. The party constantly checked its time by radio signals from the Eiffel tower, Paris, and listened to music and announcements from London and other stations.

Look not with mockery on the efforts of a weak brother and his efforts to stem the tide.

Harmonic relationship with your neighbor is the basic element of every thriving community.

Do these times of industrial and religious depression point to a revival of leading to a new and better day?

Well, as a community and Concord-ians, speaking relative to christian brotherhood, shall we go on over and possess the land?

Every man can settle his own problems and difficulty by his own effort—generate your own solution by ambition, you can work out of any mix up—by good works.

Mr. Hogg's Busy Record

As it seems that there is inquiry from Democratic sources in the 12th District as to what Congressman Hogg has done for his people, the publicity bureau of the Republican State Committee furnished the following concrete items of public service:

Handled 2,400 compensation and pension cases and secured $328,000.00 additional ANNUAL payments for veterans and their dependents.

Obtained 340 miles extension daily R. F. D. Service.

Secured enactment of 148 special bills for district.

Appropriations for new postoffice buildings at Fort Wayne and Auburn and appointment of local architect for Fort Wayne building.

Sponsored and got every tariff rate except two asked by the Twelfth District.

Helped to effect three Federal major tax reductions.

Prompt attention given to 20,800 requests.

Cumulative sick leave law introduced and enacted.

Report Bad Driving

AND SAVE LIVES

This is the insigula we have used for many years.

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

ANNOUNCING the new Red Top POST PULLER

NOW you don't have to "dig out" Red Tops when you wish to change, remove or relocate a fence line. You can pull them with the Red Top one man Post Puller. This much needed time, energy and labor saving tool will pull all types of Red Tops In using it you will experience the same convenience and satisfaction that you have found in the Red Top Post and the Red Top One Man Driver. It takes the last of the drudgery out of fence building and repair.

The simplest, quickest and easiest way to build fence is the Red Top way. With a Red Top Driver one man, unassisted, can drive 200 to 300 Red Tops a day through the hardest soil. They make strong permanent fences and are convenient for quickly throwing up temporary fences—and now with the Red Top one man Post Puller removing or relocating a fence becomes a simple, easy job.

Come in right away and get the Red Tops you'll need to build your temporary fences this fall, for building the new fence you have planned and for replacing rotting wood posts. Get this work completed this fall and take the job out of next year's busy spring

HINTS ABOUT FOODS THAT WILL BE ENJOYED BY THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

There is no trait you can not overcome,
Say not thy evil instinct is inherited,
Or that some trait inborn makes thy whole life forlorn
And calls for punishment that is not merited.

Back of thy parents and grandparents lies
The Great Eternal Will, that, too, is thine
Inheritance—strong beautiful divine:
Sure lever of success for one who tries.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

Creamed dishes such as mushrooms, sweet breads, minced ham or chicken on toast or served with small biscuits are always in order. For some, marmalade and tea with a simple cake will be all they will care for. Fresh fruits, ice cream or ices are always favorites for dessert. All of the dishes may be prepared sometime before and if to be hot, reheated, so that the serving may be a very simple matter if all is well planned.

Spinach Mold.—Put fresh spinach through the meat grinder and pack solidly in a cup. For every two cupfuls of spinach pulp add two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, salt and pepper to taste, a dash of cayenne and a few drops of onion juice. Pack in a buttered mold, stand in a pan of water and bake until firm. Turn out the mold and garnish with horseradish and whipped cream.

Butter Taffy.—Boil two cupfuls of brown sugar, one-fourth cupful of molasses, two tablespoonfuls of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of water and a teaspoonful of salt until when tried in cold water the mixture is brittle. When nearly done add one-fourth of a cupful of butter and before turning into the pan add flavoring. Cool, mark into squares.

Philadelphia Pepper Pot.—Wash a small veal knuckle, add one large onion and cover with three quarts of water; simmer for several hours. Skim off the fat after cooling. Add two potatoes cut into dice, one pound of cooked tripe cut fine, one bay leaf, tablespoonful finely chopped parsley and the meat cut into small pieces. Cook slowly, season with salt and pepper, rub flour to a paste with water or add noodles for thickening.

Molasses Dumpling.—Add lard to dough taken from the bread bowl, make into balls the size of a walnut and place in a well greased pan to rise. Cook one cupful each of water, molasses and one tablespoonful of butter. Pour this sauce over the light dough just before putting into the oven. Bake in a moderate oven and serve with more of the sauce poured over them.

Maple Cream Sauce.—Boil one and one-half cupfuls of maple sirup until it makes a hard ball when dropped into cold water. Remove from the heat and stir in two well beaten egg whites, add two tablespoonfuls of cream and a teaspoonful of vanilla. One cupful of maple sugar and one-half cupful of water may be used instead of the sirup.

Pineapple Aspic.—Add enough orange juice to a large can of pineapple to make a pint of juice all together. Heat the juice, add one-quarter of a cupful of sugar, a teaspoonful of lemon juice. Soak one and one-half tablespoonful of gelatine in one-fourth of a cupful of water, dissolve in the hot juice. Cut the pineapple into small pieces and cover with aspic. Allow to set. Chill thoroughly with cream and chopped pistachio nuts.

Southern Salad.—Peel and cut five oranges into very thin slices, divide each slice into quarters. Peel a medium-sized cucumber and dice into small cubes. Chop a green pepper and marinate the mixture with french dressing. Arrange on individual plates on beds of watercress and serve very cold. Use one-half cupful of french dressing for this amount of salad.

Fruit, Gelatin Combination Makes Nice Dessert

Fruits in gelatin are always delicious for dessert. Tokay or Malaga grapes—the kind with firm flesh—are used in the following recipe for a mold made with grape juice from Concord grapes. As in most recipes containing fruit juices, a little lemon is added to intensify the fruit flavor. The proportions have been tested by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture:

2 tbs. gelatin
½ cup cold water
1½ cups boiling water
¼ cup sugar
¼ tsp. salt
2 tbs. lemon juice
2 cups grape juice
2 cups seeded Tokay or Malaga grapes

Soften the gelatin in the cold water for five minutes, add the boiling water, sugar, and salt and stir until dissolved. When cool mix with the lemon and grape juice, chill, and when partly set stir in the grapes, put into a wet mold, let stand until firm, turn out on a plate and serve with whipped cream.

Bluish-Purple Coffee Is Not a New Development

When a Cincinnati housewife noticed a bluish-purple fluid bubbling up under the glass top of the coffee percolator, her surprise can be easily imagined. She called her husband to verify her recognition of colors and he, too, saw the fluid a blue instead of the usual rich brown of coffee.

Officials of the federal food and drug administration's Cincinnati station were called on to explain. Was this a new development in coffee color or was the product adulterated?

Chemists carefully examining the ground coffee found small pieces of a blue substance and bits of wood which proved to be parts of an indelible pencil. It was decided that a grocery clerk's pencil accidentally fell into the coffee grinder as the coffee was being ground.

In becoming well-heeled look out that you don't become half-souled.

CALCIUM IN OUR DIET IS NEEDED TO BUILD STRONG BONES AND TEETH

Some Common Sources of Calcium in Diet.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

We need enough calcium in our diet to make strong bones and teeth while we are growing and to replace what is lost in everyday use when we are older. Children who have not been given foods to supply them with sufficient calcium have poorly formed, brittle bones and soft teeth.

During very early childhood the most important source of calcium is milk. As the diet increases many other calcium-rich foods are added. Cheese, for instance, which is made of milk, stands out as a very rich source.

Calcium is also supplied by certain vegetables, notably spinach, cauliflower, endive, dandelion greens and cabbage, rutabaga, white turnips, turnip tops, parsnips, okra, carrots, rhubarb, and watercress; also by oranges, clams, almonds, and hazel nuts, by dried figs and some of the dry legumes such as lentils, cowpeas and others; and by molasses and maple sirup. Milk, however, should always be included as a source of calcium.

In a series of charts on good nutrition the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture shows how laboratory animals increase in weight when sufficient calcium is added to a diet otherwise adequate but lacking this necessary mineral. All of the above-named foods contribute vitamins or other factors as well as calcium, but when the diet is being scrutinized for mineral content, they may be regarded first as sources of calcium.

Cabbage Slaw Takes Place of Other Salads

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sometimes in the winter months lettuce for salads is hard to get. Cabbage slaw takes the place of other salads very nicely under these circumstances. It may be served hot or cold, and may be used as an accompaniment to almost any kind of meat. It goes especially well with fried oysters and other sea food. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture suggests one or two slight variations that help to make cabbage slaw a little different from usual.

Select a hard head of cabbage, cut in quarters, and wash thoroughly in cold water. Drain, shred with a sharp knife, and set aside in a cold place until crisp. Pour hot dressing over the crisp cabbage and stir until well mixed. Serve hot or cold.

One cupful of chopped celery or half cupful of finely shredded green pepper, or one cupful of thinly sliced tart apple can be added.

Dressing for Cabbage Slaw.

2 eggs
¼ cup sugar
¼ cup vinegar
2 tbs. sugar
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. mustard
1/16 tsp. celery seed
2 tbs. butter or other fat

Beat the eggs, add all the ingredients except the fat, and cook in a double boiler until thickened. Stir constantly, and just before removing from the fire, add the fat. Pour over the cabbage while hot. If served as a cold slaw, chill after the dressing is added.

Out of the Ordinary

A letter was delivered to a Baltimore address 35 years late. This is unusual as there are very few inside coat pockets that will wear that long under any circumstances, and very few husbands who could carry a letter around for 35 years without stumbling across it by accident.—Detroit.

FAIRY TALE FOR LITTLE ONES AT THE BEDTIME HOUR

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The moon had been shining but now it was not so bright, and somehow Enty's conversation did not seem so interesting to David. He sung his words now in a slow sing-song fashion which made David want to move his head slowly from side to side without thinking very much about what was being said.

"So you're going to sleep right on my belt," Enty said.

David blinked and saw he had toppled over and that he was indeed on Enty's belt.

"You'd better have a night's rest," Enty added. "We all have to come to it even though it is a bore—at least all humans must sleep.

"But I'll tell you where there is a nice bed for you."

He took David by the hand, which was just as well, for David was stumbling in his sleepiness.

Before David scarcely realized it, he was lying down in the loveliest, warmest, snuggliest bed he had ever known. He did not care much where it was, he was too tired to thank Enty, he just went off to sleep and it wasn't until morning that he knew that he had been sleeping in a most beautiful field of cotton upon some soft white cotton.

As he looked about him a little creature with a cunning, jolly face, dressed all in fluffy, soft white, said:

"You had a pleasant night's rest, didn't you? In just another hour or so you've an engagement to have a swim and breakfast with the Gulf of Mexico, but if you'd like to have a look around, I'd be delighted to show you."

"You Had a Pleasant Night's Rest."

David hastily got up and now he was in a very different part of the country. Here he saw signs which pointed north to South Carolina and a little to the northwest was a sign which said: "This way to Tennessee," while to the west of him was a sign which said, "Alabama." He was, it appeared, in Georgia.

"You're in the second largest cotton growing section in the South," his new friend told him. "Texas takes the lead, and why shouldn't she, with her great size? She is powerfully big, she is.

"But in all these states and in Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma and Arkansas, too, we grow cotton. Of course, sugar and tobacco is grown, but cotton is the great thing.

"I am known as Miss Cotton-Cotton, and I'm a Living Map person. I never appear anywhere else this way. I'm not one of the great Living Map people, I'm simply one of the little ones who show you some of the ways of this section of the country.

"You know how you've seen little Living Map people who've been digging in mines so as to show you what happened in those parts of the real world? I'm just such a person.

"But they have let me have the nice make-believe name of Miss Cotton-Cotton. It's a good name—for in this part of the world there is so much.

"Oh, it would be a very undressed world if it weren't for us." Miss Cotton-Cotton said modestly, but quite bonstfully at the same time.

"But there! I know you must be hungry!" David certainly was.

"Just take this path which goes directly South, passing through Florida, and you will be there in no time at all."

Now Miss Cotton-Cotton had vanished as quickly as she had appeared and David started off in the direction she had pointed out to him.

BACK VIEW OF AUTUMN HATS HOBBY WITH THE MILLINERS

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Viewing many of the new hats from the front, nary a bow, a feather or a flower is in sight, but from the back, well, that is an entirely different story.

Creating attractive back views has apparently become a hobby with the milliner this season. And how cleverly this whim of fashion is being carried out, one may judge from the models illustrated.

The shapely brimmed model to the left at the top is a black vis-a-vis felt. The flower which you see posed at the back is made of black and white belting ribbon. The touch of white on the hat answers to the white pleated frill which enlivens the frock of black crepe. The idea of relating the hat and the frock in matter of color combination is one which receives encouragement throughout the style program.

The beret of feutre glace felt at the right above centers its attractiveness at the very peak of its crown where a bow of the felt and a crystal ornament are posed in a most clever manner.

One of the interesting things milliners are doing this season is to manipulate velvet in every possible way. They shirr it, they tuck it, pleat it, drape it and tie it in bows, making it serve in most instances as its own trimming. The self-trimmed velvet hat below to the left in this group brings its pointed bow ends to the rear, thus answering the call for attractive back views.

As to the little bright feathers which so smartly trim many of the autumn and winter hats, one may expect to find them posed almost anywhere on the hat, and therein lies the secret of their charm. Per example the positioning of the cluster of tiny quills on the draped felt beret in the picture is daring even to the point of being amusing and yet that elusive quality which we call "style" has been achieved in no small degree. Which is true of all feather treatments this season—style achieved through unique pose.

It adds to the prestige of the models here illustrated that they have been approved by that group of American millinery fashion authorities who have associated themselves together for the purpose of promoting authentic and exclusive fashions in millinery.

Street's Change of Name

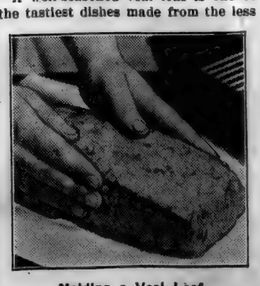
Glassmakers street in New York was the early name of South William street. A glassmaker, Jan Smeedes, was given an allotment of land on Manhattan island and the business he carried on gave the name to South William street.

MOLD MEAT LOAF WITH THE HANDS, BAKE IN WIDE, SHALLOW PAN

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Much better results are obtained, in making a meat loaf, if the ground meat is molded with the hands and baked in a wide shallow pan, than when it is packed into a smaller pan and baked like a loaf of bread. The picture shows a good way to shape a veal loaf so that when it is either hot or cold, attractive slices may be cut from it.

A well-seasoned veal loaf is one of the tastiest dishes made from the less expensive cuts. Meat from the neck, shank, or other cuts not suitable for roasts or cutlets is excellent for use in this way. Cold sliced veal loaf is particularly good as a sandwich filling, with or without a leaf of lettuce or a few sprigs of watercress.



Molding a Veal Loaf.

The following recipe is furnished by the bureau of home economics:

4 cups ground raw veal
1 cup finely diced salt pork
4 tbs. flour
½ cup chopped celery
½ cup chopped parsley
1½ cups milk
¼ cup chopped onion
1 cup fine dry bread crumbs
2 tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
⅛ tsp. celery seed

Fry the salt pork until brown and crisp and remove the pieces from the pan. Make white sauce of the milk, flour, and three tablespoonfuls of the pork drippings, and add to this the bread crumbs and seasonings. Combine all ingredients, using the hands to mix thoroughly. The mixture will have a sticky consistency. Lay a piece of parchment paper on a rack in an open roasting pan. Mold the meat loaf on the paper with the hands. Bake in a moderate over (350 degrees F.) for one and a quarter hours. Do not cover the pan and do not add water to it. Remove the loaf from the paper and serve hot, or chill it for slicing cold.

Rivers of Same Name

There are four Red rivers in the United States, one in Texas and Oklahoma, that empties into the Mississippi; one in Kentucky, empyting into the Kentucky river; one in Wisconsin, emptying into the Wolf river, and the other, a small steam in middle Tennessee, entering the Cumberland river at Clarksville.

How she gets such snowy washes

"THERE'S really no secret about it, my dear. Everyone knows Rinso washes clothes much, much whiter. Not only that, but it saves hard work. I never scrub any more; I let Rinso soak out the dirt. My clothes come so white, I don't even bother about boiling. I think Rinso is wonderful."

Safe for finest linens

Though it works like magic, Rinso is safe. You can trust your finest linens and cottons to its rich, soapy suds. What lasting suds — even in hardest water! You need no bar soaps, chips, powders or softeners.

Cup for cup, Rinso gives twice as much suds as light, puffed-up soaps—it's so compact. Great in washing machines; the makers of 38 famous washers recommend it. And nothing like it for dishes! Get the BIG package.

"A WONDERFUL HELP TO ME"

Read What Mrs. Arnold Says About Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Dothan, Ala.—"What a wonderful help Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been to me. I was so nervous and rundown I couldn't be up half the time. When I had taken one bottle of Vegetable Compound I could tell I felt better, so I took seven bottles and I recommend it highly. It helped my nerves and keeps me strong to do my housework and wait on four little children. I hope some other suffering woman will try it."—Mrs. Porter L. Arnold, 1018 S. The SANDMAN STORY

GRUNTER, THE PIG

"WELCOME, welcome, the pigs welcome you, squeal, squeal, grunt, grunt."

A new pig had come to the Pig Pen, and all the pigs were grunting and squealing.

The new pig's name was Grunter.

He was not a baby pig, nor was he a grown-up pig. He was an in-between pig.

He had a little twisted tail and short bristly pink-white hair and pink eyes and a very roguish way of looking out of the sides of his eyes.

His snout showed that he belonged to the pig family. It was the same snout that runs through the whole family.

"I Have a Good Digestion," Grunter Insisted.

"Grunt, grunt," said Grunter. "I'm glad to come to this Pen.

"It looks as though you had good pigweed around, and the farmer looks as though he fed you well. In fact it looks as though he fed you too well.

"It's a good thing I've come. You might all have collapsed from indigestion if I hadn't come just in time."

"Grunt, grunt, what does he mean?" asked Grandfather Porky.

"Squeal, squeal, what does he mean?" asked Sammy Sausage.

"Grunt, grunt, what does he mean?" asked Brother Bacon.

"Squeal, squeal, what does he mean?" asked little Black Squealer.

"Grunt, grunt, what does he mean?" asked Sir Percival Pork.

"Squeal, squeal, what does he mean?" asked Sir Benjamin Bacon.

"Grunt, grunt, what does he mean?" asked Pinky Pig.

"Squeal, squeal, what does he mean?" asked Master Pink Pig.

"Grunt, grunt, what does he mean?" asked Pinky Pig's mother.

"Squeal, squeal, what does he mean?" asked Mrs. Pink Pig.

"Grunt, grunt, what does he mean?" asked Mrs. Pinky Pig.

"I mean," said Grunter, "that I can eat a little of your food for you, too, as well as my own share—I will do this for each one of you—and then you will not get indigestion."

"Ah, but you might," said Grandfather Porky Pig, "and we could never treat a newcomer that way. We could never permit you to get indigestion. Better far that we get it!"

"No, we could never let you get indigestion," said Sammy Sausage.

"It would not be kind," said Brother Bacon.

"We wouldn't have the heart to do such a thing, to let you get indigestion," said Sir Percival Pork.

"It would be unfair," said Sir Benjamin Bacon.

"Very unfair," said Mrs. Pinky Pig.

"Most unfair," said Mrs. Pink Pig.

"Decidedly unfair," said Pinky Pig.

"Extremely unfair," said Master Grandfather Porky.

And Pinky Pig's mother said:

"Oh, so unfair! We could never be so unfair as to do that."

"Oh, you needn't worry about me," said Grunter. "I have a good digestion."

"Ah, but you must not take chances with it. Any day your digestion may go back on you, and if you ate too much, it would be taking chances," said Grandfather Porky.

"What Grandfather says is right," said Brother Bacon.

"Quite right," said Sammy Sausage.

"Grandpa knows a lot," said Pinky Pig.

And the others all said the same, as they twisted their little tails and looked at Grunter out of their pink eyes.

Grunter looked at them out of his pink eyes and twisted his little tail, too, and said:

"Grunt, grunt, grunt, grunt, grunt, grunt, grunt. No more luck for me here than at home in my home pen. But you all seem a nice lot even though you don't offer food hospitality to me, so I'll stay here, thank you, thank you, grunt, grunt, grunt."

"You're welcome," said all the pigs. "You're very welcome to our mud, our society, our grunts and our squeals, but not to our food, grunt, grunt, squeal, squeal, not to our food!"

And with that understanding the new arrival remained.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

BE YOURSELF

MOST persons are imitators. We all like to follow the crowd. The appeal of the popular seems to be the line of least resistance. "Everybody is doing it," has become the accepted explanation of present-day conduct. We like to follow the fashions. In proportion that we do so, do we become imitators of some other person's ideas. Somebody or a group of persons starts a fashion to wear a certain kind of garment in a certain way with definite size and shape with the result that everybody does the same. Why? Because it is the thing to do regardless of the fact that such a fashion may not be particularly becoming in our special case. Our own taste may dictate an entirely different style, but we do not have the courage to make the venture, because it is not the fashion. We want to be like the crowd. We very seriously desire to follow the crowd. We dare not be ourselves.

It is interesting to note how a certain type of amusement catches the attention and patronage of the crowd. It has become popular because the public supports that particular amusement with its enthusiasm and gate receipts. When popular enthusiasm begins to wane, as it is sure to do if given time enough, we wonder what in the world we saw in it. Our disillusionment leads us to conclude that we really never did find any enjoyment in it, we did what the crowd did, and that may have brought us a sort of satisfaction for the time being, but nothing of permanent value.

While the easier way is to follow the crowd, the harder way is to go contrary to the crowd. We dare not be ourselves. It seems almost impossible to be original.

To do a certain thing because you know it is right, to live in a certain location because it appeals to you, to wear a certain garment regardless of prevailing style because you like it, to say what you think regardless of popular opinion, which is most likely to differ with you, to refuse to appear artificial by using facial cosmetics—is to dare to be yourself. Being original may not win popularity, but it will win real friends who will believe in you and trust you. The most valuable possession you have is yourself. Why sell it to the crowd? "To thine own self be true and it must follow as the night the day—thou canst not then be false to any man."

Whole Page of Wisdom in One Short Sentence

Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, after campaigning for her husband, said at a little dinner:

"Before another primary campaign, I hope instructions to candidates' wives will be glazed and framed or distributed like Baedekers. The advice is very personal and contradictory. One says 'talk all you want to but don't have your picture taken'; another says 'keep quiet and be photographed'; another suggests baking a pie or a cake.

"I think the soundest advice came from an old friend who said: 'Don't break rule number six,' and when I asked him what rule number six was, he replied:

"'Don't take yourself too seriously.'

"After that had sunk in I asked him what were the five rules that preceded it.

"'There aren't any others,' he replied."

Knew His Record

"Babe" Adams, the veteran of the Pittsburgh team, told a baseball story at a baseball banquet in Pittsburgh.

"George Jones," he said, "was very proud of his batting. Well, one afternoon in the middle of a game the telephone bell rang and a voice said:

"'I'd like to speak to George Jones, please.'

"'George,' said the telephone attendant, 'has just gone in to bat.'

"'Right-o,' said the voice, 'I'll hold the wire.'"

"A sport sweater you originally disliked often grows on you as you wear it."

Dear Editor:

IT DOESN'T take much to satisfy some people, and that's a fortunate thing about life.

For instance, a young fellow I know used to work in a store, but he disliked it. Now he has a desk job, at the same pay. But he calls it a promotion because he can sit down to his work.

Another friend worked and saved for a new home for just one purpose. "I'm going to build the kitchen so small that we'll have to eat in the dining room," he said. Wrong again; now he eats in the breakfast nook.

It's all right to be modest in your expectations, perhaps, but I believe in having plenty of ambitions and keeping them assorted. Then if only part of them mature, at least I've got something.—Fred Barton.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

MARKS ON HADDOCK

AMONG the fishermen of the Atlantic coast from Newfoundland to Sandy Hook—if not indeed further south than the Hook—there is a saying that the black line along the sides of the haddock is due to the fact that the fish was once seized by the devil's finger and thumb; but slipped through and escaped, retaining the mark made by the infernal digits.

Ancient amulets, sculptures and drawings show that in the dim ages of obscure antiquity a deep significance was attached to a combination of the hand and the fish. A hand grasping a fish was a favorite and powerful "charm" and is met with in southern Europe in the form of an amulet today. Just what the esoteric significance of the hand grasping the fish was is obscure—but there was one.

And as Elworthy remarks "there is hardly a custom or occult practice of the ancients which may not be traced somewhere or somehow among their modern descendants." The primitive mind seeks an explanation of everything, even the markings on a fish. In explaining the markings of the haddock the hand and fish superstition naturally asserted itself. The marks are black—it was the devil's hand that tried to grasp it. And furthermore we have the superstition reinforced from Norse mythology in which Thor tried to catch Loki, the god of destruction, when Loki was in the form of a salmon; but Loki slipped through his fingers and the salmon still shows the marks of the struggle in his tail.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"ALIVE AND KICKING"

THIS is an expression that slips glibly off our lips, leaving us utterly unconcerned as to its intrinsic and original import.

At first sight, this phrase would seem to imply simply a certain state of animated existence.

Deeper investigation, however, turns up the interesting discovery that the turn of the expression "alive and kicking" is a direct allusion to the child in the mother's womb after quickening.

That is how it started.

REPUBLICAN TICKET INCLUDES CAPABLE EXPERIENCED MEN

Resume of Record of Congressional Ticket

THEY WANT YOUR SUPPORT

The Republican Congressional Ticket offers the unexcelled qualification known as experience.

Only by experienc gained through continuous service may a state congressional delegation obtain influence in National Affairs because in the National House of Representatives an inflexible rule of seniority obtains and a Representative's opportunity comes only through length of service. Even then a Congressman's influence is subject to party control of Congress—a member of a minority political party being in worse position than a beginner with the controlling party, which organizes the House.

The present Indiana delegation has attained the rank that places the State in the forefront of leadership in the House. Every Representative who seeks re-election is a member of the half score of committees, such as Appropriations, Agriculture, Banking, Buildings, Interstate Commerce, Judiciary, Labor, Patents and Pension, which frame nine-tenths of the legislation considered by the House. Three of the principal chairmanships belong to Indiana—Wood on Appropriations; Elliott on Public Buildings; and Vestal on Patents. Vestal also is whip of the House. Purnell will be the next chairman of the Agriculture Committee; he also is a member of the powerful Rules Committee, which controls the order of business in the House. Hickey ranks high on the Judiciary, Hogg on Postoffice, Hall on Pensions; Johnson on Interstate Commerce, the committee that frames railroad and other legislation relating to transportation; Rowbottom on Labor and also Claims; Hall on Pensions and also the District of Columbia; and Dunbar on Banking and also Flood Control.

The voting record of these men commends them to every fair-minded person. Those who were members in the War Congresses gave every support to its successful prosecution. They with their collegues, who entered the Congress later, were prominent in the enactment of the tax reduction laws that cut $600,000,000 from the tax burden and relieved two and a half million persons of all federal taxes. All were supporters of the compensation and pension increase bills, the farm co-operative marketing or other legislation requested by organized Agriculture. Other important legislation having their support included the tariff, restricted immigration, flood relief, river improvement, the budget and the nation's first comprehensive building law, passed under the leadership of Mr. Elliott. They have opposed debt cancellation in favor of foreign countries, the World Court, the League of Nations and other entangling alliances.

First District

Harry E. Rowbottom, of Evansville; born at Aurora, 1884, son of James and Ann Rowbottom; educated in grade and high schools, and graduate accountant of the Cincinnati Business College; married in 1915, has one son, age 11; elected to State Legislature in 1918, 1920 and 1922; elected to the Congress in 1924 and re-elected in 1926 and 1928; Baptist; Thirty-second degree Mason and Shriner, Grotto, Elk, Eagle, Red Man, Moose.

For Secretary of State

OTTO G. FIFIELD
of Crown Point

Otto G. Fifield, as Secretary of State, has prevented the organizers of "Blue Sky" stock selling schemes from operating in Indiana, saving millions of dollars for Indiana investors. He also has forced the return to Indiana people, who had been defrauded, of more than $100,000.00 a year and in a single instance obtained the restitution of $83,000.00.

This protection of the public, however, comes from the operation of only one of the several bureaus administered by Mr. Fifield. In addition to policing stock sales, he has administered the new corporation law, which has encouraged many new business enterprises to locate in Indiana; through his automobile license bureau, he has inaugurated a safety movement to protect children from automobile accidents, and has enlisted the co-operation of school teachers, parents, and police officials in the work; through his criminal investigating bureau, he has aided in solving many bank robberies; his administration of the several bureaus has resulted in the collection of several million dollars in fees for the state, with every audit showing his books in balance to the penny.

Mr. Fifield's conception of public service is shown by his record as a public official, not only in state office but also as a legislator and county treasurer. His life indicates his understanding of the rural as well as the industrial and business sections of the state. He was born on a La-Porte county farm and raised as a farmer boy except for a short time following his graduation as a civil and sanitary engineer from Purdue University. His knowledge of drainage engnieering has had an important part in his success as a farmer and stock raiser, his extensive farms having been wrested out of worthless river swamp land.

Mr. Fifield was born November 9, 1885; the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fifield and their four children is at Crown Point. He is a member of the Presbyterian church; also the Masonic and Elks Lodges.

For Superintendent of Public Instruction

ROY P. WISEHART
of Union City

After two years under the educational leadership of Roy P. Wisehart, State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Indiana is setting the educational pace for the nation for the first time in its history.

Mr. Wisehart has revised the state's course of study, and national educators now rank Indiana's course of study in the upper five per cent out of 100,000 investigated in the United States. Mr. Wisehart's plan of revision has attracted national attention because it is the first of its kind. Other states are now adopting the "Indiana plan."

Other accomplishments of Mr. Wisehart's administration include the saving of approximately $380,000 on transportation in state aid school work in 1929; and the revision of methods used in state aid school administration in 1930, so that about $170,000 will be saved again this year.

Mr. Wisehart is a product of the Indiana public schools, Indiana University and Columbia University. His experience as an educator began in a one-room school house and has continued in grade school, rural high school and city school work as a teacher, principal and superintendent.

Mr. Wisehart entered the World War October 3, 1917, and served with the 334th and 329th Infantry for twenty-two months—fourteen months being overseas. He is a member of the American Legion, the Service Club, the Methodist Church, the Masonic lodges, the National Educational Association, the Indiana State Teachers' Association and the Indiana Schoolmen's Club. He is married and has three children. His home is at Union City.

Last week we overlooked an item given us by Ira Bone to the effect that Ford Jackson came near losing a cow. At morning milking time she failed to show up and upon making a search she was found in the straw stack. She had worked herself in between the old and new steacks and was unable to get out. When found she was quite warm but no ill effects resulted. A number of the neighbors came to help extricate her, taking nearly the forenoon.

The state highway commission late Tuesday added approximately 600 miles of Indiana roads to its system, for maintenance and eventual paving bringing the total mileage in the state system to 5,900. The roads taken in already had been taken into what is known as the "dotted line" system, which the highway commission designates as those roads which are not scheduled to be annexed. Tuesday's action means, however, that the state will immediately begin maintaining these roads instead of the local units. The 600 miles will become hard surface highways as soon as possible.

MECHANICS OF THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

David Hogg addressed the Sunday School workers of DeKalb County at Auburn on Sunday afternoon on the subject of "The Mechanics of the Sunday School," to a large audience. There were twenty from Concord township present.

Beginning with the superintendent of the Sunday School he styled the office as "The master of ceremonies" or "Platform manager" or "Executive." The main duty of the superintendent of the school is the choosing of fit workers for the school—good conscientious mechanics who had christian work at heart. The superintendent is he who gets the most out of the workers of the Sunday School.

"The educational director," said Mr. Hogg, "is the most important and demands the spiritual person of any Sunday School.

You can build any kind of a Sunday School if you are willing to pay the price.

Children have better pedagogical and scientific treatment in later years.

It's a bad practice to teach the old and young in the same classes. The old are looking back while the youth looks ahead. Their view point is different.

Permit the scholar to go in any class they wish—the best feeling produces the best results, and results are what we are looking for. This produces the best interest.

Classes may be too large for best results. Twelve to twenty are the best sizes. The small classes get in touch with the teacher and the rest of the class and derive more benefit. And then the more and smaller classes demand more teachers that in turn produce more employmet of teachers and officers which makes a better organized school.

By having the Sunday School budget and church budget together you learn the child to pay to the church, thus binding him to the church. Church and Sunday School must be vitally connected.

Sunday School superintendents should remain for church after Sunday School is out thus establishing an example.

The decision day is up to the child himself. He knows what he wants to do and he is the only one that knows what to do.

There should be more time for study during the Sunday School period and less time spent in opening and closing the chool—lesson period the more essential.

There are 40,000,000 children in the United States of which only 16,000,000 are in Sunday School, which shows the work that is ahead of the Sunday School.

Homes and churches are the only two institutions that will train the individual and the Sunday School is the best of the two.

People have a right to judge christianity by the people that represent it, its the only advertisement available—for good or for bad.

The lives of great statesmen all fade away after centuries of time, but the biblical characters all stand in importance before the advancement of time.

The Sunday School of your town will be what you yourselves are.

FARMERS ATTEND FIELD MEETING

A large number of farmers from DeKalb and surrounding counties attended the corn variety and fertilizer field meeting on the Alexander Provine Farm on Thursday afternoon. Mr. R. S. Miles, who is in charge of this project said in his discusson of the project that this was the third crop grown with the idea of finding some variety of corn that could be planted late enough to avoid heavy corn borer infestation in case the corn borer became a serious menace to Indiana farmers. In the opening of Mr. Miles the M. A. C. Yellow Dent—an early yellow dent corn developed by the Michigan Agricultural School, Clements White Cap Yellow Dent—another southern large corn and Fulton's Yellow Dent corn have given the most promise of being corn of a desirable type.

There were twenty-two different varieties in the variety plots. They were planted May 16th, June 3rd, and June 24th. So far as the experiments have gone the Clements White Cap has out-yielded all other varieties regardless of the time of planting. The first week of June planting on the average has slightly out-yielded the other planting dates. This will lead us to believe that we can plant the early maturing varieties and yet not sacrifice any yield and escape serious infestation from the corn borer.

In the plot for the number of different stocks per hill was tested out and the plots that had two and three stocks per hill was by far the best quality of corn. The one stock in the hill seemed to encourage suckers and the four or five stocks per hill a large number of nubbins but a few good ears.

In the fertilizer experiment it was clearly brought out that corn must have more than a mineral fertilizer to produce a large crop. Although the use of fertilizer greatly increased the quality of the corn did not seem to increase the yield enough to justify the expense of the fertilizer. These experiments will be continued for a number of years and it is planned to have a meeting at the farms as the condition of the corn would seem to justify.

SERIES OF ROBBERIES COMMITTED LAST WEEK

The same thief who stole the Auburn roadster belonging to Myron Watson from in front of the residence of his brother-in-law, Ferris Bower at 110 East Fourth Street at Auburn last Thursday evening wrecked it between Hursh town and Spencerville and later stole a Pontiac coupe of Dr. C. R. Baumgartner, a veterinary of Spencerville. Dr. Baumgartner's coupe was taken from his garage.

The thief, described as between 22 and 23 years old and wearing a cap and dark brown suit, after wrecking Mr. Watson's Auburn started to walk to Spencerville. "Bud" Hursh met him and drove him into town where the thief ordered a wrecking car sent out to tow in the Auburn.

It is thought that the same man staged a series of robberies here the same night when it was learned that the Hanna Garage was entered by taking out a glass at the rear. In checking up the stock eight tires, a new Willard battery, spark plugs, cigarettes and accessories, all amounting to about $90 were taken, besides the lock was broken from the gas tank and a supply of gas taken, also some oil.

Besides this loss an attempt was made to enter the postoffice, the elevator and the school house.

Aside from the loss of the Baumgartner automobile, he had practically all of his tools in the rear of the car and on Saturday he was called to Lima, Ohio, to recover some of the tools found along the road in the grip, but only the less important instruments were obained.

PROWLERS AT THE LEIGHTY ORCHARD

Even the apple orchard has to have a night watchman, and Saturday night he came in handy. During the early hours, a car stopped at the Leighty orchard and two men began to investigate the place when the watchman made his presence known. The men, rather surprised, began to make inquiry as to the price and possibility of getting a supply of apples. They were told to come in the day time and they would receive the same consideration as other patrons.

COMPELTELY SURPRISED ON ANNIVERSARY

A complete wedding anniversary dinner surprise was given Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Miller, Sunday when guests began to arrive about the noon hour.

Mr. and Mrs. Miller had gone to Sunday Shcool and H. G. Hursh and wife and M. H. Andress and wife were invited home with them for dinner.

About noon J. C. Hull and wife, O. E. Ginther and wife and F. B. Leighty and wife drove in, all taking well filled baskets and joined the guests in the event.

The surprise was complete and everything worked out for a real enjoyable time.

MRS. FRANK WISE OF AUBURN DIES

Mrs. Frank Wise, of 109 East Fifteenth Street, Auburn, died at the Elkhart Hospital Friday morning. On Sunday, October 5, she accompanied her son, Orval and wife home, expecting to take treatments for goitre. After her examination the first of the week, she was left in the hospital for treatment, and on Thursday when the family visited her, she was feeling some better.

An early call Friday morning from the hospital to the Orval Wise home, stated that Mrs. Wise had pased away, being found by the nurse in her calls during the early morning hours.

Mrs. Wise had not been well for a long time and had been making regular trips to Fort Wayne, taking treatments for goitre.

She was seventy-six years of age Thursday. Before her marriage to Mr. Wise fifty-two years ago on her birthday Mrs. Wise was Betsy Burley and she was born near St. Joe. They resided in Auburn many years.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Wise is survived by two sons, Lee, living eight miles north of Auburn, and Orval at Elkhart; two sisters, Mrs. Emma Gibford of Auburn and Mrs. Charles Rhoades of Spencerville, and one brother, D. D. Burley of St. Joe; six grandchildren and one great grandchild.

Mrs. Wise was a member of the Auburn M. E. Church, of the Order of the Eastern Star and the Women's Relief Corps.

The funeral was held at the home Sunday afternoon, Rev. E. J. Wickersham, officiating, with burial in Woodlawn cemetery.

HOUSING PULLETS FOR WINTER PRODUCTION

(By J. H. Bodwell)

The big problem in housing pulles for winter production is not only to maintain the body weight already attained on the range, but to add more weight.

The good dairyman, long ago, found that the cow was kept in good condition during her "dry period" would give more milk throughout her milking period than if she was in poor condition before she freshened.

The same principle holds true with pullets that are just beginning to lay. Unless we put them in good condition and keep them in good weight they may go into a moult which may necessitate a six to eight weeks' resting period before they come back into production.

How are we going to do it?

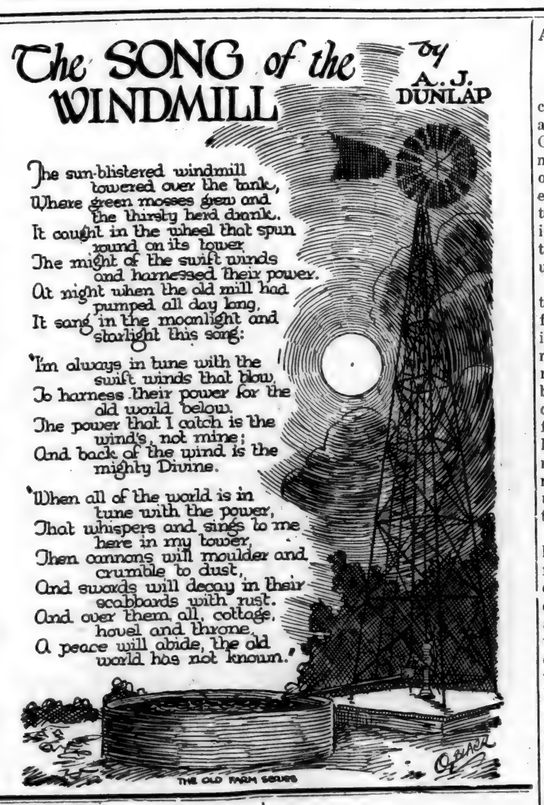
First, we must make the laying house clean and comfortable. That means to have enough roosts, hoppers and water fountains in the house; have the house well ventilated without any direct draughts, and do not put too many birds in a pen.

Second, free the birds of lice, mites, and worms before putting them into the laying house.

Remeber, a bird eats only about 2 pounds of feed per week and if she lays at the rate of 50%, the eggs will weigh about ½ pound per week. If she has to feed thousands of parasites, besides, she is bound to lose in weight, which will mean her body weight cannot be maintained.

When the change from range to laying house is made, extra care must be exercised to see that she does gain in weight. This can be done by darkening the house for a few days to keep them from being restless; by supplying plenty of green feed; by using more hoppers at first and by giving a wet mash once a day mixed in milk or water to insure more consumption of feed. If the birds are rather thin, have this wet mash consist of a fattening mixture rather than the regular growing mash. Also a greater proportion of scratch grains should be used at this time to help put on the good firm flesh.

We should always remember that a hen will not produce eggs without a good supply of feed any more than a windmill will work without a good breeze.



$500,000 IN TAXES TO BE COLLECTED

With less than four weeks remaining of the fall taxpaying period, County Treasurer Ward Jackman reports the receipt of a small amount of taxes daily. The bulk of the $500,000 that is on the books for payment by Nov. 3 will be received in the last two weeks of the period.

The number of receipts to be delivered to taxpayers this fall is about 14,000, as compared with 16,500 in the spring. About three-fourths of the number includes tax on real estate, the others being for personal propery only. Probably 200 of the remittances will be from outside the state of Indiana, coming chiefly from former residents of the county who still own property here, and a few come from foreign countries.

Mr. Jackman anticipates that whent the night of Nov. 3 arrives no unusual amount of delinquent tax will remain on the books.

FARM BUREAU MEETING LARGELY ATTENDED

Fully three hundred people attended the big meeting Friday night at the Concord township community gym when an entertainment was given by the Keyser township unit of the DaKalb County Farm federation.

The entertainment was the first of a series which each township organization will give during the year. The one Friday night will be given by the Keyser township bureau in every township in the county.

The play centered around the constitution of the United States. The plot dealt with the bringing into being the Constitution, depicting historical facts relative to the document from 1850 to the present time. The characters showed how the framers of the Constitution wrote it with an idea of deriving revenue from taxation on real estate. They thought at the time that the Constitution would probably be in effect about 35 years, not realizing that it would remain almost unchanged to the present time.

The play went on to show how taxation on lands, then the only tangible property to levy upon is not entirely suited to the present time and that it is affecting our present standard of living.

The cast of characters included: Grandfather, Ralph Yarde; banker, Donald Lung; Mary Weary, Mildred Wise; Jack Weary, Mae Kelham; Mrs. Weary, Bertha Gump; Jim, (the hand) Harold Wise; Mr. Weary, Walter Bartels.

The play was well acted and each one in the cast acquitted himself or herself with great credit.

Louis Houk, of Decatur, addressed the audience on the bureau work.

Hallowe'en celebrations are now being planned in most towns around. Can we have one in St. Joe?

Mr. A. W. Scott, of Detroit, Mich., and Mr. E. C. Scott and daughter, of Butler were Tuesday guests in the Laney Gee home.

A NOTABLE EVENT AT THE SCHOLES HOME

The Rev. and Mrs. J. N. Scholes celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage last Friday, October 10. They had programmed a quiet day of driving to one of their old parishes unannounced, looking over the town, dining there and returning in the evening. But despite their determination to be quiet, the world looked upon them with many felicitations.

Letters, cards and gifts flooded their mail for several days, coming from many different states, from individuals, families, churches, missionary societies, corporations, newspapers and brotherhoods, bearing messages of goodwill and confirming the unbreakable friendships that have been established through the years of their ministerial activities. The postman remarked: "If business keeps up out here, we will have to establish a sub-office."

On the evening of the 9th, a large number of neighborhood friends and church folk spent the evening at "Lone-Acre," the children announcing their unexpected arrival by music akin to the old-time serenade—stones in tin cans carried the harmony. All of these were most welcome guests until a late hour, the time being occupied informally by reminiscences, stories and genial conversaton, and enjoyed with pop corn and candy.

"Golden weddings," says J. N. "never become monotonous to those whom they most concern, for they never have to be repeated."

Mr. and Mrs. Elwood Hart of Jackson, Mich., were Sunday guests in the Fred Hart home.

Vaneta Boydston, of Topeka, Kansas, is visiting relatives in St. Joe, Spencerville and Grabill.

CLUB PRESIDENTS HAVE MEETING

At the meeting of the presidents and officers of the DeKalb County Home Bureau Club last Saturday Mrs. Lola Carper, president of the Jackson Township Home Bureau was re-elected president of the county federation. Mrs. Harry Shull of Union Township was also re-elected to fill the chairman and secretary-treasurer position. Miss Helena Dunn met with the board and gave her report of the State Fair Girl's School. It was decided that the delegate from the State Girl's School from the home bureau should go prepared to stay the entire two weeks. It was also decided to have the girls give a report of their trip to various clubs in order that they could become familiar with what is being done for outstanding girls from the different counties.

On Friday, October 24th the members of the various clubs are to have a social in Auburn. The exact place has not been determined but it will be selected and committees appointed to take care of the entertainment, program and refreshments. Every Home Bureau member in the county is urged to attend the meeting if they possibly can.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark Scholes were home for the week.

Mrs. Pauline Spindler and Mrs. C. L. De Bruler, of Gary, Ind., spent Friday with Mr. and Mrs. Laney Gee.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Painter and children, Mr. and Mrs. Vernie Blake and Mrs. Frank Collins, of Van Wert Ohio, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Reasoner. Mrs. Collins remained for a few days visit in the Reasoner home.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Cause of the Sepoy Mutiny

WHAT was the cause of the Sepoy mutiny? Why did the natives suddenly rise against the English and, without a word of warning, try to sweep them out of India? Where they predisposed to believe the wildest stories and to rush into action in a paroxysm of terror or was the whole affair a plot fostered and fed by one of England's hereditary enemies in Europe?

These are questions which even the passage of more than half a century has failed to answer and the cause of the Sepoy rebellion remains today, as it was the time it occurred, one of the most perplexing of historic riddles.

It is true that the annexation policy of Lord Dalhousie, though dictated by a clear insight into world affairs, was most distasteful to the native mind. The spread of education, the appearance of steam engines and telephone wires throughout India, and the changes which constant British occupation would effect undoubtedly had a deep effect upon the Indian mind. But would these alone tend to mutiny and murder? Authorities on the subject are inclined to doubt that they would.

The Bengal Sepoys, mostly Hindus of high caste, regarded reforms along Western lines as attacks on their own nationality and attempts to undermine a civilization which had withstood the ravages of centuries. They realized what annexation meant and they believed that it was their duty to see that India was held aloof. The numerous dethroned princes were the first to learn and take advantage of this spirit of dissatisfaction. They had heard of the Crimean war and they had been told that Russia was the eternal enemy of England. Moreover, they had little to lose by revolt and much to gain.

But the movement, as undoubtedly planned by the native leaders, was to be of a far more peaceful nature than the one which finally broke loose and, for a time, threatened to shatter British influence on the peninsula. It was to be a battle of wits, rather than of one of open hostility—a diplomatic struggle, instead of a hand-to-hand fight.

Then, in this critical state of affairs, of which the British government had no official knowledge, a rumor ran through the cantonments of the Bengal army that the cartridges of the army had been greased with the fat of pigs, considered unclean by both Mohammedans and Hindus. No assurance could quiet the minds of the Sepoys. Fires occurred within the native lines; officers were insulted by their men; confidence vanished and only the shell of discipline remained. In addition, the breaking of the long-threatened storm found many of the regiments denuded of their best officers. The administration of the great empire in which Dalhousie laid the corner-stone, required a larger staff than the civil service could supply, with the result that the army was drawn upon for some of its ablest minds.

The annexation of Oudh probably added the last torch to the rapidly growing fire, despite the fact that the former government of this province had been distinctly distasteful to the Hindu element. The enemies of Great Britain, however, spread the word that the government in London had decided to apply equally stringent measures throughout all India and, when the introduction of the greased cartridges had incited the native army to revolt, when the advocates of mutiny saw nothing before them but destruction—either of their lives or their traditions—they fell an easy prey to the specious arguments of those who were strongly opposed to an extension of British dominion.

All that dangerous class of religious fanatics and devotees which abounds in India, all the political intriguers, all who had something to gain by fighting the "invaders," swelled the ranks of the enemy and gave spirit and direction to their measures. They cry throughout the country became "The English rule is at an end—let us plunder and enjoy ourselves."

But, back of all this, it appears that there must have been some dominating influence, some mind that directed the movements of the natives in their well-planned revolt, some spirit of deep-seated hatred that worked up to the climax of the Sepoy revolt. Who was responsible for this? What country fostered the rebellion and fed fuel to the flames whenever they appedred to be on the point of dying down? The influence is clear that it was Russia—but the evidence is lacking and the real cause of the Sepoy mutiny is listed among the unsolved riddles of the last century.

Road Sweeper and Artist

The English town of Folkstone recently had an art exhibition of the local talent and one of the best specimens of painting was the work of F. Castle, who earns his living as a road sweeper for the Folkstone corporation. He has a humble home with a studio in the attic. "I think out my pictures as I work on the roads," he said, "and then I spend the weekends putting them on canvas, for that is the only time I have. Nobody taught me to paint. I suppose I must have a natural gift. Some day we shall be wise enough to organize work so that everybody with natural gifts will have enough leisure to develop them. Then the world will be a brighter and a happier place."

Capital City's Growth Not According to Plan

It is true to a large extent that the more desirable avenues in Washington bear the names of northern states and the less desirable bear the names of southern states. When the streets were numbered, lettered, and named in the very beginning of the plans for the city of Washington, no one knew in which direction the Capital would grow. It was expected, in fact, that the city would grow toward the east and south. It actually happened that the city grew more rapidly toward the north and west. Some of the avenues which now run through somewhat undesirable sections of the city are so located that as the plans for the city's improvement are executed they will be perhaps the most beautiful of Washington's streets. An example of this is Virginia avenue, which at no very distant time will probably be one of the most beautiful streets. It is doubtless true that the streets around the Capitol were named first and the states for which they were named were those belonging to the Union at that time.—Washington Star.

Sure Way to Tell

Lavinia—Is that man next door married?

Katrina—No, don't you hear him singing in the bath?

Most men make fools of themselves, yet a lot of fools are not self-made.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

CHAPTER X

Will Has a Vision

The firm of Poole and Todd found itself at the end of two years established beyond question. It owed its success to Will's terrific efforts. He had met and overcome one after another of their natural foes: Mr. Poole's idleness and intemperance. By a kind of fierce affection he had dominated and controlled the old man and kept him working. The profits were divided, after he had his fifty a week, and Poole his hundred. And out of his share of the profits, Will repaid his partner for the loan for Ernestine's hospital bill. He repaid him the exact half of the amount Poole had sunk into the business at the beginning.

And after two years he found himself face to face with the one enemy he could not conquer. Ernestine noticed that he grew thin and pale, that fall that the baby, Elaine, was two.

"What is it, Will?" she asked him. "I thought everything was fine now."

"It's Poole," said Will. "He's not drawing—he's boozing, but, of course, that's not new. Only—he's lost interest."

"What do you mean, Will?"

He seemed reluctant to put his thought into crude words.

"He's failing—his health. His eyes are bad."

"You mean—he's old?"

"Yes," said Will. "That's what I mean. He can't help it—poor devil—he struggles against it—but it's showing on him."

"But, Will, what are you doing?"

"Why, I'm managing—but that's all. When I can get him to help, we work together. We've got the strip all planned out for another year, the general sequence of things. But I don't feel that I can do Poole's stuff. My own ideas would be different. I can do the drawings well enough—nobody would notice, probably—but—"

"You don't want to go on—without him?"

"The stuff is his, Ernestine. I don't want to—there's something fundamentally wrong—even when I'm his partner, and all. For a while, as a makeshift, I can go ahead, and take care of the mechanics of it, and do the conversation—but actually, we haven't any business at all. We only have him—and when he's gone—"

Will sighed, and then squared his shoulders.

"Well—here's hoping," he said, and grinned at her. "I guess the old boat will sail another season. You see—it's hard for me to crowd him, Ernestine. He is old, and his eyes are about gone, and he hangs on me—it's like making a sick old horse pull in the harness—for us. Of course, it's for him, too, but it is really for us. We are the ones that will enjoy the money—not him. I find myself soft with him."

"I know." She understood this exactly, and her young face was troubled.

She was blooming again with beauty and vitality. She had been a lovely bud but now she was in flower—in her middle twenties—young with beauty and grace, but with poise now, too, and a strong sense of accomplishment. She had background now of a new kind—not the background of parents and school and a fine home, but the background of effort and self-control.

"I'll take Peter," she said. "You can look after Elaine."

She was going to Lillian's, to see mamma who was home from New York for another visit.

Will watched the family away, Elaine perched on his arm. Elaine was happy with her father, and they made a game of supper. Now, at two, she was beginning to be a bonny baby. They had had a long struggle with her. But at last her heart was beginning to beat a rhythmic tune—a healthy organ instead of an undeveloped heart in an undeveloped body. It almost seemed that they could breathe again.

After the little girl was sleeping Will sat beside her, smoking and watching her—dreaming those things a father dreams for his little daughter. The daylight was going, and the last of the light seemed to gather in an iridescence about the baby's face. Suddenly Will was shot through with an emotion more powerful than anything he had ever felt. For just an instant the baby face seemed the only thing in the world—the lashes down in a smudge against her cheek—he saw not flesh, but color—not bony structure, but pure line—idea—

He stared at her, and saw not the child but her picture. In that moment he sensed the true identity of her being, as one hears in astonishment clear tone and harmony where there is no sound. He was profoundly disturbed. Why, he could paint her—this was new—this feeling; he had not felt like this before, not even when he daubed so constantly in colors as a child. He had never felt this; he could paint her; he knew that he could.

* * * * * * * *

During the whole month of January Mr. Poole did not draw a line. He came to the office and sat there, but Will could not get him to work, and found himself incapable of much arguing.

Early in February he said to Will one day, "This is my birthday."

"It is?"

"Yes—I'm sixty-five—but I feel ninety-five. Will, I'm through."

"You're through?"

"Yes; I'll never draw another line. I can't work any more."

There was no questioning the sincerity of his tone. Will found himself accepting this statement as true. Mr. Poole was through. It would be idle to argue or to cajole him.

"Well," he said after a little, "this is the end of Poole and Todd, then."

"Yes," answered his partner heavily, "it's the end."

After a few minutes of silence, Will got up and began to pack away the drawing boards, to sort out pencils, rack up the stiff cardboard sketches and set the office in order.

"I'd like to go to Florida—where it's warm," said Poole dreamily. "I've been cold for months."

Will looked at him queerly. He felt sad. The old man was, in his own eyes, a failure. He did not feel, nor was he warmed by, the praise or the recognition of others. Long afterward Will felt that in that moment he had known the cold and clammy breath of death. The death of activity, of hope; the yielding of some long-loved and never-forgotten dream.

"Let's have a party at Pastano's tonight. Mostane's in town—and McDermott would come. Do you think Ernestine would be my guest—at Pastano's?"

"I think so, John. She'd do most anything for you."

"Ernestine"—the old man seemed to wander—he paused a long time, and looked at Will with a faint shining of the old intelligence in his face. "Will, put those d—d pasteboards down and come here—I want to tell you something. It was Loring Hamilton that had you fired from the Sun. He had Wiston's affairs in his hands—they were thicker than anyone knew, and Wiston had reason to please Loring. Wiston got tight one night and told it. And lost his job for it. McDermott will be friendly to you, if you take any work to him."

"Don't worry about me, John."

"I'm not worrying, you young devil. I want to tell you, though, about Loring. Watch out for him. He's got power now, in a way. He's going to London next year for Pastano. He's the prince of the bootleggers now. Pastano is using him recklessly. He doesn't give a d—n for Loring—will probably ruin him in the end. But Pastano does care about you—and about Ernestine."

"What Loring does is nothing to me. Like most mean things, it worked out for the best. I mean—you can't do a dirty trick as easily as you think. I've come farther this way than if I had stayed on the Sun."

The old man left to go and make arrangements for his party, and Will, after a brief telephone conversation with Ernestine, pitched into the files. It was late afternoon when he went home and as he went he was turning over in his mind the possibilities for the future. His enthusiasm had gripped a new idea. Ernestine would not like this. But he could do well for himself. He could!

"After all," he said to himself, swinging along among the small tidy houses, "after all, I was in danger of becoming a copyist. I've learned all that Poole can teach me. It's time for me to work alone—to develop my own ideas."

Ernestine was dressing, and giving instructions to the neighbor girl who was to stay with the children.

"What do you think, Will? Shall I wear my red dress? I thought I would never go to Pastano's again. It's years, though, since we went, and I don't mind going a bit. Will, you aren't listening to me. I've been so vexed with Peter. He's had two whippings, and needed a third. He's getting too big for me to spank any more. I wish you'd take a little paddle to him."

Will stood in amazement in the middle of the bedroom, his tie in his hands, looking back at the bright reel of memory—himself and Ernestine walking on Clark street in a late snow—going into Pastano's. How his heart had burned that night at Loring and Lillian—at all of them stirring Ernestine against him. Why had he cared? He didn't care now. He was singularly unmoved by the pronouncement that Loring had forced Wiston's hand, and Wiston had seized the first excuse to dismiss him. He realized with a shock that his resentment against Loring had always been personal—from the time he had been a little boy dragging a brace, and Loring had been a big boy, strong and robust and always teasing Ernestine and pulling at her hair. It was because Loring had despised him—not because of Ernestine. It had been Loring's strength and hardness that he had hated, not Loring's attention to his wife. How strange to think that his jealousy had been for himself and not for her. His self-esteem had suffered, not his love.

He became conscious of Ernestine's voice, querulous with Peter who protested against being put to bed. Ernestine ought not take that annoyed, vexed tone with the boy. He realized that he had heard her speak so to Peter frequently, of late. If Peter were naughty he should be punished, not hectored. Will took the boy from his mother.

"Go and get dressed," he said to her in a tone of command which astonished her. "You're always scolding the kid about something. Ever since Elaine came he's in trouble. You can't expect a healthy boy to go on tiptoe all his life because he has a sick sister. Go on and dress, and I'll take care of him. Be quiet, Peter, or I'll punish you. Not another word."

"He's just like you, and your family," Will told Ernestine. "He is willful and energetic and intelligent and strong. He wants his own way. Instead of dealing with him firmly you quarrel with him. You should not permit him the equality of an argument, and I want you to stop it, Ernestine."

Recollections of a dozen times when Will had been high-handed with her rushed over Ernestine.

"So you don't allow the Bricelands equality?" she asked in a cold rage, finding it difficult to take correction from him.

"It's just as well for us to understand one thing at a time without going into another," answered Will calmly. "If I think you are taking the wrong tone with Peter, I'll say so. It's my right."

They left the house and walked to the car line in silence. They sat beside each other in the car, they walked toward Pastano's, together in flesh, remote in spirit. The strong satisfaction of inner activity shone on Will's face, and it was like a declaration of war to Ernestine. Her anger grew until she could not remember when she had burned with such resentment.

She was excessively courteous to every one at the dinner party. John Poole told her of his plans for Florida, of the end of his agreement with Will. Ernestine was astonished.

"Why didn't you tell me?" she demanded, turning to Will, and he answered her:

"We didn't have a chance to talk."

Ernestine felt that Pastano's was bad medicine for her. She was unhappy again.

At home, later, she spoke to Will somewhat timidly.

"Are we going to be enemies, Will? So many married people are foes—bitter, unforgiving. Lillian and Loring are in continual conflict. He must dominate her every move. He's the one to say where they will go, what they will eat, whether or not they will have children. I'm willing to accept what you said about Peter—only, let's keep our unity."

"You know I will never love anyone but you, Ernestine," he said impatiently, "but I've got a big job on my hands now. Don't be neurotic. I've got to swing this thing, and you mustn't be emotional if my mind is on my job instead of on sentimentalities. Anyhow, what are you talking about? Nothing's changed."

She was silent. As he sat on the edge of the bed smoking, she finally closed her eyes against his immobility, turned her head on her pillow and tried to sleep, but burning tears slid underneath the lids.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

How Term "Thirty" Came to Symbolize Ending

Charles Payne Smith gave the following information in the Typographical Journal regarding the origin of "30" as used by newspaper men and telegraphers: "The first press association organized in Civil war times was composed largely of morning papers published near the eastern seaboard. Each paper sent into the central office items of local interest, which were there edited and telegraphed to all members. It happened that the first message sent to the association totaled 30 words and this figure, with the words 'Good night' and the signature of the sender, was placed at the bottom of the sheet by the operator. At that time piecework was the rule on all papers. The daily grist was usually set up, corrected and in the forms by 10 o'clock, but the compositors were compelled to wait around at their own expense until the foreman announced that '30' was in. So '30' became a byword among printers, symbolizing the end."

Lesson for October 19

SIMEON AND ANNA: THE INSIGHT OF THE PURE IN HEART

LESSON TEXT—Luke 2:25-39.

GOLDEN TEXT—Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Being Glad for God's Best Gift.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Simeon and Anna See Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Know Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Wisdom Depends on Character.

The lesson title is somewhat misleading in that it implies that the insight of Simeon and Anna was due to their purity of heart, whereas it was due to the fact of the indwelling Holy Spirit. Those indwelt by the Spirit will be pure in heart, but not all the pure in heart have such insight.

I. Simeon (Luke 2:25-35).

1. His character (v. 25).

(1) He was just.

That is, honest and upright in all his dealings with men. We are not told what his occupation was, but we are assured that he was a man trusted by all who knew him. If he were a merchant, his customers got the kind of goods represented with full weight and measure. In spite of the corruptions of his time, he did not take advantage of his fellow men in business deals.

(2) Devout.

He was just because he was God-fearing. Many boast of their morality while unwilling to bow their knees to God in prayer.

(3) He looked for the Messiah.

God's word had promised that Christ should come. He believed in the truthfulness of that word. The same word that told of Christ's first coming tells of his second coming (Hebrews 9:28). While waiting for the Messiah, he kept faithfully discharging his duty. Intelligent looking for the coming of Jesus Christ means diligence in daily duties, not idly gazing into the heavens.

(4) The Holy Spirit was upon him.

This was the secret of his godly and practical living. The Christ-like life is only possible to those who are filled with the Holy Ghost.

2. His reward (vv. 26-28).

The Holy Spirit revealed unto him that he should see the Messiah before he died. At the appointed time the Spirit led him into the temple where Joseph and Mary came to present Jesus to God. Simeon took him in his arms and blessed God. The most important event in every life is to see Christ. One has missed the greatest experience of life if he has not seen Christ.

3. Simeon's song (vv. 29-33).

This is the Nunc Dimittis sung by Christians since the Fifth century, A. D. Simeon was now ready to die because he had seen God's salvation. Salvation is in and through Christ's atonement on the cross. No one is ready to die until he has seen God's salvation which was wrought out on Calvary's cross.

4. Simeon's prophecy (vv. 34, 35).

(1) The meaning of Christ to the world (v. 34).

Everyone is affected by Christ's coming. His presentation to man either results in their salvation or condemnation. There is absolutely no neutral ground. Personal attitude toward him determines all.

(2) He shall be spoken against (v. 34).

This has been fulfilled in every generation since its utterance.

(3) Meaning to Mary (v. 35).

This began to be fulfilled when she was obliged to flee Egypt in order for Jesus to escape Herod's sword. It was an intimation of what the end would be when she clasped her child to her bosom. Her heart was pierced again and again as human hate swept against her son. Its culmination was reached when she stood below his cross.

II. Anna (Luke 2:36-39).

1. Her character (vv. 36, 37).

She was irreproachable. After a married life of only seven years, she had lived as a lonely widow for about eighty-four years, during which time she devoted herself to God. She was what Paul called "a widow indeed" (I Tim. 5:5). During these long years she endured many trials and temptations, leading a life of self-denial for the sake of others. She was a woman of much prayer.

2. Her testimony (v. 38).

She gave thanks and spake of him to all who were looking for redemption. She thus had fellowship with others who had this blessed hope. Though surrounded by wickedness, many were looking for the Messiah.

No Room for Both

How foolish are we if we attempt to entertain two guests so hostile to one another as Christ Jesus and Satan! Rest assured, Christ will not live in the parlor of our hearts if we entertain Satan in the cellar of our thoughts.—Charles H. Spurgeon.

Cure for the Blues

The best cure for the blues is some devoted work for souls in the white light of God's presence.—Gospel Banner.

"Yet I didn't scrub or boil!" she tells friend

I'LL NEVER STOP thanking you for telling me about Rinso. I might still be scrubbing and boiling clothes in the old-fashioned way.

"Just think—these clothes were just soaked in nice thick Rinso suds. That's all—just soaked. And did you ever see such gleaming, snowy whiteness!"

Saves the clothes, too

Clothes last much longer when they're soaked instead of scrubbed.

Rinso is safe for the finest cottons and linens. The makers of 38 famous washers recommend it. So economical, too; cup for cup it gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps.

Try Rinso's creamy lasting suds for dishes, too! Wonderful for all cleaning. Get the BIG package.

How Old Are You?

When Will You Be 42?

Today You Say—And That Is That—But Tell Me, Are You Very Fat?

Well, if you are—It's probably your own fault—You don't know how to eat right and that's one reason.

If you would like to learn how to lose the fat you hate—and no one else likes—do as I did—Take this 30 day test—

Cut out candy, cakes—pies and ice cream—cut down potatoes, rice—butter—cheese, cream and sugar—

Eat anything else you feel like eating, but moderately—lean meat—fish—chicken—vegetables and fruit are best—

Take one-half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts—in a glass of hot water every morning before breakfast—don't miss a morning—follow this advice. One woman lost 19 pounds in 4 weeks—another got rid of 47 pounds in 3 months—a New York woman lost 14 pounds with one bottle of Kruschen and is full of vim and pep, so she writes—

At any drug store in the world you can get these magic salts—one 85 cent bottle lasts 4 weeks—Ask for Kruschen Salts—an enemy to Fat.

The job of thinking is a real one—probably the hardest work there is to do.—Henry Ford.

How He Does It

A woodpecker pecks out a great many specks
Of sawdust when building a hut.
He works like a nigger to make the hole bigger
He's sore when his cutter won't cut.
He don't bother with plans of cheap artisans
But one thing can rightly be said
The whole excavation has this explanation
He builds it by using his head.

Who Remembers?

Who remembers the Columbus Day exercises which were held in the little grove which then was situated just across east from the William Hollabaugh brick home, in the west end of town?

About 36 years ago last Monday, all the schools of Concord township came to St Joe to celebrate Columbus Day in the little woods adjacent to our school. As was believed and taught in those days, Columbus was then accepted as the undisputed discoverer of America, and Columbus poles were erected as a reminder of the event. Since those days, we as Americans have emphasized other parts of our historical story and national career. But in those days Columbus Day was a much talked of day by the school children. The program on that day was songs and speeches by children and school officials and the playing of a sheep skin band.

How 36 years has changed us and the country.

The Back-Seat Driver

One of the nuts the Supreme Court will be called on to crack this fall is the status of the back-seat driver. More specifically, an insurance company is claiming that it should not be made to pay in the case of an accident that might have been averted had passengers in the back seat warned the driver as they could have done and should have done.

As a matter of fact many a good word may be said for the back-seat driver. Most of the criticism aimed at him—maybe it should really be "her"—is in the form of jokes. It appears almost exclusively on the Lucid Interval pages. But men jest publicly about many things which in private they take seriously. Even a henpecked man will sometimes risk a jest about his "storm and strife." That part of the family which is not grasping the wheel has a moral duty and responsibility to help watch, especially if there is a little lack of confidence in the driver—and what wife has much in her husband? Of course Pa may use his own judgment about listening to the advice.

Out Of A Job

They lived in the city. He had a job paying big wages. They lived like kings. Bought them a house on the dollar down plan. Bought themselves fine furniture on the dollar down plan. Bought a car on the dollar down plan. Found that they could not keep the car going on the dollar down plan, but must spend all their surplus cash for gasoline, oil, etc. Then he lost his job. He moped about for a few days. Missed a payment on the furniture. Truck backed up to the door and took all the fine furniture. Same with the radio and other things. Real estate man told them to vacate the home when payment was not forthcoming. Automobile man came and took the car when installments failed. He sent the wife and children home to her parents. He started out to look for a job. Just one more tramp on the highway. Will they live at a lower level and save their money the next time—if there ever is a next time? We doubt it. This story is being repeated thousands of times every day in the cities.

DEKALB COUNTY COUNCIL DATES

The following dates will be of interest to church and Sunday School officers and workers of DeKalb County. Please note.

Leadership Training School Y. M. C. A., Auburn, October 13-14-15-16-17, at 7:30 to 9:30 each evening. Three courses this year: No. 2, The Teacher, Miss Pauline Roth; No. 3, The Old Testament, Rev. B. M. Bechdolt, and No. 101, The Life of Jesus, Donald Dunkin. Detailed information from Sadie Coy of Auburn.

Young People's Conference in Garrett Christian Church, November 1-2.

County Convention in St. Joe, February 5-6.

Mrs. Olen Dermott is home after being a patient at Garrett Hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Davis and daughters, Roseanne and Gloria, of Auburn, were Sunday afternoon callers in the Hattie Widney home.

The apple harvest at the Widney orchards will be completed this week.

Mrs. W. C. Waddell, of Fostoria, O., and Mrs. F. L. Etthie, of Siam, O., are here the guests of Mr. and Mrs L. D. Young.

Because of Road 27 being rerouted through Auburn, five requests for permits to erect gas stations have been filed with the city council.

More reading will soon be on the schedule of everyone and let us remind you that The News can take care of any of your subscription problems. Come in and see us.

Mrs. Sam Armstrong is at Butler assisting in taking care of her father, Elijah Ihnoff, who suffered a stroke of paralysis last week. He is reported as in quite a serious condition.

The Butler Record–Harold last week in commenting on the Allen's Economy Store leaving Butler, said: "The store was so economical that it did not advertise, consequently no one knew their location." Advertising is more necessary than capital, in making any business a success.

A complaint for the appointment of a guardian for Philip D. Ginder was filed in the DeKalb circuit court Friday by Harry Ginder. The latter states that because of old age and infirmities the defendant is unable longer to manage his own affairs. The plaintiff is represented by Attorney H. C. Springer.

The St. Joe river has been yielding some fine fish lately. Up to the present time Delever Vaniman holds the record catch. Last week he landed a pickerel that tipped the beam at 9 pounds and 11 ounces and measured 30½ inches in length. The fish struck on about 35 feet of line and put up a game fight.—Edgerton, (O.,) Earth.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Curie entertained on Sunday in honor of their son, Herbert and wife: Mr. and Mrs. Perry Jump and daughter, June Elizabeth of Woodburn, Charles Curie, wife and son, Harold, Mrs. Jennie Sechler and son, Merritt, also Miss Lenore Laub, who was a guest of Ruth Curie. Herbert and wife returned Saturday from a trip in Michigan, visiting various places of interest and are moving to Garrett this week.

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:

In the Commissioners Court, DeKalb County, Indiana.

In the Matter of the Wm. Staman et al Road in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana.

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County, Indiana, will up to the hour of 10:00 A. M., on the 5th day of November, 1930, at the commissioners court room in the court house of the city of Auburn, receive sealed proposals for the improvement of a highway in said county, which said improvement is known as and designated as the William et al Road in Concord Township, which said improvement is petitioned for by William Staman et al, and will consist of grading, draining and graveling of said road as set out in plans, specifications and profiles now on file in the Auditor's office of said county.

Said proposals received will be for all materials used, all labor performed and for the full completion of the said improvement in accordance with the report of the Engineer and Viewers, and the said plans and specifications and profiles aforesaid.

That the estimated cost of the said improvement is the sum of $12,780.00.

That the length of said highway to be improved is about three miles and is described as follows: beginning at a point where the center line of the Auburn–Newville improved gravel road intersects the section line running north and south between Sections one (1) and two (2,) Township thirty-three (33) north, Range fourteen (14) east, in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, and running from there south to the intersection of the Center line running east and west between Concord and Spencer Townships, in DeKalb County, Indiana, and there terminates the said highway being outside the limits of any city, and outside the limits of any incorporated town.

Each bidder must submit with his proposal, a bond with sufficient surety, payable to the State of Indana, in a penal sum double the amount of his proposal, conditioned for the faithful performance of the work on which he bids. If personal surety is given, they shall be residents and free holders of the State of Indiana. Each bidder must submit with his proposal an affidivat to the effect that he has not entered into any combination, collusion or agreement with any person relative to the price to be bid by any one; that he has done nothing to prevent any one from bidding; that his bid is made without reference to any other person.

Said improvement will be let as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder duly qualifying as such.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

The work shall be completed within a time to be fixed by an agreement between the Board of County Commissioners, and the successful bidder.

Witness my hand and seal this 10th day of October, 1930.

Fish and Game Club Information

Open Seasons: The season will open on prairie chicken and woodcock October 15, to close on prairie chicken November 1, and to close on woodcock November 15. On November 10, before the appearance of the next bulletin, the season will open on quail and ruffled grouse. The season is now open on waterfowl, coot, jacksnipe, rails, gallinules, rabbits, squirrels, and all fish except trout. October 31 will be the last day for hunting squirrels.

The Fiscal Year: September 30 ended the state's fiscal year. Our books show a small increase in business over 1929. The receipts for 1930 were $337,230.53, a gain of $3,214.97. There were issued 318,534 resident hunting, fishing and trapping licenses, a gain of 9,343; 9,863 non-resident fishing licenses, a loss of 1,189; and 415 non-resident hunting, fishing, and trapping licenses, a loss of 53.

Hatcheries: Improvements and enlargements at three hatcheries are now under way. At Wawasee all the ponds are being reconstructed and supply lines and drains are being rebuilt. A small tract of ground between the hatchery and Lake Wawasee is being purchased in order to afford access to the lake. At Tri-Lakes a new pond is under construction on land donated to the state by D. O. Skillen, which gift is hereby acknowledged. At Riverside, additional ponds, work on which was begun last year, are being completed.

All fish produced at the hatcheries this season have been distributed. In a later bulletin will appear a statement of fish plantings, showing a most successful year of propagation.

Migratory Game Birds: Col. Paul T. Redington, chief of the U. S. Bureau of Biological Survey, writes that a preliminary survey indicates that owing to conditions which have prevailed on the northern breeding and nesting grounds during the past summer, there may be a serious decrease in the number of waterfowl this season. He says "a general adherence to existing laws and regulations is obviously most desirable at this tim eto prevent possible irreparable losses to the diminished stocks of wildfowl," and he requests that this department's officers be directed to exert their efforts to the greatest degree possible in assisting to reduce to a minimum the losses to wildfowl ordinarily occasioned by illegal shooting and other methods of killing known to to be unduly destructive.

Carlos Avery, president of the American Game Protective Association, notes that there are only 25 game conservation officers of the U. S. Bureau of Biological Survey to enforce the federal migratory bird regulatiois, and he appeals to all good sportsmen to lend their active support to the federal and state authorities to secure general observance of the law.

This department likewise solicits the co-operation of the citizens of this state in the observance and enforcement of the law relating to migratory birds during the present shooting season.

The Warden Service: For September the statistics of the warden service show, arrests, 146; convictions, 135; cases pending, 10; cases dismissed, 1; fines and costs, $3,160.18.

Walter Shirts,
Supt. Fisheries and Game.

DON'T SELL YOUR GROWING STOCK

The recent inquiry of the Division of Forestry about the season's crop of black walnuts brot in a variety of replies. Many reported only a very few trees haying any crop worth picking, others reported a large number of small trees without any walnuts. A most striking revelation is the fact that a number of woodland owners have cut the last nut bearing walnut tree on their farm and therefore can no longer derive an annual income from the sale of walnuts. This is especially true in communities adjacent to walnut veneer or woodworking establishments.

Each season a number of requests for black walnuts are received from confectioners and wholesalers. Prices vary from $1 per bushel for walnuts to $1 per pound for the walnut kerenls. The sale of walnuts represents a means of revenue usually overlooked by the farmer and woodland owner.

In times of economic stress and business upheaval, the temptation to sell anything in sight is very apparent. On the other hand, during the period of high prices the sale of good quality timber without regard for ridding the woods of low grade or cull timber seems an established practice.

SAVE your good trees for seed, they will be needed in this tremendous program to reforest portions of Indiana. Thousands of bushels of black walnuts are needed this fall. Send your observations of the walnut crop to the State Forester.

FISHING AND HUNTING LICENSES TO BE SMALLER

New fishing and hunting licenses effective January 1 will be smaller and more easily carried. Incidentally the change in size saves the conservation department more than $500 in cost of printing and distribution, says Walter Shirts, superintendent of the fish and game division, issuing same.

The new license, good for the calendar year 1931, is on heavy bond paper, 2½x4 inches in size, compared to the old license 5½x6½ inches which had to be folded to be carried. The new license slips into the purse without fold. Old licenses carry a summary of fish, game and trapping laws; the new license carries the open season dates only.

Each form of license has the year 1931 printed in red ink across the face. Resident fishing, hunting and trapping licenses are printed in black; non-resident fishing, hunting licenses in green, and free permits to ex-service men in black.

Report Bad Driving
AND SAVE LIVES

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

Moths Are Active Throughout Season Where Rooms Are Kept Warm

There is a prevailing impression that clothes moths are active only in the spring and summer and that in the fall and winter it is not necessary to take precautions in storing summer clothing. The bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture says, however, that while moths may be more prevalent and noticeable as warm weather approaches, they are active throughout the year in apartments or other places where a steady temperature of 70 degrees F. or more is maintained.

Clothing and blankets in constant use are not often attacked. A woolen summer suit left hanging at the back of a closet, however, would exactly meet a parent moth's idea of a good place to lay her eggs. The following year the suit would likely be riddled with holes; and some of the larvae might crawl off and eat other garments, such as the evening suit that is only worn occasionally, or anything else that is not frequently brushed and shaken.

At the end of their season any garments likely to be attacked should be thoroughly cleaned at home, brushed, beaten, and sunned, or sent to a dry cleaner. Then they should be neatly folded and put away at once in a tight red-cedar chest or other tight container such as a trunk or box which can be sealed. As additional protection in any container except the cedar chest, it is well to put some naphthalene flakes or moth balls in the box with the clothing. Cardboard boxes may be used if the clothing is properly prepared beforehand as indicated, and if they have an outer wrapping of heavy paper with the ends turned under in such a way that no moths can get in.

Upside Down Apple Cake Is Novel and Good

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Apples are at their prime now, and a new way of serving them for dessert will be welcomed by all the family. Upside down apple cake is both novel and good to eat. As it is hot and hearty in itself, it is a good dessert to plan for one of the suddenly colder fall evenings, especially at a time when the rest of the meal does not seem quite as substantial as usual. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture tells exactly how to make it.

- 1¼ cup butter
- ½ cup sugar
- 1 egg
- 1 tsp. vanilla
- 1½ cups sifted soft-wheat flour
- 2 tsp. baking powder
- ¼ tsp. salt
- ½ cup milk
- 3 to 4 firm-fleshed apples, depending on size
- 2 tsp. cinnamon mixed with ¼ cup sugar

Cream the butter, add the sugar, well-beaten egg, and vanilla. Sift the dry ingredients together and add alternately with the milk to the first mixture. Spread a thick coating of butter on the bottom and sides of a square or oblong baking dish or a very heavy pan. Pare, quarter, and slice the apples thin, spread a single overlapping layer on the bottom of the baking dish, sprinkle with the mixture of cinnamon and sugar. Pour the cake mixture over the apples. The batter is rather thick and may need to be smoothed on top with a knife. Bake slowly in a very moderate oven (300 degrees to 325 degrees F.) for 45 minutes. Loosen the sides of the cake, turn it out carefully upside down, and the top will be covered with neat layers of transparent apples. Serve hot with hard sauce or whipped cream.

Chicken Wings and Backs With Eggplant

If you want a new casserole dish, save out the wings and backs the next time you cut up chickens to fry, and combine them with eggplant. These few pieces will never be missed from the platter of fried chicken and they will be enough to give savory flavor to the eggplant and make another substantial dinner dish. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture suggests this recipe:

- Chicken wings and bony pieces
- 1 medium sized eggplant, pared and diced
- Salt
- Pepper
- Flour
- Fat
- 1 cup chopped green pepper
- ½ cup chopped onion
- Water

Wings of young chickens and pieces too bony to fry successfully are excellent prepared in this way. Salt the chicken, roll in flour, brown lightly in fat in a skillet and transfer to a casserole. Cook the eggplant, green pepper and onion in the fat for about ten minutes, season to taste and add to the chicken in the casserole. Rinse out the skillet with one-half cupful of hot water, pour over the chicken and vegetables, cover, and cook in a moderately hot oven (375 degrees F.) for about one hour. Serve from the dish.

Thermos Bottles

The properties of the thermos bottle are due to the presence of a vacuum. Vacuum bottles have double walls and from the space between the air is exhausted. This prevents the heat from escaping and from penetrating.

THE POPULAR TAILORED TUNIC FROCK IS FAVORED FOR FALL

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

There is, or should be, no doubt in the mind of the woman as to that all-important "first" frock for fall. In the tunic gown, tailored to a nicety and with an arresting touch of lingerie at neck and sleeves, fashion answers the question beyond a doubt.

The styling of the now-so-voguish tunic involves a whole list of interesting features, a first and foremost factor being that of color. Rich, handsome colors are the theme paramount throughout the fall and winter mode. Ruby reds, fetching dark greens and radiant browns are contributing an autumnlike beauty to these trim and trig frocks which are so smartly meeting the requirements of town, travel, school and business dress.

As to the frock in the picture, it tells a great many interesting things in regard to new fashion trends. You will notice that it has a belt and is trimmed with buttons—two very important items which have to do with costume design for the coming months. The material used for this modish frock is a bemberg weave in a most lovely ruby tone. In this instance the tunic is rather short and it is posed over a pleated skirt. A detachable collar-and-cuff set enlivens the blouse in happy fashion.

The model pictured is just such a type of frocks as the smart set delights to "doll up" with one of the swanky little fur ensembles which are capturing the heart o' the fashion world today. In buying these intriguing fur accessories you are offered your choice of a jaunty neckpiece with a pair of detachable wide cuffs. The neutral tone of the fur contrasts the rich deep and greens of the new tailored cloth frocks to a point of rare beauty.

When it comes to what-length tunics, the mode is not at all arbitrary, stamping with approval short, medium, or long. The seven-eighth tunic with the skirt showing just below is very popular. The tunic which buttons to one side from neckline to hemline is considered very good style.

Some tunics take on a Russian aspect in that they are bordered with fur and are finished with fur at the neck. Topped with a cossack beret or turban, trimmed with matching fur, the picture of a perfect autumn costume is complete.

Making Good Use of the Early Fall Apple Crop

During the fall the apple orchard sheds its treasures faster than they can be taken care of. Any apples that must be trimmed or cut up—windfall or damaged fruit—may be made into apple sauce, some of which can be stored for a few days in the refrigerator, and some canned by the water-bath process. Don't use much water in making sauce; just enough to keep the apples from sticking to the kettle. Some people always strain apple sauce and some never do. If nutmeg is used for flavoring, do not add it until the sauce is served, for it is likely to make the flavor bitter on standing. The flavor of apple sauce may also be varied by adding lemon juice or cinnamon or cloves.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture gives the following very simple directions for cooking apple sauce:

Wash, pare, quarter and core the apples; or if the sauce is to be put through a colander, leave the skins on. Cook the apples until soft in a covered pan, using just enough water to keep them from scorching. If the skins have been left on, put through a colander. Sweeten to taste and add a few grains of salt.

Duty to Make Happiness

Doctor's 3 RULES Big Help to Bowels

What a joy to have the bowels move like clockwork, every day! It's easy, if you mind these simple rules of a famous old doctor:

1. Drink a big tumblerful of water before breakfast, and several times a day.
2. Get plenty of outdoor exercise without unduly fatiguing yourself.
3. Try for a bowel movement at exactly the same hour every day.

Everyone's bowels need help at times, but the thing to use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. You'll get a thorough cleaning-out, and it won't leave your insides weak and watery. This family doctor's prescription is just fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other helpful ingredients that couldn't hurt a child. But how it wakes up those lazy bowels! How good you feel with your system rid of all that poisonous waste matter.

Clean up that coated tongue, sweeten that bad breath, and get rid of those bilious headaches. A little Syrup Pepsin will soon free the bowels from all that waste matter that makes the whole system sluggish. You'll eat better, sleep better and feel better.

You'll like the way Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin tastes. The way it works will delight you. Big bottles—all drugstores.

SOME WORTHWHILE RECIPES THAT HELP IN PREPARING MEALS

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The evils of life appear like rocks and precipices, rugged and barren at a distance; but at our nearer approach we find them little fruitful spots.—Spectator.

The banana is one of our most popular and well liked fruits, one we can always find in our markets and it deserves a chapter all for itself.

Banana Bavarois.—Scald one cupful of milk in a double boiler. Stir in two teaspoonfuls of gelatin previously soaked in two tablespoonfuls of cold water. Add one cupful of sugar and when cold and it commences to set stir in one cupful of banana pulp and one cupful of whipped cream. Pour into a mold and place on ice to set. Serve with:

Mousseline Sauce.—Bring one cupful of milk to a boil, add one-half cupful of sugar, one teaspoonful of flavoring, mix well, set aside to cool, then add one-half cupful of whipped cream.

Banana and Coconut Dessert.—Cut four bananas each into four pieces, place in a buttered pan and sprinkle with three teaspoonfuls of lemon juice. Beat an egg white until stiff, add three tablespoonfuls of powdered sugar. Add one-half cupful of shredded coconut, put a tablespoonful of this meringue on each section of banana. Bake until brown. Serve with whipped cream.

Banana Bread Pudding.—Take three slices of bread or three rolls, break into small pieces. Pour over this two cupfuls of milk, one-half cupful of sugar, four bananas sliced, stir in lightly two beaten egg whites and bake for half an hour. Serve hot with a sauce using the two egg yolks beaten well, one-fourth of a cupful of sugar and a cupful of boiling milk; stir and flavor, then serve hot. A little lemon juice and rind may be used for the flavoring.

Banana Fluff.—Cut one-half pound of fresh marshmallows into small pieces. Whip one cupful of heavy cream, add one teaspoonful of vanilla, one-half cupful of sugar, a bit of salt, stir in the marshmallows, one cupful of broken nutmeats (less may be used), and one cupful of banana pulp finely mashed. Serve with crushed strawberries, or over ice cream of any flavor.

Marshmallow Filling for Cake.—Melt fifteen fresh marshmallows in a double boiler. When soft add one egg white, one and one-half cupful of confectioner's sugar and three tablespoonfuls of water (cold). Beat this mixture, when beginning to boil, seven minutes. Remove from the fire, add fifteen more marshmallows, cut very fine and fold ever until the mixture holds its shape.

Plains of Abraham

The heights near Quebec known as the Plains of Abraham took their name from Abraham Martin, a Canadian pioneer who was a pilot on the St. Lawrence river. When Samuel de Champlain founded the city of Quebec he authorized a deed granting Martin a homestead on the heights, and his herds of cattle and sheep were a common sight on the tableland along the St. Lawrence river.

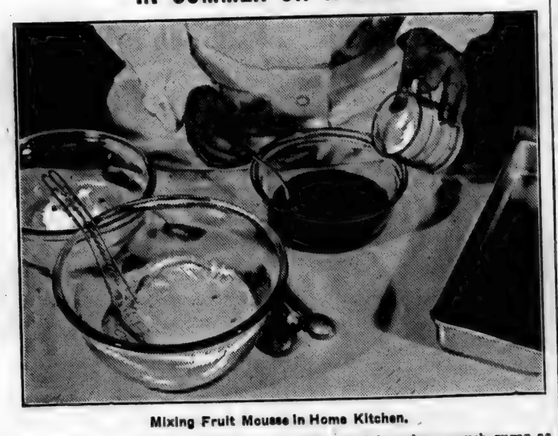
FRUIT MOUSSES ARE EASILY MADE IN SUMMER OR WINTER



Mixing Fruit Mousse in Home Kitchen.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Various kinds of fruit mousses can be made at home, depending on the fruit that is in season—strawberry, cherry, raspberry, blackberry, or peach during the summer, prune or apricot in the winter time. These mousses may be frozen in a mechanical refrigerator or by packing in ice and salt.

The proportions given herewith for peach mousse can be used for most fruit mousses. The sugar is reduced or increased according to the acidity of the fruit used. In general it is best to put in only as much sugar as is required for palatability when freezing desserts without stirring, as sugar lowers the freezing point.

The following method of mixing fruit mousses is suggested by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture: In separate bowls whip the cream and the egg whites, to which the salt has been added. Combine the sugar and the crushed fruit or fruit juice and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Fold the sweetened fruit into the whipped cream. Then fold in the beaten egg whites. Pour into the tray of the mechanical refrigerator or into an ice cream mold for freezing in ice and salt. If the latter, seal the opening with a cloth dipped in paraffin so no salty water can leak in.

- 1 cup double cream
- 1 cup peach pulp
- 5 tbs. sugar
- 2 egg whites
- 1/16 tsp. salt

Whip the cream. Peel and slice ripe peaches and rub enough through a coarse strainer to make one cupful of pulp. Add the sugar and fold quickly into the cream before the peaches discolor. Add the egg whites, which have been beaten with the salt, pour into a tray or mold, and freeze. Fresh apricot or plum pulp may be substituted for the peach.

FAIRY TALE FOR THE LITTLE ONES WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"David," she said in an exquisitely soft, warm, low voice, "I'm the Gulf Stream. Have you ever heard of me?"

David hesitated for a moment—yes he had heard of a gulf stream but he couldn't tell how it had come in and where it belonged—but she was continuing:

"Never mind telling me what you know of me for I shall tell you a little of myself. And I know myself naturally better than you can be expected to know me—considering I am I or I am me.

"I don't know which is correct. To be sure I'm quite a Living Map personage but I have always kept so far down in the ocean that I never had any school education, really.

"I start from the Gulf of Mexico you know and I travel north right through the ocean. I'm just like a warm river running in a certain direction through Atlantic Ocean's property.

"I've always thought it generous of Atlantic to give me so much room. He may be a wild fellow at times, but he has a kind streak running through him—and it is through that kind streak that I flow.

"Perhaps, David, you mightn't think it very pleasant to be a river way down in the Ocean."

"It seems very strange to me," David said.

"Sometimes if you've been swimming you have noticed warm or cold places in the water—made by cold or warm streams which flow into the water.

"I'm such a stream, only I'm much bigger and more powerful. If it weren't for me there would be a bad time for anyone who wanted to live in England. I make the products of England grow by my warmth and by taking warmth there.

"That is when I turn aside from this side of the world after I become discouraged. I become a bit discouraged too in England when the cold currents come down from the North.

"The Polar Bears Love Them."

"Then I become so confused that I don't know what I'm doing, and it is then that the fogs come.

"Oh, David, you don't know how I feel when I get up to the far coast of Newfoundland. Of course, I'm wider and stronger some places than others.

"But up off the coast of Newfoundland my poor self does get so discouraged. It is very trying, I'll tell you.

"I go along, having a nice time and feeling that I'm useful too. Then I get far north.

"And then, oh, horror of horrors, David, I find icebergs.

"Have you ever seen an iceberg, David?"

"Only in pictures."

"Well, they belong to nature—nature when she is cold and cruel and without pity, for sometimes she is that way.

"They are not living creatures, and yet, David, there seems to be something terribly, wickedly, powerfully living about them.

"They're deceitful too. They don't show their size. Most of it is under the water. You will see how they can do this if you put a good sized piece of ice in a glass of water.

"Most of the ice is under the surface of the water.

"It is so with an iceberg. I get to Newfoundland as I was saying, and there I find icebergs—hundreds of icebergs.

"They are huge, mighty, blue-white-green cold masses of ice.

"They are sometimes of wonderful, beautiful shapes and sometimes the sun shines on them and there are many colors to be seen—beautiful cold, icy, colors, but they look so hard, oh, so terribly, terribly hard.

"And they are hard, but the polar bears love them. Yes, I certainly must admit they are the friends of polar bears!"

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT THE LOON

BILLIE BROWNIE had always wanted to talk to the bird known as the Loon or Great Northern Diver.

He had heard the expression "as crazy as a loon" and he knew it was always used when people did silly, crazy things.

He wondered if there was any truth in the expression or how it had started in the first place.

So he decided he would call upon a loon.

On his way there he wondered just how he would talk to a loon.

It was rather a difficult thing to go to a creature and say:

"Look here, old chap, they say a person is as crazy as a loon when that person has been behaving foolishly. Is it true? Are you about as crazy and foolish as a creature can be?"

Yes, it would be extremely difficult to say that, and yet that was just ex-

"Are You So Restless Then?" Billie Brownie Returned.

actly what Billie Brownie wanted to find out.

He puzzled and he puzzled as to the way he would begin the conversation.

Perhaps he would start in by saying something about foolishness and then say, as though it had just occurred to him:

"By the way, they tell me you're a bit foolish yourself."

He was afraid, though, that he would not be able to say this in such a way as to make it sound as though he had just thought of it.

Then he wondered if he could talk about crazy things people had done and add:

"I don't suppose you've ever done anything silly, have you?"

But he was afraid that might not do. That might sound as though he had meant the conversation to lead up to that very subject—as was really the truth!

He didn't know what to do. And even after he saw the loon he did not know what to say. He decided to himself he would wait awhile and see whether the loon seemed sensitive or "touchy" or whether he appeared as though he would not mind what was talked of between them.

The loon did seem very nervous. He was. Billie Brownie soon saw a most marvelous diver and he did his marketing with great ease and masterfulness.

"You'll forgive me if I'm a bit restless," the loon said. "It's my disposition."

Billie Brownie was delighted. Here was the loon introducing the subject himself!

Billie needn't have spent so much time worrying and puzzling over what he might say.

"Are you so restless then?" Billie Brownie returned. "I suppose your family all have the same kind of a disposition?"

Billie had long ago discovered that once a creature was started in talking about himself, there was no effort about making him continue.

"Yes, we have much the same disposition divided up among the members of the family," the loon said.

Billie smiled to himself. The loon spoke as though dispositions were divided up as homes and gardens might be divided.

"You see, we have always been restless. But we're not crazy when we're free.

"We're pretty foolish at times. Now and again. But it is when we're put in close quarters that we go crazy.

"Yes, we go plain crazy—or fancy crazy if you prefer to speak of it in that way.

"They do not keep us in the zoos because we go crazy, lose our appetities and all our energy.

"We wouldn't mind, perhaps, if we had quantities of room, but quantities of room means to be free.

"It is when we have been in zoos and when we have gone crazy that people have seen us and have said;

"'See those crazy loons. How very, very crazy they are.'

"So we have the reputation of being crazy. 'Crazy as a loon' has become quite an expression.

"But I must go for a dive and swim, now, Billie Brownie. 'Glad you called,' as the signs at either end of the town say to the automobile people who've come a-visiting."

And Billie Brownie went home with his question answered without having had to ask the question.

School dramas in his earlier days were responsible in a measure for handsome David Rollins being a screen actor. He was born in Kansas City in 1909. He first worked in a bank after finishing high school. Later he played extra parts in the motion pictures. He is a good swimmer and rider. He has black hair and blue eyes. He has been seen to excellent advantage in numerous pictures.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

THE MENACE OF OUR AGE

DEATH is the result of breaking contact with environment. When it is cut down the tree dies. Sever the flower from the stem and it will wither. If, in the world of moral values, you destroy the nerves leading to sacrifice and service, the result will be death to one's ideals. The death of the moral ideals of sacrifice and service is caused by selfishness. Eliminate selfishness and we would have "Days of heaven upon the earth."

L. A. Barrett.

The self-centered life is playing havoc with the world today. It is the menace of our age. It refuses to recognize that we are living in a world we did not make; that most of our possessions we received from others. "The best that we know, the intellectual treasures of humanity, the language we speak, the songs we sing, the truths we possess, the views of life we cherish—all these did not spring from our care for our private selves alone, but from the great, all-prevailing impulse to live and labor for others." With this statement selfishness would not agree. Selfishness builds palaces and in imagination enthrones itself in power. A price is paid for a coveted prize which in many cases spells ruin of self and destruction of the higher ideals of responsibility for our common humanity. Selfishness cries in terms of the old Epicurean philosophy, "Let us eat, drink and be merry; for tomorrow we die." Selfishness is always endeavoring to gain sufficient power to enable it to say, "The world owes me a debt, let it pay." Against this reversal of the true logic of service and an honest philosophy of life, John Ruskin wrote in his "Modern Painters," "Shall one by breath and sweep gather some branch of the commerce of the country into one great cobweb of which he himself is to be the master spider? Shall the industrial and political giant say, "Here is the power in my hands, weakness owes me a debt? Build a mound here for me to be throned upon, come, weave tapestries purple, dance before me that I may be glad, and sing sweetly to me that I may slumber. So shall I live in joy and die in honor."

This may serve as the creed of an anarchist whose object is to overthrow the government and establish by force that form of discipline which dominates Russia today. It is the law of the jungle, where death rules, not the law of liberty which secures for us a national as well as an individual peace, prosperity and happiness.

Centenarians

Although approximately 5,000 persons in the United States claim to have reached the age of one hundred years, most of them either are mistaken or have deliberately falsified in their eagerness to gain public notice, says T. Swann Harding, an authority on science, in the North American Review. "It is significant," he points out, "that such advanced ages occur among peasant classes usually, where records are unavailable."

Mr. Harding shows that although a few cases of persons who have passed the century mark have been authenticated, many more such claims, particularly ages as one hundred and twenty years and upward, have been disproved by marriage, military and other records. Only .06 per cent of Americans, he shows, reach eighty years of age.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

PEACOCK'S FEATHERS

AMONG the superstitious peacock's feathers have a bad reputation. In England and the United States it is a common belief that to keep them in the house for decorative purposes portends disastrous events; and that if there are daughters in the family the girls will never be married as long as the ill-omened feathers are a part of the household adornments.

These superstitions are survivals from the ancient cult of Juno to whom the peacock was sacred and by which the Romans represented the goddess in many of their paintings and sculptures made for protective purposes. Elworthy says with regard to the superstition that peacock feathers bring bad luck, that Juno's "anger is excited in some way by the plucking of the feathers of her favorite bird; while the idea that so long as they are kept in the house no suitor will come for the daughters points to the old attribute of spite and jealousy in love or matrimonial matters with which the goddess was always accredited."

Dear Editor:

TODAY I was so hungry, after 150 miles of touring, that I ordered everything on the menu except the fly specks.

Signs today: "Population 703." Well, don't boast. "Threshing machines and tractors not allowed on the pavement." No, you've got to leave room for the trucks.

Why does every one wave at a locomotive engineer?

A few farmers are threshing; the silos are getting loaded up with anything left after the drought. Apples are growing right along the roadside. I'm convinced again that this is a great country.—Fred Barton.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

WHY IS IT "THE ALL-FATHERING RIVER?"

ALMOST every one of us has heard this reference to the famous body of water under discussion; yet how many of us, offhand, would be able to say that it was an allusion to the River Nile?

It was G. W. Stevens, historian, traveler and literateur, who coined this name, after the fact that throughout the unparalleled length of the Nile's flow it beneficently waters a greater area of the agricultural world than any other stream.

The ground slaked by the Nile is known to be the most fertile soil of them all.

It is in tribute to this largesse of the mighty Nile that Stevens christened it "The All-fathering River."

English Poet Laureates Long Lived but Prosy

Poet laureates of England have been a long-lived race. Doctor Bridges—he was a physician, too—was eighty-five when he passed on. The ages of his three immediate predecessors in the office—Alfred Austin, Tennyson and Wordsworth—averaged eighty. Among the distinguished laureates of an earlier period, Ben Jonson lived to be sixty-three and Dryden to be sixty-nine. But the record among laureates is held by the actor-manager Colley Cibber, who died in 1757 at the age of eighty-seven.

As a poet Colley Cibber was terrible and King Edward had no great opinion of the poetry of Alfred Austin, poet laureate at the time he ascended the throne. He was not alone in that opinion.

"I always thought that Mr. Austin's appointment was not a good one," he wrote to Lord Salisbury, then prime minister, "but as long as he gets no pay it would, I think, be best to renew the appointment in his favor."

A few months later King Edward sent to Salisbury some verses and pointedly called his attention to the "trash which the poet laureate writes" —the letter is quoted in Sir Sidney Lee's "Life of Edward."

Possibilities of Paper Showers Pointed Out

It was the skyscraper that evolved the idea of showers of bits of paper to welcome distinguished guests in triumphant procession in the street below. Who threw the first handful? He was a pioneer in that kind of pageantry; and the fluttering particles confer an air so festal that nothing else can equal it.

In earlier eras flowers may have been thus cast from windows and balconies, but never in the prodigious volume with which the paper cascades descend; nor from the impressive height. We have often thought that this new feature of enthusiastic salutation to heroes and joy-inspiring guests should be developed and elaborated.

If we may not bestow rose-leaves on the heads of the distinguished, tissue paper simulation of rose-leaves —perhaps somewhat larger for festive effect—in crimson, pink and yellow might be thickly sifted through the air; or still more gorgeous, mingled with stars of silver and gold paper. We don't half realize the possibilities of this showy and enlivening innovation—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Proof of Friendship

A telephone call came to the superintendent of a sanitarium near Chicago.

"Say," queried the caller, "have you got a fellow named B— out there?"

"Why, yes."

"Is he paying you any board?"

"No; he's a charity patient."

"Say, that guy hasn't got any more right to be a charity patient than I have. Why, he's got $400 in one bank and $600 in another and he owns a bungalow out in Waukegan. You'd better hide his clothes before you give him a bill, though, or he'll skip out on you. He's that kind of a crook."

"Say," demanded the superintendent, "who are you and how do you come to know so much about B—'s affairs?"

"Oh," replied the unknown caller, "I'm a close friend of his."—Chicago Evening Post.

Misled by Sign

Pat, the Irishman, had agreed to accompany his wife on a shopping expedition.

"There's a good pair of boots," said the latter, as they stood looking in the window of a boot and shoe shop. "I'll get those for little Jamesy."

Pat looked at the articles indicated and a murmur of surprise left his lips as he saw the price and the notice, "Last Seven Days" displayed on a card above them.

"But, surely, Martha," he said, "you don't want to buy those things."

"Why not, Pat?" asked his wife wonderingly.

"Begorrah," gasped her husband, "but you want them to last longer than a week."—London Answers.

Original Speed Law?

The first speed law passed in America was drawn by the board of selectmen of Boston in 1757. The ordinance follows: "Owing to great danger arising oftentimes from coaches, sleighs, chairs and other carriages on the Lord's days, as people are going to or coming from the several churches in this town, being driven with great rapidity, and the public worship being oftentimes much disturbed by such carriages, it is therefore voted and ordered that no coach, sleigh, chair, chaise or other carriage at such times be driven at a greater rate than a foot pace, on penalty to the master of the slave or servant so driving of the sum of ten shillings."

Might Become a Habit

Billy was one of a large family, where the children were accustomed to wait on themselves. Usually he was dressed and was out of the house at an early hour. One morning he was found sitting disconsolately on the edge of his bed making no move to dress.

"Why, Billy,' said his mother, "why don't you get your clothes on? You are old enough to dress yourself now, you know."

"Yes, I can put my clothes on all right," replied Billy on the verge of tears, "but if I commence to dress myself, I'll just have to keep it up, and I ain't goin' to do it."

BELIEVE IT OR NOT.

To the inquisitive, unconvinced minds of today, which do not accept the unexplained mysteries of life through the simple mental process of faith, all mysteries dealing with evolution of life and matter and things pertaining to God are oft-times cast into the junk heap of unbelief because of their inability to understand them. Logical minds naturally look for, and expect a solution to, every mystery; especially those spoken of in the bible. And when no solution is reached in the realm of controversy and discussion of vital scientific and religious questions, the faithless thinker looks upon all mysteries, as barriers of freedom of thought, inconveniences, hindrances, and embarrassments, and sits down and discounts all because he can not undertand a few things yet undiscovered.

To the inquisitive, contrite, and faithful minds of today, which accept all myteries of life and its habitat, through faith, there is to be found no unbelief or striving after solutions of mysteries that have no vital bearing on the "just for today" method of living. Unexplained mysteries are taken and accepted as the unnecessary bits of knowledge, unessential to man's destiny—at least for the immediate future. He accepts mysteries (unexplained) as a positive guarantee that any God that can produce a mystery and keep a human race, like ours, from fathoming them, can surely be counted as an authority of sufficient greatness to bring man into the solution of these mysteries but be the care taker of both his soul and body—now and later. Mysteries minimize man and magnifies God. Mysteries are a good thing for the human race. Mysteries prevent silly, unwarranted, and unprofitable discussion of divine truths, that would be tongue fodder for the discontented, fault finding element of the earth. The solution of all mysteries would lead to hair splitting discussions that would tend to demoralize and confuse rather than solve and construct.

What we don't, know, gives us time to discuss and teach what we do know. What the bible has made plain by visible proofs, is enough for the well being of the race for the present and well into the future. Basing the grounds for teaching and beliefs on speculation and assumption or on the private interpretation of a single man or group of men, through guess work of either scientific or biblical fields of thought is one of the enemies of all truth. That which is not established as facts should not be pressed on the minds of men as facts. But let men believe through faith that all will be well in due season and due time. Mysteries should cause no one to halt. What we don't know don't hurt us—what we could know might.

—I'm Convinced.

Flowers in Japan

The arrangement of flowers is traditionally an art in Japan, and even developed into a philosophy in the Fifteenth century. The basic idea is to reproduce in the arrangement the effect of growing plants, and also to reflect the season or the occasion. Certain colors are considered especially suitable for certain occasions. An uneven number of flowers in a display is considered lucky and more true to nature than an even number.

Light Stops Trains

Demonstration of a method of halting trains by the action of a beam of light, was made with a small model recently. A small hand lamp casts a ray which strikes a light cell on the front of the engine. The cell then causes the brakes of the train to be applied through the action of relays set in operation by the effect of the light upon the cell.

SIX HIGHWAYS ESTABLISHED BY COMMISSIONERS

Six improved highways were formally established by the county commissioners at their October session, and it was determined to issue $235,951.15 in bonds to pay for them.

The roads and the amount of bonds for each follow:

St. Joe–Spencerville road, $135.-130.

Waterloo–Hamilton road, $67,-900.

Roy Prosser road in Jackson township, $13,086.80.

Walace Abel road in Newville township, $5,544.35.

Clidie E. Phillips road in Smithfield township, $10,280.

Cedar Chapel road in Butler township, $4,010.

The first two in the list are to be paved and the other four will be constructed of gravel.

No objections being offered to the petition of John B. Miller and others for a road in Smithfield township, the petition was ordered spread of record and the cause was continued to the November term.

Albert Beerbour and Samuel Brown were appointed viewers for the Wm. Shroyer road in Fairfield township. They were ordered to report November 5.

The commissioners approved the final report in the Marion Cramer drain and the superintendent was discharged.

Clyde Hart, filed his final report as commissioner of construction for the Geo. W. Wade drain and the cause was continued.

J. P. Heinlin of Garrett, was awarded the contract for supplies for the county farm for the ensuing quarter.

PAVEMENT ACCEPTED BY COUNTY AND STATE

Preliminary to the final acceptance of the DeKalb county portion of the Auburn–Fort Wayne road, County Commissioners Nicholas Funk and Charles G. Potter, accompanied by County Surveyor Charles T. Miser, made an official trip over it Monday afternoon of last week.

The commissioners had before them Monday morning the state's certificate of completion, certifying that the work was done by Contractor Ray L. Harris of Fort Wayne, in accordance with the plans and specifications.

The commissioners allowed the contractor's final claim Tuesday in the sum of $29,140.59. The contract price was $142,253.14. The material used was water-bound and bituminous macadam base with rock asphalt surface. The state inspector was Lloyd W. Yeiser of Kendallville, a former DeKalb county commissioner.

The road has been open to traffic several weeks. The state will take it over at once, designating the route from Auburn to Fort Wayne as road No. 1.

A Small Item

New force to the statement that gasoline is the "cheapest commodity" is given by statistics recently issued by T. R. Agg and H. S. Carter of Ohio State College.

They estimate that out of every dollar spent for operating an automobile, 20 cents for gasoline, 3 cents for oil, 27 cents for maintenance, 22 cents for depreciation, 10 cents for tires and tubes, 7 cents for garage rent, 2 cents for license and 6 cents for interest.

Actually, the motorist spends less than 20 cents out of each dollar for gasoline, as 10 to 33 per cent of his gasoline bill goes to the state in taxes.

Those who complain about the "high cost of gasoline" should know that it is one of the few major commodities we use that costs less than it did in 1913.

Indiana now has a total of 51,-314 miles of improved highways according to Frank Hatfield, president of Hoosier Motor Club, and leads all the states regardless of size and wealth. It is well to remember in this connection the entire mileage of state highways total more than 5,000 miles, 3,180 miles of which are paved and which have been developed during the past 10 years without one cent of bonded indebtedness to the State.

SPENCERVILLE CITIZEN DIED LAST FRIDAY

The death of Thomas McNamara of Spencerville, occurred Friday morning at 3:30 as the result of complications at the age of seventy years. Mr. McNamara, formerly a resident of Jackson township, had lived at Spencerville for the last seven years. During his residence in Jackon township he was a contractor and a barn builder, retiring from his occupation about the time he moved to Spencerville.

Mr. McNamara is survived by his widow, three sons, A. R. McNamara, assessor of Jackson township, and well known auctioneer, Inglebert McNamara of Kendallville, and Clay McNamara of Fort Wayne, a daughter, Mrs. Mary Brauerer of Fort Wayne, and a sister, Mrs. Christina Trease of Cedarville.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon at the Spencerville M. E. Church, the Rev. Homer Studabaker officiating, and burial was made in the White City cemetery at Spencerville.

BROADCASTING STATION NEAR ANGOLA

The National Air Transport, Inc., one of the pioneer air transport operators of the United States, through its chief engineer, Ralph H. Higgins, purchased this week two acres of land of the Golden farm several miles west of Angola, and about one-half mile north of Road 20, and will begin at once the erection of a broadcasting station of low wave frequency as a station in a system of communication with the company's airplanes in transit.

The National Air Transport, Inc., is now operating air passenger lines from Cleveland and Detroit to Chicago, and air mail and express lines from New York to Chicago and to Dallas, Tex., over the beacon lines maintained by the United States government, which cross the southern part of Steuben county. The government air fields have sending stations only to transmit weather reports and other bulletins to the ships, but have no facilities for receiving messages from the ships. The National Air Transport in the development of its passenger service especially will equip its planes with sending instruments also as well as receiving insturments so that communication may be had at all times with its planes, both for commercial communication as well as keeping in constant contact with the planes as a means for increasing the element of safety assurance in the travel.

For this purpose three radio broadcasting stations will be operating in connection with the division from Cleveland to Chicago, one at Orland, Ill., near Chicago, and the intermediate station will be the one now located in this county. The location of the station here does not imply in anyway as far as the present plans cover, any changing of the course of the air service, as the beacon line and landing fields are maintained by the government as an air highway for the use of all air ships. The National Air Transport selected the location for its broadcasting station from the standpoint of the least possible interference from other electrical installations. High tension power lines were to be avoided in the choice of location. Even a short distance from the main highway was desired, as spark plugs in automobiles would cause interference. Communication will be had from these stations with the ships at all times, supplemented by telephone communication to the landing fields for ships on the ground.

The company will proceed at once with the erection of a one story and basement brick building 20 x 30 feet in size. The basement will contain the engine room and electric generating equipment, comprised of two ten-kilowatt Kohler units, which will supply light and sufficient power for the plant. On the main floor will be the instruments, and work room and sleeping quarters for the employes. Probably three operators will be employed with eight hour shifts each, with a supervising engineer. The total cost of the building and equipment will approximate $25,000.

The operation of the system will be on a low wave frequency, too low to be picked up by or in any way affect the local radio reception. It is expected that the plant will be in operation within sixty days.

Mrs. Mary Schovill, of Angola and Mrs. Ida Chubb of Napoleon, were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Carpenter.

Joe Hull invited some of his good friends in October 21 to help him celebrate his 70th birthday, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Hull, where he makes his home. Among those present were F. R. Bowman (candidate for county councilman) and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Baltz, Mr. and Mrs. Fred High, Mr. Ernie Watson, Miss Marcile Holman of Auburn, Paul Carpenter, and Harvey Hull and family. He received several nice presents. They returned home at a late hour wishing him many more happy birthdays.

A FORWARD STEP IN POWER FARMING

Power farming has become a necessity now days, if one man is to do all his own labor and keep up with his crop, harvest in due season, and take care of it as it is necessary to do.

Carl Carpenter, Monday traded his tractor binder on a Farmall tank type corn picker. This machine will be in operation at the Carpenter farm this week.

The lure of the husking peg may cause Carl to leave the tractor seat now and then, to keep his hand in but generally speaking the day of hand labor in corn harvest is over. It is a fact that our American farmers must be ready to discard old methods for newer, quicker and more effective means of cutting his operating costs, and thus making his labors a pleasure.

VIOLATED PAROLE, MUST SERVE YEAR

An order was entered in federal court at South Bend Thursday by Judge Slick revoking probation in the case of Dallas Cook of Newville, DeKalb County, requiring him to serve a year in federal prison.

Cook's place was raided a year or so ago by federal officers and he was then given a suspended sentence on a charge of illegal possession of liquor.

Sheriff John C. Armstrong led another raid on Cook's place last July and when he pleaded guilty in the DeKalb circuit court to a charge of illegal possession he was fined $100 and was sentenced to the penal farm for ninety days.

At the termination of Cook's term at the penal farm federal officers will remove him to a federal prison, presumably Leavenworth.

FAIRY TALE FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN BEDTIME HOUR COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

You have heard of the Every-Day-Is-Nice Club. Now some of the elves had been complaining of the weather.

It was neither sunny, nor was it rainy.

"What is this we hear from some of our club members?" roared old Mr. Giant.

He did not sound cross but his voice was very loud and powerful and well suited to his great body and big head.

"What Is This We Hear?"

The elves who had been complaining—Edie and Effie Elf particularly—hung their heads in shame.

Would they be turned out of the club? They wondered. They feared they would, and yet they did so hope they wouldn't.

"Oh, Mr. Giant," said Effie, "I am so sorry. It was all my fault. I started breaking the rules. I complained of the weather.

"Edie only followed my bad example."

"Oh, I grumbled just as much," said Edie. "Yes, Mr. Giant, if it hadn't been for me, Effie would have made the most of the weather and enjoyed herself.

"And I said the weather was not the right kind at all. I was much more harsh about it than she was."

"No," said Effie, "if anyone is to be put out of the club, it should be myself."

"No," screamed Edie, "please, Mr. Giant, make it Edie and not Effie."

Mr. Giant was smiling. He was very happy.

"You both did break the rules of the club," he said, "but there are many things worse than that.

"If you had told on each other and had been tattletales, then you would both have been put out of the club.

"But each was ready and willing to take the blame."

"Yes," agreed Witty Witch, "if there is one thing I hate, it's a tattletale.

"Such a person is a coward and wants to be praised, while another is blamed.

"Ugh—" And Witty Witch shivered at the very thought.

"And so," continued Mr. Giant, "you will both be kept in the club, and neither of you will lose your badges.

"You will simply have to get up a very nice and jolly party this evening to make up for complaining of the weather."

"What a lovely punishment," said Effie and Edie together, as they hugged each other, for they felt that each had been a real and true friend to want to take all the blame.

"Yes," said Mr. Giant, "and we must remember that the reason we are having in-between, damp weather, is because the cloud children are visiting the sun's rays, and so we have half and half of each kind of weather."

But what a splendid party they all had that evening. It was just as jolly as could be.

Mr. Giant had fine ideas!

Popular Cheese Sandwich Can Be Made Extra Tasty

Hot cheese sandwiches are not much in evidence during July and August, but they are so good that one turns to them for luncheon or supper menus as soon as the weather cools a bit. There is a trick or two about making them so that they are extra tasty. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture explains the special points herewith:

Slice the bread thin and remove the crusts. Without buttering the bread, make it into sandwiches with thin, even slices of American cheese as the filling and a sprinkling of salt and a drop or two of tabasco for seasoning. Melt sufficient butter to cover the bottom of a smooth skillet and brown the sandwiches delicately on both sides. Take care that the butter does not become so hot that it browns the sandwiches before the bread is heated through and the cheese melted. Serve the sandwiches at once with a salad of vegetables or of sardines.

Oyster Stew Tempting Dish for Evening Meal

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Because October has an "R" in its spelling—and also happens to be a suitable season for eating oysters, we are apt to welcome this flavorful shellfish with especial eagerness after being deprived of it for several months. In the fall, too, there are often cool periods that suggest something temptingly hot for the evening meal. Nothing could be more satisfactory for the purpose than a good oyster stew. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture tells how to make it.

1 quart milk	2 tbs. flour
1 quart oysters	Salt
4 tbs. melted butter	Pepper
	Chopped parsley

Heat the milk in a double boiler. Strain the oysters from their liquor and pick out any small pieces of shell that may be clinging to them. Heat the oyster liquor slightly and remove the scum which rises to the top. Blend the flour and butter and stir into the milk until thickened. Add the oysters and the liquor and cook for five or ten minutes, or until the edges of the oysters begin to curl. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Serve in hot soup plates with finely chopped parsley sprinkled over the top.

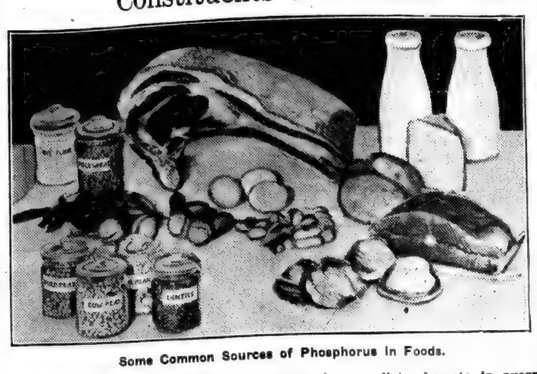
Phosphorus One of the Mineral Constituents of Common Foods



Some Common Sources of Phosphorus in Foods.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A well-rounded diet supplies us with energy foods, body-building material, vitamins, and minerals. Phosphorus is one of the mineral constituents of a number of our common foods, which has a marked effect on growth. In a series of charts prepared by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture the results of various laboratory studies made with small experimental animals are shown. For example, a rat which was given a diet adequate in every way except for the amount of phosphorus received, was found at the end of 9 weeks to weigh only 60 grams. Another rat from the same litter and fed in the same way except for the addition of a sufficient amount of phosphorus to make the diet adequate, weighed 115 grams at the end of the same length of time. The picture, which is from these charts, shows what a wide variety of foods supply phosphorus.

Some of the common sources of phosphorus listed by the bureau are: Almonds, dry beans, fresh lima beans, buttermilk, cheese, cowpeas, eggs, fish, graham flour, rye flour, hazelnuts, lentils, lean meat, milk, oysters, peanuts, pecans, potatoes, peas, both fresh and dry, shredded wheat, walnuts, whole wheat, and wheat bran. Many of these foods are eaten in the course of a normal varied diet; it is chiefly important to make sure that some of them are always present in the menu. Other valuable constituents, too, are contributed by most of the foods mentioned.

Bureau of Home Economics Suggests Way of Making Cake Frosting

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A good many women who can make an excellent, light, feathery cake have trouble with the frosting. In the old-fashioned "boiled frosting" method the sirup, cooked "until it spins a thread," is poured gradually into a beaten egg-white. Sometimes the icing is just right, sometimes it hardens too fast and cannot be put on the cake successfully, and sometimes it does not harden at all, but remains sticky or even runs off the cake. When a candy thermometer is used in making the sirup results are more uniform, but the work of combining the hot sirup and the beaten egg-white must be skillfully done.

A different and simpler method of making frosting is suggested by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. A double boiler is used and the ingredients, including the unbeaten egg whites, are all put in at the same time. This frosting never actually boils, but it becomes thick and creamy very quickly and hardens nicely. The crust is crisp and glazed while underneath it the frosting is soft, light and moist. Various flavors may be used.

The amount suggested in the recipe below is sufficient for the tops of three eight-inch layers. If it is desired to ice the cake on the sides, add half as much again of the various ingredients. For spreading the frosting use a broad thin knife or spatula dipped in hot water.

Vanilla Frosting.

1 cup sugar	¼ tsp. salt
4 tbs. cold water	½ tsp. vanilla
1 egg white

Put the sugar, water and unbeaten egg-white into the upper part of a double boiler. Have the water in the lower part boiling. Commence beating the mixture with a dover beater at once and beat constantly while it cooks for seven or eight minutes. It should then look just like ordinary boiled frosting and should be almost thick enough to spread. Take it from the stove, add the vanilla, and continue to beat about five minutes or until it has thickened.

If the icing is not sufficiently cooked place it in the double boiler and recook for a short time; or, if it is too stiff, add a small quantity of water and cook again.

For chocolate frosting add two ounce squares of unsweetened chocolate to the other ingredients, and follow the same method given for vanilla frosting. The chocolate frosting will take longer to thicken to the right consistency.

Pulverized Mint

Pulverized dried mint leaves give an unusual flavor to meat sauces and salad dressings without definitely tasting like mint.

Teaspoonful of Tea to Cup Is Good Average

Brewing a social cup of tea is an art unknown to many housewives.

While the amount of tea to use will depend on the individual's taste, C. F. Hutchinson, tea examiner stationed at New York city for the federal food and drug administration, says that about a teaspoonful to the cup is a good average. Boiling water must be used or the leaves will not open fully and impart their full strength and flavor to the beverage. But tea should never be boiled nor should the leaves stand in the water longer than five or six minutes, in his opinion.

Mr. Hutchinson puts the tea in an aluminum strainer, puts the strainer across the top of the teapot, and pours boiling water through the strainer until the pot is full, covering the body of the strainer. After it has drawn for three or four minutes he takes the strainer out and has a cup of tea that is just to his liking.

Buttered Bread Crumbs Add to Baked Tomatoes

Wash tomatoes, remove the stem ends, cut in half, place in a shallow greased baking dish, cover with buttered bread crumbs seasoned with salt and pepper. Add a little water to keep the tomatoes from sticking to the dish. Bake in a moderate oven for 30 minutes, or until the tomatoes are tender and the crumbs brown.

Extra Compensation

Betty Lou's father gave her a nickel every week for learning her Sunday school lesson. One Sunday morning when he offered her the customary 5-cent piece, she refused it.

"What's the matter?" he asked in surprise.

"Well," replied Betty Lou, "there's a lot of hard words in the lesson this week so I'll have to charge you 10 cents!"

DOCTOR'S Prescription gives Bowels Real Help

Train your bowels to be regular; to move at the same time every day; to be so thorough that they get rid of all the waste. Syrup Pepsin—a doctor's prescription—will help you do this. When you take this compound of laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients, you are helping the bowels to help themselves.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the sensible thing to take whenever you are headachy, bilious, half-sick from constipation. When you have no appetite, and a bad taste or bad breath shows you're full of poisonous matter or sour bile.

Dr. Caldwell studied bowel troubles for 47 years. His prescription always works quickly, thoroughly; can never do you any harm. It just cleans you out and sweetens the whole digestive tract. It gives those overworked bowels the help they need.

Take some Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin today, and see how fine you feel tomorrow—and for days to come. Give it to the kiddies when they're sickly or feverish; they'll like the taste! Your druggist has big bottles of it, all ready for use.

FUR-JACKET CLOTH SUIT MUCH IN AUTUMN FASHION LIMELIGHT

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Rah, rah, rah! here it is, college girls and women everywhere, who are interested in "the latest," just the costume you've been wanting to wear to the football games this fall or about town—the fur-jacket cloth suit. It is simply too smart for words.

The fur-jacket costume is the pet of Paris. It is the most captivating, "nifty" fashion that ever initiated a fall season. You can get it in any sports fur of your choice, and if your checkbook will not admit of real fur shed no tears, for the fur-fabric types are amazingly good looking.

Muskrat, dyed lapin, caracul, kidskin or spotted leopard, choose which you will, you are sure to go right in your selection and, having decided, the next step is to consider the cloth for the skirt and the lining of the jacket. Yes, indeed, the jacket must be lined with the cloth of the skirt, else you fail to accent the ensemble idea which would be a sad sin of omission.

The blouse to wear with it? Why not one of the new wool lace over which every one in styledom is raving? Or perhaps you prefer one made of the very smart eyelet-embroidered wool jersey or just plain jersey in a bright hue, if you insist.

Maybe your fancy turns to lacy tweed for the skirt and the lining and the beret—for, of course, you are planning a matching beret. There is only one excuse for the beret not matching the tweed of the skirt or the one-piece dress (yes, some folks like a one-piece frock best with their fur jacket, and fashion is willin') and that excuse is because the beret is made of the fur of the jacket.

Truth is these fur-jacket and beret sets are smart enough to wear with any one of those pretty deep green, wine red, or radiant brown lightweight wool frocks which are finding their way into your autumn and winter wardrobe. Look stunning, too, with a velvet or velveteen skirt.

The majority of these swanky fur or fur-fabric jackets follow simplest "sportay" lines and are belted and have huge collars.

SOME RECIPES THAT WILL BE LIKED BY THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

Come, my beloved, fill the cup which clears
Today of past regrets and future fears—
Tomorrow: why tomorrow I may be, myself,
With yesterday's seven thousand years.
—Omar Khayyam.

The bride of today with all her equipment in culinary knowledge has no fear of failures in cookery. Up-to-date cook books with clear directions for preparing even the simple foods gives assurance to the most inexperienced.

Here is one which any bride will like to try:

Fancy Biscuit.—Take two cupfuls of flour, four teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of sugar, two tablespoonfuls of shortening, one egg and two-thirds of a cupful of milk, one-third cupful of sliced dates, four tablespoonfuls of peanut butter and one egg yolk. Sift the dry ingredients, work in the shortening with a fork until well blended, add milk and well beaten egg to form a soft dough. Roll out on a floured board and cut small rounds. Spread one with peanut butter, place one or two slices of dates and cover with another round. Press the edges together to enclose the butter and dates. Brush with egg diluted with a little milk or water and bake in a hot oven. If preferred cut the rounds larger and put the butter and date on one-half and fold over, pinching the edges together.

Mocha Frosting.—Take one-fourth cupful of butter, one tablespoonful of cocoa, two cupfuls of confectioner's sugar and three to four tablespoonfuls of strong coffee infusion. Cream the butter, add the cocoa. Stir in the sugar and coffee gradually. Beat until smooth and spread on the cake.

Coffee Ice Cream.—Scald one and one-half cupfuls of milk with one-third of a cupful of finely ground coffee, strain through a double cheese cloth, add one cupful of sugar, the beaten yolks of four eggs, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt; cook over water until thick, adding one-fourth cupful of sugar and one cupful of cream; cool, add three more cupfuls of cream and freeze. Serve garnished with maraschino cherries.

Cottage Pudding.—Cream one-fourth of a cupful of butter, add two-thirds of a cupful of sugar gradually and one egg well beaten; mix and sift two and one-fourth cupfuls of flour with four teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt; add the dry mixture alternately with one cupful of milk and bake in a shallow cake pan. Cut into squares and serve with a lemon sauce or with crushed fruit and cream.

Just a plain cottage pudding may be used for various desserts, varying the sauce which is served with it.

Orange juice is such a pleasant drink that nobody needs to be urged to drink it. The average person thinks nothing of buying a bottle of medicine that costs a dollar or more, but now much pleasanter and cheaper orange juice is. It regulates the bowels, refreshes and pleases the palate all at the same time, which cannot be said of most medicines. One need not fear any bad results from getting the orange juice habit—the more you take the better you like it and the healthier you are. For a daily drink any time it is acceptable and a glass taken at night is one of the best of night caps.

Peach Tartlets With Raspberry Sauce.—Spread rich pastry over small inverted patty tins. Bake until a light brown in a hot oven. Place them in the tins and fill with halves of peaches, cut side down, cut very thin and kept in the original shape. Pour hot red raspberry jam or sauce over them, return to the oven to bake until the peaches are soft. They may be served fresh if so wished, topping with a bit of whipped cream.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE ANNOYING FLIES

"I HAVE some remarks which I should like to make," said the fly.

First he dusted off his hind legs and then he brushed off his front legs and gave his head a good dusting. He did all this without any duster—his wings and head and legs could be kept clean by himself without any outside help.

He didn't care to be too clean—just enough, just enough, that was all.

"Yes," the fly continued, "I have some remarks to make."

Another fly looked at him out of his double eyes and said: "If that is the case you'd better make them."

"I Have Some Remarks to Make," the Fly Continued.

"Just what I intend doing," said the first fly.

"I see," said the second fly. "You intended making these remarks whether I encouraged you or not.

"You just hoped I would urge you to do so, and then it would sound as though the suggestion came from me when you had already made up your fly mind to speak. Ha, ha, buzz, buzz, I understand."

"Oh, very well," said the first fly, "I do not mind if you understand so well.

"I won't let my feelings be hurt, I won't go away and keep from speaking to you on that account.

"I wouldn't be a child and get mad at another child and 'not speak' for anything.

"I'm the other way. I don't mind how much I am insulted. And it is about this that I wish to make my remarks.

"People would not stick to each other if they were told to get away and were pushed aside or brushed aside.

"People would not stick around if they were not wanted.

"People would not like other people if they were not treated well.

"People would not stay in houses where they were not wanted and where they were told they were not wanted.

"But flies will!

"Yes, people can shove us aside when we light upon them, they can talk about us and wish we'd go away, but still we come about.

"The other day I settled on the forehead of a little girl five different times in less than ten minutes.

"She brushed me off and complained about me and said she wished I'd go away and not come back again.

"But back I came.

"That just shows you how much better a friend I was to her than some people would have been if she had talked to them the way she talked to me."

"Still," said the second fly, "you wouldn't have been anxious to show her any real friendship.

"Maybe you'd go back to her and bother her and stick to her but not in any friendly fashion."

"True," said the first fly, "but still I remark that that is more than people will do—stick when they're not loved."

"Oh, well," said the second fly, "I can't say anything, as I do the same. I show the same interest in those who show no interest in me.

"I fuss about people who are annoyed by me.

"I don't care whether I'm wanted or not—I'm still the same stick-about fly.

"It's the fly style not to object whether we're wanted or not."

And then the two flies began to fly about and buzz and sing this little song:

Two flies are we,
Buzzing with glee.
We're a nuisance, it's true,
But it won't make us blue
If we're urged away
At night or by day
But that can't make us go.
We're not healthy, you know
When we're having our fun
We wait 'till we're done.
We love to annoy
A girl or a boy.
Two flies are we,
Buzzing with glee.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

SERVICE

AS WE daily meet the opportunities which our modern world presents to us is it not imperative that we discover just what are our motives and purposes in life? Do we undertake our daily tasks with a clear and definite goal ahead of us or are we trusting to chance or fate to direct our course? Do we regard the advantages we possess as opportunities for personal aggrandizement or personal service? Will we live to work, or work in order to live?

If we make service the main objective of our career, regardless of what professional work we may be interested in—if we look upon life as a wonderful opportunity for making the world a more fit place in which to live—if we seek to infuse principles and ideals into the characters of those with whom we come in contact—then we certainly possess a purpose in life that was not born in us through our worship of the crass materialism of our age. A motive which is daily expressed in altruistic service is not determined by legislation, or by any artificial standards. Such a motive is born within a man's own heart and is attributable to the controlling power of the thoughts he thinks rather than to the amount of money he may possess. Shall one's interpretation of life's values be expressed in the choice of those standards which so absorb all the resources as to leave no room for the things of the heart—home, little children and friends? We may get money but it will never bring contentment; it may bring relief from physical needs, but never bring true happiness. Success in the game of life, when achieved only for personal gratification, is but "sounding brass and tinkling cymbals."

This is more than theory. It has a most practical bearing upon everyday life. The merchant who derives his living from the profits of the neighborhood store has long ago learned that the most sure way to profits is by rendering service. A fortune awaits any person who can discover a real public need and the way to meet that need. The influence of a person's life in any community depends not upon what he gets out of the community, but upon what he gives to the community. If a man would have friends he must first show himself to be friendly. We receive many times more than what we give away. We are bound to lose what we try to keep all to ourselves. "The true test of a civilization," said Emerson, "is not the census, nor the size of the cities, but the kind of men the country turns out."

No scrubbing —no boiling

yet clothes wash whiter

WHO SAID women aren't as efficient as men? Look at this wash, dear . . . white as snow. Yet I didn't do a bit of hard work. I just soaked everything in a wonderful new kind of suds—and out came my wash sweet and spotless!

"The soap? Why, Rinso—of course! It is the only soap I know that produces live suds, the kind that loosens dirt without the help of a washboard. That saves the clothes, let me tell you!"

Safe, economical suds

Cup for cup, Rinso gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Lasting suds, even in hardest water. The makers of 38 famous washing machines recommend Rinso. So do home-making experts everywhere. Get the BIG package. Rinso is great for dishwashing, too.

Whole Volume in Her Short, Pungent Comment

An anecdote about Theodore Dreiser, the novelist, is going the rounds of New York. Mr. Dreiser has recently written the story of his love affairs; beautiful girls, it seems, have bothered him to death for 30 years, and his successes have surpassed Don Juan's. All this makes the anecdote very interesting.

A pretty girl—so the anecdote runs—sat in the lounge of a New York hotel reading Mr. Dreiser's story, while two men stood in talk near her. The two men separated, and then one of them came over to the girl. He knew her. He was a magazine editor.

"Do you know who that chap was who just left me?" he said.

"No," said she. "Who was it?"

"Theodore Dreiser."

The girl put down her magazine, hurried to the door, and gave Mr. Dreiser a long, careful look. Then she came back and sank into her chair again.

"Merciful heavens!" she said.—Detroit Free Press.

Of Course, Father Had to Break Up the Party

Proudly Mrs. Jissen exhibited the new baby to the first family gathering since its arrival.

"What are you going to call her?" asked one grandmother.

"I'd like her to be called Ada, after her mother," suggested the child's father.

"I think Geraldine is sweet," murmured the mother, ignoring her husband's suggestion.

"Esmeralda has haunted me ever since I read it in a book," chimed in a maiden aunt.

"To my way of thinking, Feodora is classically beautiful," asserted the other grandmother.

The father of the child had sat meekly and quietly through this discussion, but could stand it no longer.

"Excuse me," he said. "We're not trying to get a name for a cigar, but for a child!"

Insulted

While a guest in Pasadena, the crown prince of Bulgaria was taken to the Huntington gardens and art gallery. His highness greatly admired the work of art on display, but it was plain to see that the outdoor gardens, which only California possesses at that time of year, were the chief center of interest.

Pausing before a bed of early annuals, the prince asked of an attendant:

"Do those belong to the aster family?"

"Those Astors don't own everything, sir," replied the guide. "This whole place is part of the Huntington estate."

Now, Judge, Who Endures?

A New Yorker who doesn't know the difference between fuselage and mucilage, asks Judge if there is any especial hazard connected with endurance flights? "Yes," instructs the editor. "Nowadays, an aviator coming down after making a record is liable to bump into others just starting out to break it."

Nobody ever walked out on Sir Walter

SIR WALTER RALEIGH has restored the good repute of many a pipe. Give that unpopular briar of yours a thorough cleaning. Fill it with Sir Walter's smoking mixture. Before you've finished the first can, you'll find yourself with a reformed pipe—a pipe that will get admiring glances from your friends. Sir Walter is a distinctive blend of fine Burley, skillfully mellowed to a mildness and fragrance that are hard to equal, no matter what price you pay.

Dear Editor:

AS ONE of those guys who walk infrequently enough to note vast economic changes, I lament a growing aloofness on the part of horses and dogs.

I always want to pat every dog and horse I come to. The horses are merely suspicious; but do you suppose blooded dogs will approach and be petted now? They have all the motorist's snobbishness toward a pedestrian.

I pity men who don't like pets. They lead such a hard, narrow life. I recall one day I was lunching at the Y. M. C. A. in Brooklyn and was en route for a horseback ride on a cavalry horse in Prospect park. In the bigness of my heart I pocketed most of the sugar lumps in the bowl, looking up suddenly to find a scowling face overhead.

It was the manager. I always remember how unhappy he looked, and he didn't like horses.—Fred Barton.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

HAIR CUTTINGS

THE general superstition in the United States with regard to hair cuttings or hair combings, is that they must be burned and not thrown away. The penalties attached to throwing away the cuttings or combings vary in different localities and range all the way from headache to general bad luck.

The superstition is an inheritance from the most ancient times and arose originally from a wise precaution of our ancestors who, when they were tracking each other through the dark forests with hostile intent, took every precaution not to leave behind them anything by which their enemies could trace them.

That was the material reason which passed with the conditions which gave it birth. But there was another and a supernatural reason for not throwing away the hair which has caused the superstition to endure unto this day. It was the old belief in contagious magic by which the possession of so special part of a man as his hair would enable an enemy to work him great evil. For the hair, the nails and the teeth, though separated from their former possessor, were supposed to still retain so much of an affinity with him that what was done to them affected him.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"ALPHA AND OMEGA"

"IT'S all there is—there is no more"—that might constitute the fin de siecle version of "alpha and omega."

It means, in other words, anything in its entirety, its fullness, the last word on the subject; the beginning and the end.

Of course, those of us possessed of some measure of erudition need no further comment to see the connection; however, the rest of us might find it interesting and enlightening to know that this phrase has the significance stated because of the fact that "alpha" and "omega" are the first and last letters respectively of the Greek alphabet.

DAMP POULTRY LITTER

By Prof. H. D. Munroe

When damp litter appears in the laying house, too often the ventilation of the house is blamed and we fail to look for other more common causes of this trouble. While looking for possible causes of damp litter, keep in mind that it takes only a small amount of water to cause poultry litter to seem real damp.

The chief cause of damp litter in poultry houses is the water fountain or drinking dish. Always look at the watering arrangements first. Often you will find that they leak. Many times they are easily turned over or are open so that the birds walk in them and carry the water on their feet to the litter. Many of the better fountains do not have any of the above faults, but the floor under the fountain is wet. This condition is caused by the water dropping from the beaks and wattles when the birds drink. This is very noticeable where there is not enough fountain space allowed in the pen. One good answer for this trouble is a small water trough placed over the mash box and if any water drops from the bird's bill or wattles it falls in the mash and is soon eaten with the mash. In trying to find the cause of damp poultry litter, look for a wet floor under or near the watering dish.

Next to faulty drinking arrangement as a cause of damp litter, leaky roofs are a close second. The average poultry house roof is too flat and in spite of all precautions will often leak the first or second winter.

Some other common causes of damp litter in poultry houses are crowded conditions; rain or snow coming in at the open front; litter that is too deep so that it does no have a chance to dry out during sunny weather; new cement floors that did not have a chance to dry out before the birds were put in the house; not enough air circulation causing the house to sweat; large flocks in long, narrow houses crowding toward feed room in the afternoon, causing the first pen to be damp while the rest of the house is dry.

There is a tendency among poultrymen to blame their ventilation for the cause of damp litter. Most any ventilation system will take care of an average amount of moisture but no ventilator can handle extra water. No ventilating system will work unless the temperature inside the house is several degrees higher than the temperature outside. This fact has caused many poultrymen to use artificial heat in their laying houses. With a well constructed house, and watering arrangements that do not spill, a small amount of heat is very helpful in keeping the house dry, keeping the water from freezing, preventing winter molt and preventing slumps in production during real cold weather.

Do not blame the ventilating system until all other causes are checked off the list.

Report Bad Driving
AND SAVE LIVES

AAA INDIANA

This is the insignia we have used for many years.

NOTE: This paper agrees with the Hoosier State Automobile Club that most automobile accidents are avoidable. Their warning against indifference on the part of the public about bad practices in driving and the appeal to every one to report instances they witness of dangerous driving should meet with the approval and hearty cooperation of all. Their position is, "that public sentiment must be aroused to the point that the people's sense of fair play is so outraged by dangerous practices in operating automobiles that carelessness and deliberate wrong doing on the part of drivers will be overcome." Already the drivers' license law has been the means of revoking nearly 1000 drivers' licenses for drunken driving and over 600 others have been suspended or revoked for other reasons. This is evidence that the law is succeeding. What is needed now for the individual safety of every one is more public cooperation, so clip out this form, carry it with you, fill it in carefully when occasion arises and

HORSE SENSE

Now is the best time to start making plans for next year's garden, while the results of the past season are still fresh in your mind.

Many insects find favorable winter shelter along fence and ditch banks. Thorough burning of such places will destroy many harmful insects.

Mulch strawberries in the fall, after the ground is frozen, with three inches of straw. This tends to prevent winter killing or heaving out of plants and aids in keeping the berries clean.

Raking and burning of all dead leaves will aid in controlling plant diseases among perennials.

"I like to see a man proud of the place in which he lives. I like to see a man live in it so that his place is proud of him."
—Abraham Lincoln.

This is a good time to select breeding ewes for a farm flock good ones can be bought at reasonable prices. Select only those that are active, healthy, and well-grown; that are uniform in size and breeding; that have sound mouths and udders, and that have dense fleeces of good wool.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The $360,000 Necklace

DID Marie Antoinette, queen of France, cajole Cardinal de Rohan to such an extent that she was able to rob him of the famous diamond necklace which formed one of the causes leading up to the French revolution? If not, who was responsible for the scandal which broke with terrific violence over the French court and, finally, what became of the money received for the necklace itself?

These are questions which have excited the curiosity and speculation of hundreds of historians and novelists but which, despite the most rigid investigations, remain still unanswered, inextricably entwined with the sordid but spectacular story of Louis XV, Madame Du Barry, De Rohan, Madame Lamotte, and Marie Antoinette herself.

In 1774 Louis XV was infatuated with Madame Du Barry and, as an evidence of his affection, commissioned the court jewelers to collect the finest diamonds they could lay their hands on and fashion a necklace that would be absolutely unique. The jewelers exercised so much care in the selection of these stones that, before the necklace was completed, the king died. The work was so far advanced, however, that the gorgeous piece was finished at a cost of some $360,000—equivalent at the present time to practically $1,000,000—in the hope that it could be sold to Louis XVI for his queen.

Then suddenly Jeanne de Valoise (Madam Lamotte) came upon the scene and hoodwinked Cardinal de Rohan—arch-enemy to the queen—into believing that she was Marie Antoinette's most intimate friend. Lamotte even signed spurious notes with the queen's name and worked upon the ambition of the cardinal until De Rohan believed that she had succeeded in overcoming Marie Antoinette's hostility toward him.

Finally Lamotte risked a note to the cardinal—a communication which was supposed to have come directly from the queen of France—commissioning him to borrow 60,000 francs for a certain charitable purpose, the money to be transmitted to the queen through Madame Lamotte. The cardinal borrowed the money and turned it over to the intermediary. A second loan of an equal amount was also obtained and with the money the Lamottes furnished one of the most magnificent houses in the capital and financed themselves for a round of ceaseless gaieties.

The success which had attended this scheme evidently led Jeanne Lamotte to believe that she could put through one of the most daring frauds in history—the theft of the almost priceless diamond necklace which had become a white elephant on the hands of the court jewelers. Jeanne therefore insinuated to Cardinal de Rohan that Marie Antoinette wished to purchase the necklace for her own use, but that she particularly desired that the king know nothing of the transaction, adding that if the cardinal would attend to the details of the transaction it would entirely reinstate him in royal favor. De Rohan hastened to fulfill the mission and, on February 1, 1785, the necklace passed into his hands and his note was accepted by the jewelers for the entire purchase price—it being understood (thanks to Lamotte's intrigues) that the transfer was being made with the full approval of the queen.

The necklace was to be delivered to Marie Antoinette by the cardinal on the eve of a grand fete at which the queen was expected to wear it, and the casket containing the jewels was taken to the home of the Lamottes, by whom it was to be handed to the queen's messenger. Still further to dupe the cardinal, Jeanne Lamotte employed an actress to impersonate Marie Antoinette and, because of the heavy veil which the substitute wore, De Rohan believed that he had actually had an interview with the queen herself.

Lamotte then dispatched her husband to London with the necklace, where it was broken up and the stones sold separately. Unfortunately for the plans of the adventuress, however, the trick was discovered when the jewelers wrote to the queen, thanking her for purchasing the diamonds. Marie Antoinette at once demanded an explanation of their statement and then asked for the original copy of the agreement. De Rohan was immediately arrested and sent to the Bastile, to be followed shortly afterward by Madame Lamotte and a number of her accomplices. But this by no means ended the case, because the actions of Marie Antoinette were so strange and her explanations so strained that many historians have expressed the belief that she herself was more or less interested in the matter and that she had profited directly by the sale of the stones abroad. Regardless of this phase of the matter, however, the affair of the queen's necklace remains one of the most absorbing intrigues as well as one of the most mysterious romances of a court noted for its plots and counterplots.

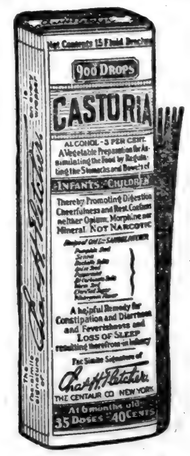
Castoria corrects CHILDREN'S ailments



WHAT a relief and satisfaction it is for mothers to know that there is always Castoria to depend on when babies get fretful and uncomfortable! Whether it's teething, colic or other little upset, Castoria always brings quick comfort; and, with relief from pain, restful sleep.

And when older, fast-growing children get out of sorts and out of condition, you have only to give a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation to right the disturbed condition quickly.

Because Castoria is made expressly for children, it has just the needed mildness of action. Yet you can always depend on it to be effective. It is almost certain to clear up any minor ailment and cannot possibly do the youngest child the slightest harm. So it's the first thing to think of when a child has a coated tongue, is fretful and out of sorts. Be sure to get the genuine; with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the package.

Pines to Be Planted in Reforestation Plan

Open fields at Camp Lee, near Petersburg, Va., where thousands of men received their training during the World war, will be covered within the next year with between 35,000 and 50,000 yearling "lob-lolly" pines as a part of a reforestation program set by H. M. Sears, supervisor of Natural Bridge national forest, of which Lee military forest is a unit. The pine seedlings have been set out in nursery beds in the forest, and work of replanting them will probably be started next spring. This type of pine is particularly noted for its rapid growth and ability completely to reforest denuded areas in five or ten years. It is also capable of being used for saw or pulp wood purposes within from 40 to 45 years.

Will was only slightly aware of her weeping. He seemed to have entered into a new and stimulating plane of existence. He had passed out of the role of adorer and slave for Ernestine, he thought, with some indefinable vexation at her in his heart. He felt himself a man grown now, and full of sap. A wife was only one part of the complex and fascinating business of living.

He was late at the office in the morning, as they had overslept. There was something heavy against the door, so that he could scarcely open it, and, on entering, he almost fell over the lifeless form of John Poole.

He had come back to the office after his birthday party, and had been at work. The light still shone over his drawing board. He had died here, alone, and Will, even in that first shock, was full of the knowledge that his death had come, not alone in the night but with the loss of his gift.

Yet on the drawing board was a picture—his last. It was different from his other work. It was a bend in the stream with a great tree overhanging the water and the meadow beyond and the figures of half a dozen small boys naked and white in the sunshine, playing about the tree and on a springboard caught beneath a great root. There was in it no mockery, no satire, no clowning. It was simple, kind. Staring at it, before he went to give the alarm, Will felt sure that this work of the skilled pencil was the externalization after half a century of some remembered scene of his boyhood.

Will grieved honestly for John Poole and thought often and mysteriously about that last picture. If John Poole could draw like that, why had he never done so? The answer to this was disturbing.

Will established his rights to Poole's cartoon ideas only to find them worthless. Contracts ran out, strips piled up unused, and he found himself working against a vast indifference, more crushing, more impenetrable than that which he had fought for a place for Poole's strip. But his new inner activity carried with it such personal joy that he could not be sufficiently chagrined by the collapse of his business enterprise and the danger to his income.

CHAPTER XI

The Rift in the Lute

"I think you'd better go to Pastano's, don't you, Ernestine?" Will asked one night in June. The children sat at the supper table with them, and the heat, turning more sultry with dusk, was already stifling.

"It's one way of getting rid of us," said Ernestine, a quality of familiar bitterness in her voice.

Will made no answer for a moment, then he said, with more gentleness than had become his wont, "I think perhaps it'll be a good thing for all of us. It will give me a chance to work out some ideas here in the house alone, and it will be a rest and change for you. Anyhow, kitten, don't you think you could dispense with a little of the heavy irony? If I want you to stay in Chicago it's in the hope that you will die of the heat, and if I want you to go away, it's to rid myself of you. Let's think about only the children."

"Wrong again," said Ernestine, and laughed unhappily.

They were poor again now, and it was so hot. It was necessary for them to go either to Pastano's or to mamma's, and this fact spoiled the prospect of a summer at the lake. She wondered why she was reluctant to leave Will when they rubbed each other so raw!

It was not like it had been, that other hard time, when they were close—heart against heart, sharing every thought and feeling. For now, she was poor, but he was not. She was looking upon the face of poverty that John Poole had depicted for her years ago when she was a careless bride. But Will, either because of longer and closer acquaintance with Lack, or, more probably, because of his own secret happiness, was not dismayed—was, in fact, unfeeling.

All day long, with the front bedroom door shut, he worked in there on drawings which he would not let her see, but which he could not seem to sell. Their difficulties, her fears for the future, did not pierce him. He was intolerably good-natured and happy. Ernestine was filled with a deep despair and vexation with him that he could be so casual.

As she sat, trying to swallow a little of the food she had prepared so carefully, Ernestine saw ahead of her a long vista of the years in which she washed and ironed Will's clothes, tended to his bodily needs, for food, for comfort, for sex, and was for ever outside the circle of his reality, a person whom he saw only to forget when his glance left her. She could bear any hardship, and pain. But to do without love—this she could not bear.

"I really don't see why I shouldn't go to mamma's," she said. "All those silly old quarrels with Loring—what do they amount to? But mamma is going to have guests all summer—and you don't want me to go there."

"I don't care what you do," he said stiffly. "Only I'll never go to Lake Haven again."

"I'll go to Pastano's," she said listlessly. "I'll write tomorrow."

The day came when Pastano's big limousine with the swarthy chauffeur stood at the door for them, to take them to the train. Ernestine was admonishing the children about keeping clean, and Will put his arms about her, so practical and stern in her motherhood.

"Why are you always so sore at me?" he asked, and kissed her averted cheek. "You're so strange, and so difficult. I know it's hard for you, but I'm doing all I can."

"Are you?" she asked, and smiled in a secret annoying way.

Will's temper rose within him. "You think I'm not?"

"Did I say that?"

"Yes—practically—yes, you did. Your tone—"

"Oh, then I must be careful even of my tones?"

He flung his hands up in a gesture of despair, and made no further effort to woo her. After a moment she turned to him with her great tragic eyes.

"You know that I don't care how poor we are. I can do without everything—you know it isn't material things."

But Will had withdrawn his effort at conciliation. He knew that she was talking about his secrecy over his drawings. Well, he could not share with her what was so ephemeral that a stray thought in his own head destroyed it. He couldn't talk about it. All the strong instinct of self-preservation for the gift that was developing within him forbade it utterly. The processes he was trying to put upon paper were nebulous. He was acutely fearful for them. If Ernestine did not like them, they would be destroyed.

"Don't open that suitcase, Peter," said Ernestine, and they went out and got into the car, bags and all.

They met Madame Pastano and her tall, silent, handsome husband, whose expressive eyes glanced at once into Ernestine's with a penetrating look. Will went into the coach with them, kissed them all goodby, and went away.

The children waved to him from the windows, but he did not look back, hastening off through the gate, his very back eager and relieved.

Ernestine leaned back against the cushion and closed her eyes against Madame Pastano's friendly curiosity. Through everything that had happened to them they had been in love, until these last few months. Would she ever have Will again as she had had him once—his tender love, his gentle passion, his strength? Not if she kept on striking and wounding him, common sense told her. But she sighed with helplessness. In the face of her knowledge the starvation at her heart for the old love, the old confidence and affection between herself and Will, she could not control her pride, her desire for revenge. The word brought her up short. Revenge? What had she to revenge? Will had not harmed her. Bewildered, she could not understand by what steps they had come into this impasse. Yet there they were. The condition, however unreal its beginnings, was now real enough. It was beyond her knowledge, or his either, that the rift in the lute had been simultaneous with the awakening to activity in Will of a true creative gift.

CHAPTER XII

The Death Car

"If you came home again your father would make a settlement upon you. He thinks you fear that the money would destroy your marriage. But if you came home, he would do it for you."

"I wouldn't leave Will. I'm still of the same mind that money doesn't solve problems."

"But, Ernestine, think how nice it would be for you to be home again. It isn't as though you were happy. We can see that you aren't. We can all see such a change in you this summer. And another baby! Of course, it's your own affair, but Lillian and your mother would be so delighted. It's impossible for us to be friends with Will. We've tried—"

Ernestine smiled scornfully and glanced at Loring with such disdain that he flushed.

"Never mind," he said, "you don't know how we have tried. You don't know. Will doesn't appreciate you at all. I don't care what you say."

They were lying in the sand on the beach at Langley lake. Mrs. Pastano's gaudy white and green summer house reared its red roof back of them. The water was very shallow at this point so that the children could run in and out of it.

"Oh, Ernestine, if you would come home, we would be so good to you." Loring's voice implored her.

"We?" she asked, turning to look at him. "Is it that you want me back in the family circle or that you want to break up Will's home?"

"I think he is by way of breaking up his own home," he said slowly, weighing his words, moving cautiously against her loyalty to Will. "I understand that he hasn't written to you since you came down here four weeks ago. Maybe he wouldn't be sorry to be free."

Ernestine laughed at this, and he said solemnly:

"At this time such neglect must seem cruel to you."

"I wish," she exclaimed impatiently, "that people were able to ignore my so-called 'delicate condition.' After all, Will has his own problems. Let's not talk about it. Probably he hasn't written because he has no news to write about."

Loring was persistent and presently he took up the matter again from a different point of attack.

"It's wonderful what a little money can do for children. I've noticed Elaine every time I've been down this summer. She's so happy here—by the cool water—"

Ernestine wondered why she listened to him. Certainly the child had responded to the opportunities of the lake shore, the sleeping porch, the cool nights and sunny days. But not even for Elaine would she go back on Will—on her marriage.

If only Will would write to her! Her longing for some word from him was intolerable. She felt that if she did not hear from him she would leave the children behind and go to Chicago. Twice she had made all her arrangements for such a trip, but both times pride had held her back. If anything happened to him, the neighbors would know. She wrote to Mrs. Pryor once a week or so. Will wanted to be alone. He wanted the tie between them to be in abeyance. She could not go after him. Not now.

"Oh, Ernestine, my dear little sister," Loring pleaded with her, seeing her tears, being unable to suppress his feelings. "Why do you keep yourself tied to him, when he has brought you only unhappiness? You have done everything for him—everything. What have you had from your marriage but poverty and child-bearing and distress? He needs to be wakened—he doesn't realize what you have meant to him.

She was listening to him now, for the first time, and her heart trembled under the dark suggestions of his words. If she could hurt Will, as he had hurt her!

Lesson for October 26

SPIRITUAL WEAPONS IN A WORLD WAR

(World's Temperance Lesson)

LESSON TEXT—Galatians 5:13-26.

GOLDEN TEXT—And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Learning Self-Control.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Law in One Word.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Secret of Self-Control.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making Prohibition Effective and Permanent.

The lesson topic is not a happy one. The Scripture text chosen clearly refers to the inner conflict going on in the believer. Having been born of the flesh and of the Spirit (John 3:6), there is an unceasing conflict going on between the two natures (Gal. 5:17). The insurrection springing out of the carnal nature cannot be put down by the Law of Moses. Victory can only be accomplished through the energy of the indwelling Holy Spirit.

The committee has further designated it "a temperance lesson." It has a real bearing on temperance in that it shows the only way to destroy the infernal liquor business; namely, to lead individuals to a personal knowledge and experience of Jesus Christ.

Having in Galatians 3 and 4 shown that the believer is free from the law as a means of justification, Paul makes practical application of this doctrine as follows:

I. Christian Freedom (vv. 13-15).

1. It is not an occasion to the "flesh" (v. 13).

Liberty is not license. The notion that when one is free from the law he is free from constraint, is wickedly erroneous. License of the flesh means not merely the indulgence of the flesh in actual material sins, but in the expression of a self-centered life (v. 15).

2. By love serving one another (v. 13).

Freedom from the Mosaic law means slavery to the law of love. Love thus becomes the fulfillment of the law—"Love thy neighbor as thyself" (v. 14).

II. Walking in the Spirit (vv. 16-18).

Walking in the Spirit results in:

1. Loving service to others.

2. Victory over the flesh (vv. 16, 17).

By the "flesh" is meant the corrupt nature of man expressing itself in the realm of sense and self.

III. The Works of the Flesh (vv. 19-21).

By works of the flesh is meant the operation of the carnal nature. The one who chooses to live according to the impulses and desires of his natural heart will be practicing the following sins:

1. Sensuality (v. 19).

The sins enumerated here, practiced in the sphere of the body, are:

(1) Fornication. Fornication includes all sexual sins in married and unmarried life.

(2) Uncleanness. This includes all sensual sins, open or secret, in thought or deed.

(3) Lasciviousness. This means the wanton, reckless indulgences in the shameful practices of the flesh.

2. Irreligion (v. 20).

These acts take place in the realm of the spirit and are:

(1) Idolatry.

(2) Witchcraft or sorcery. This means all dealing with the occult, such as magical arts and spiritism.

3. Sins of temper (vv. 20, 21).

These take place in the sphere of the mind and are:

(1) Hatred. (2) Variance, which means strife and contention. (3) Emulations; jealousy. (4) Wrath; bursts of passions. (5) Seditions; factions in the state. (6) Heresies; factions in the church. (7) Envyings. (8). Murders.

4. Sins of excess (v. 21).

(1) Drunkenness. This means indulgence in intoxicating liquors.

(2) Revelings, acts of dissipation under the influence of intoxicants.

IV. The Fruit of the Spirit (vv. 22-24).

This indicates action in the realm of life. The product of the Holy Spirit indwelling the believer.

1. Love to God and man.

2. Joy; glad-heartedness because of what God has done.

3. Peace with God and fellowman.

4. Long suffering; taking insult and injury without murmuring.

5. Gentleness; kindness to others.

6. Goodness; doing good to others.

7. Faith; believing God and committing all to him.

8. Meekness; submission to God.

9. Temperance; self-control in all things.

Help Yourself Elevators

Lifts, which run continuously, which are, in fact, a whole series of lifts on an endless band, are in use in Germany. You step in while it moves slowly, and you step out when your floor is reached. No attendant to work it, and the machinery cheap, probably, because motive power is obtained by an arrangement of weights. But a large notice in every lift says you travel in it at your own risk!—London Mail.

INDIGESTION GOES—QUICKLY, PLEASANTLY

When you suffer from heartburn, gas or indigestion, it's usually too much acid in your stomach. The quickest way to stop your trouble is with Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. A spoonful in water neutralizes many times its volume in stomach acids—instantly. The symptoms disappear in five minutes.

Try Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, and you will never allow yourself to suffer from over-acidity again. It is the standard anti-acid with doctors.

Your drugstore has Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, with directions for use, in generous 25c and 50c bottles.

Population of World

A memorandum published by the League of Nations states that the population of the world increased about 35,000,000 between 1926 and 1928, which is an average increase of about 1 per cent a year. The rate of increase was greatest in South America.

KILLS 103 RATS ON NEBRASKA FARM

A Nebraska farmer killed 103 rats in 12 hours with K-R-O (Kills Rats Only), the product made by a special process of squill, an ingredient highly recommended by the U. S. Government. It is sure death to rats and mice but harmless to dogs, cats, poultry or even baby chicks. K-R-O is today America's most widely used rat and mouse exterminator. For Recorder

OTTO L. WATERMAN

Otto L. Waterman, Democratic Nominee for Recorder of DeKalb County, was born and reared in Franklin Township and has lived most of his life there. The Waterman family have been residents of DeKalb County for almost a century, his great grandfather being one of the first settlers.

Mr. Waterman is a graduate of Waterloo High School and International Business College of Fort Wayne, Indiana. He also took a Commercial Course at Valparaiso.

For three years he operated a grain elevator at Orland, Indiana, and for four years was Order Clerk for the Production Department of the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Company at South Bend, Indiana. He was on a farm in Alberta, Canada for a few years, but, has always remained a loyal United States citizen.

He has never before asked for a public office and if elected Recorder on November 4th, will endeavor to serve the people of DeKalb County to the very best of his ability.

PREPARING FOR THE CHRISTMAS SEAL SALE

Indianapolis, Indiana, October 22. Millions of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals, pronounced to be Indiana's 1931 Health Insurance, were in the mails or proceeding by express today from state headquarters here of the Indiana Tuberculosis Association, which is arranging for distributon of approximately 67,000,000 to ninety-two county tuberculosis associations, one in each of the counties of the state.

The annual sale of the Seals and Health Bonds, from the proceeds of which a further development of the public's struggle to eliminate tuberculosis will be financed next year, will begin Thanksgiving Day and continue until Christmas Day. The National Tuberculosis Association, through which the state and local associations function in each local community, expects to raise approximately $6,000,000 in the nation this winter for the 1931 program of life saving.

This sum will be applied from Maine to California and from Florida to the State of Washington to further the steady educational campaign under which the country's population gradually is learning what to do to prevent and cure tuberculosis. For approximately fifteen years since the organized fight against the plague has been carried on in the Hoosier state the death rate has been declining, it was pointed out here today, until the 1929 vital statistics show that less than one-half of the number who died from the disease in 1915 now succomb to it. Generally speaking the same has been true throughout the country as a whole.

Announcement from state headquarters today, in connection with the distribution of the Seals to the counties urged that "two hundred thousand dollars at least must be contributed by Indiana citizens this December if the state is to continue to keep the 'white plague' death rate going downward. This will mean only 20,000,000 pennies given by 3,000,000 persons—a little less than 7 cents per capita—for health insurance that cannot be duplicated in any other way. Many will feel unable to give, but many others will wish this year to increase their purchases of Seals to some extent, since the fight is a winning one right here among us in Indiana. This is no time to ease up on your purchases of the Christmas Seals. The job is about half done in this state—the death totals annually are a little less than onehalf of what they were in 1915 when the organized effort began in Hoosierdom. The Seal Sale this year will continue to enlarge the network of prevention and cure in Indiana—more adequate sanatoria, providing much needed beds for the isolation and cure of the tuberculosis; more clinics, where the disease can be diagnosed and the patients started toward recovery; more public health nursing; more education in means by which children may ward off the disease; more teaching of the general public how to regulate every-day living so that the ravages of this terrible disease will be cut down by additional hundreds of cases in the next few years. All this will be made possible if Hoosiers buy Christmas Seals this year so that their dollars may go to work in their respective communities in 1931 for better health."

For Judge of the Appellate Court

CHARLES F. REMY of Indianapolis

Judge Remy was born on a Bartholomew County farm; educated in the public schools, Franklin College and University of Michigan Law School; member Legislature 1895; Reporter Supreme Court 1897 to 1905; Modern Woodman; Past Grand Chancellor Knights of Pythias; Baptist Church.

For Treasurer of State

HARRY E. NICHOLS of Madison

Harry E. Nichols of Madison, Jefferson County, an experienced accountant and business man, has had millions of dollars entrusted to his custody with the record of his books never having been out of balance one cent.

He was city clerk of Madison two terms, and later twice elected clerk of the Jefferson Circuit Court by the largest majorities ever given a candidate in that county. He has for years been active in party politics. He is a member of the Presbyterian Church, the Masons, Mystic Shrine, Knights of Pythias and Red Men lodges, and has been active in civic work in southern Indiana.

For Judge of the Appellate Court

ALONZO L. NICHOLS of Winchester

Judge Nichols was born in Randolph County; educated in the public schools and Winchester High School; taught school twelve years; deputy clerk and clerk of Randolph Circuit Court eight years; practiced law at Winchester for many years; member of Christian Church.

FARM BUREAU

The DeKalb County Farm Bureau have just completed the final arrangements for the big county wide meeting that will be held in the Assembly Room of the Court House on Thursday, October 23rd at 8:00 o'clock P. M. Mr. Larry Brandon, Manager of the DeKalb County Co-operative Association, has secured William H. Settle, President of the Indiana Farm Bureau, as the princpal speaker. H. R. Nevins, Manager of the State Farm Mutual Insurance Department will also be on the program.

The meeting will start promptly at 8:00 o'clock with a short business session for the Union and Grant Township farm bureau units. Following this the farm bureau program committee from Keyser Township will present their two act play portraying the necessity for the equalization of the present tax burden. Mr. Brandon has arranged for some special numbers to accompany this play.

Mr. Settle has not been given a definite subject but it is altogether likely that he will discuss the present tax any quality and what automobile insurance means to Farmers. Every DeKalb County Farmer and his wife and family are invited to the meeting Thursday night. We want you to come and see the play and hear Mr. Settle whether you are a farm bureau member or not. Refreshments will be served by special committee.

As our present surveyor, we find that his administration has been one of entire satisfaction over the county, giving his attention to all the projects under his care.

The News recommends him to the voters of our County, and in doing so, we feel that it would be only just for his successful term, to re-elect Charles to the office of Surveyor of DeKalb County.

HOME BUREAU

The Home Bureau of Concord Township entertained the families Thursday evening, October 16, at the gymnasium.

At six o'clock dinner was served in the domestic science room. The menu consisted of chicken, mashed potatoes, baked apples, pickles, fruit salad, cake, pumpkin pie, sandwiches and coffee. One hundred and thirty members and guests were served. After the dinner they all assembled in the auditorium of the gym. The meeting was called to order by the chairman of the commttee, Mr. Ern Johnson.

The program of the evening was in charge of the men. Committee: Ern Johnson, Joe Foltz, Ed Storer, Frank Cuire, Elza Kinsey, O. K. Shull, Ora Baker and Elza Fetters.

First on the program was the men's chorus, which was enjoyed very much by all. Followed with a reading by Earl William Kinsey; select reading by O. K. Shull; two musical readings by Thelma Curie and Inez Kinsey, accompanied by Mrs. Lora Leighty; solo by Joe Woodcox, after which Mr. Ira Bone gave a clog dance which was appreciated by all.

Miss Thelma Curie then gave an alphabetical reading which created much merriment. Followed with a paper "The Spice of Life," which contained much wit and humor, she closed her paper with a reading "Back to the Farm." This was followed with the men's chorus in which they bid the ladies good night. Each number was well given and enjoyed by all.

The president, Mrs. Borthwick, then took charge of the meeting and at this time a rising vote of thanks and the Chautauqua salute was given the men for the splendid program they had prepared for the evening.

At an early hour we all returned to our respective homes knowing that it is well for us to mingle together in the social functions of our community. May we all live to enjoy many more annual guest meetings of the Home Bureau.

JOSEPH R. SECHLER SUCCUMBS TO HEART TROUBLE

Joseph R. Sechler, son of Rudolph and Hannah Sechler, was born September 14, 1854, in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana. He passed from this life October 26, 1930 at the age of 76 years, 1 month and 12 days.

He is survived by Mrs. Amelia Benninghoff, sister, of St. Joe.

The funeral services were held from the home of the sister, Mrs. Benninghoff, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. G. D. Stoll, officiating, burial at Newville.

His illness was of short duration, only a week. He was taken to the Merrit Sechler home on Thursday, and realizing his condition, made some of his arrangements for the settling up of his estate, with the appointment of Merritt Sechler as his administrator.

The bereaved ones acknowledge the tokens and deeds of sympathy with heart felt thanks.

ANNOUNCES MARRIAGE SATURDAY

Miss Harriett Wasson—teacher of grades three and four in the Concord Township School, announced last Saturday to her many friends, her marriage to Miles Oberlin, of Butler, which took place last July at Angola.

Mrs. Oberlin will continue to teach here. Her many friends here extend best wishes.

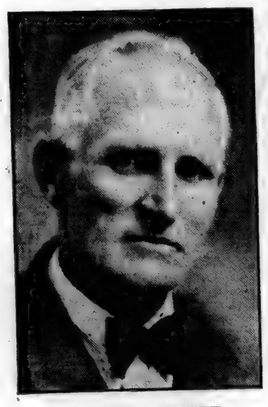
For Auditor



PERRY A. FOOTE

Perry A. Foote, candidate for County Auditor from Richland Township, was reared on the farm which he now owns and operates.

After graduating from the common schools of his township he attended college. Taught school for more than twenty years. Finished a course in Bookkeeping and Commercial Law at the Tri-State Normal.

He served as trustee of his township for a period of eight years. He was appointed Highway Superintendent of the county roads and served for two years in that capacity.

He is at present treasurer of the DeKalb Mutual Fire Insurance Company which position he has held for a number of years.

In civic, church, and fraternal affairs he is actively engaged.

If elected to the office for which he aspires he will honestly, courteously, and faithfully perform his official duties. 43t2.

AN ITEM OF PARTICULAR LOCAL INTEREST

There is a young man, a member of the DeKalb county bar who is rapidly forging to the front because of his honesty and fearlessness.

He is held in high repute and with the great respect by his associates in law practice and by a large circle of friends in DeKalb county, not only as a clean cut, honorable citizen who is making his own way; but because, standing on a record of unusual ability, he has proven worthy of that most important office which he holds—and for which he again aspires—prosecuting attorney.

The name of this young man is Richard W. Sharpless.

Mr. Sharpless is 27 years of age—the age of unbounded enthusiasm and ambition in which he is working hard to master the technique of the law and at the same time discharge the responsibilities of his office. In the two years that he has been prosecutor Mr. Sharpless has been fair, square and unflinching in the administration of the office of prosecuting attorney. He has gained the respect and the confidence of his associates.

Mr. Sharpless is identified with every forward movement in his community and is active in many organizations which tend for the upbuilding and progress of community interests.

He was born July 26, 1903, in Garrett. He attended the Garrett public schools, Wabash college in pre-law work and Indiana University Law school. He was admitted to the DeKalb county bar in 1926 and was admitted to practice before the Supreme court the same year.

Mr. Sharpless was county attorney in 1927, elected prosecuting attorney in 1928 and was admitted to practice in the Federal court in 1930.

In coming again before the voters as a candidate for prosecuting attorney on the Democratic ticket, Mr. Sharpless stands on his record as a pubilc official and private citizen.

If elected he will discharge the responsibilities of his office with the same conscientious effort which characterized his performance of duty the last two years. He will strve the people with the best he has in him and no one will regret giving him the support to which he is entitled.

A vote for Mr. Sharpless is a vote for the upholding of good government, the honest discharge of official duty and a realization that the confidence of the voters will not be betrayed.

Vote for Richard Sharpless on November 4th.

VETERAN PASSES AWAY AT HIS BUTLER HOME

Elijah Inhofe, 83, veteran of the Civil War, died Monday evening at his Butler home, after an illness of three weeks, having suffered a stroke of paralysis.

Beides the widow, he leaves two daughters, Mrs. S. W. Armstrong and Mrs. Sam Wyatt of St. Joe and a son at Butler.

Arrangements for the burial have been made for Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the Newville U. B. Church, where he had been a member for many years before going to Butler. Rev. B. F. Parker of Butler will officiate.

TO CONCORD TWP. VOTERS

Your support at the election Tuesday, November 4, for trustee, Democratic ticket, will be greatly appreciated. Ralph Sechler. 43t2.

CLOSING OF THE FALL CAMPAIGN

The Democrats closed their campaign in this section of DeKalb county Monday evening with a public meeting held at the community gymnasium, with a fair crowd despite the downfall of rain. W. W. Sharpless of Garrett acting as the chairman, introduced attorney Parish of Fort Wayne, who made the campaign address of the evening. Fred L. Feick of Garrett also made a talk and Ed Kelham, Jr., of near Garrett, made a talk on the tariff.

The Republicans shot their last cannon here on Wednesday evening, this week, with Congressman Hogg and Judge D. Burns Douglas of Fort Wayne as the headliners.

The only thing left now for the voters to do is to vote next Tuesday.

COUNTY MINISTERS TO MEET AT ST. JOE

Much enthuisasm evinced at the meeting of the County Ministerial held Monday evening in the United Brethren Church at Waterloo. A different type of meeting is held this year which consists of a discussion period conducted by one of the clergymen, a pot-luck supper for the families of the ministers, and in the evening a mass meeting for the community. In order that the entire county may be reached, each month the meetings are held at different places. Next month the meeting will be held on November 24 in St. Mark's Lutheran Church of St. Joe. The Rev. W. M. Hollopeter of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Ashley will deliver the sermon in the evening.

The Discussion period on "Church Publicity" will be conducted by the Rev. Hubert F. Craven of Auburn.

This is the only meeting of the association which will be held in this section of the county this year.

Rev. Mayfield of the M. P. Church of St. Joe will deliver the sermon at the meeting in Auburn on March 28, 1931.

SOME TURNIP

There is no question but what Mr. Ed Lindley of east of St. Joe has a perfect right to claim the honor of having raised the largest turnip of the season. Its on display in The News window, and it tips the scales at 5 pounds, strong. The editor is going to have it for dinner soon, and we are saying now that its good. Mr. Lindley is a great hand at trucking and he knows just how to raise vegetables.

AUBURN LADY DIES

Mrs. Philip Riggs, of Auburn, died Monday morning at the Souder's hospital, following an operation for strangulated hernia. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon. Besides her husband she leaves two children, Mrs. Henry Keesler and LeRoy, both of Auburn.

For County Auditor

I am a candidate for Auditor on the Democratic Ticket. I am a farmer and at présent trustee of Wilmington Township. I have lived my entire life in DeKalb County.

It will be impossibe for me to see all the voters personally, but I solicit your support and assure an honest and efficient manner.

If elected I will strive to the best of my ability to serve you in you it will be greatly appreciated. 44t1p. Frank E. Lyon.

FOR Prosecuting Attorney

RUSSEL R. RIDENOUR

The Republican candidate for prosecuting attorney for DeKalb county circuit court in the person of Russel R. Ridenour of Auburn, is seeking the support of the voters at the November election on the ground of his efficiency as an attorney, capable to perform the duties as prosecuting attorney.

Mr. Ridenour is well known in DeKalb county, having served two terms in the state legislature. He is an ex-service man, and when the call for volunteers came he enlisted and went over seas, returning with a rank of lieutenant. Willing to give up his business at the time of his enlistment, he gave the best part of his life for the service of his country. On his return he located in DeKalb county and began the practice of law and since that time has been a member of the DeKalb county bar. Mr. Ridenour is an ardent Republican and solicits the support of all the voters of the county.

TO CONCORD TWP. VOTERS

Your support at the election November 4th for Assessor of Concord Township, Republican ticket, will be appreciated. 44t1p. A. W. Trostel.

ROSCOE CONINE FOR SHERIFF

ROSCOE CONINE

Newville Township takes pride this year in presenting to the voters of DeKalb County the name of Roscoe Conine as Republican candidate for sheriff.

Mr. Conine is a well known farmer and stock buyer in the east section of the county and is endeavorng to see as many voters as possible before election day. He has never held public office except one term as township assessor but is qualifid in every way for the County office which he now seeks. He promises efficiency and courtesy in the performance of the duties of sheriff if the voters elect him on November 4.

TO CONCORD TWP. VOTERS

This is to announce my candidacy for Assessor of Concord Township, on the Democratic ticket, and the support of the voters on November 4th will be greatly appreciated. 43t2. S. A. MUMAW

CHICKEN SUPPER

The ladies of the Lutheran Church will serve a Chicken Supper on election night from 5 to 7 in the church basement. You are invited. Price 35 cents. 44t1.

ITEMS OF LOCAL INTEREST—

If experience counts vote for John P. Hoff for Sheriff.

My record of honesty and efficiency in office speaks for itself. John P. Hoff for Sheriff.

A vote for Dave Hogg is a vote for restricted immigration and a vote to upbuild America. 43t2

Black and White Velvet Costumes Featured for Evening and Afternoon Wear

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Fashion is decidedly in a black-and-white mood. Every passing moment marks an increasing enthusiasm for this striking combination.

The latest gesture of style leaders is to express the black-and-white vogue in terms of velvet. For evening it is done in some such way as lovely black velvet touched with white bead work or garnitured with trimmings of real lace or enriched with novel details of snowy ermine. That which is very new is the wearing of white, especially carved ivory jewelry with queenly gowns of shimmering sheer black velvet, the classic lines of which are of utmost distinction.

However, the lure of velvet as expressed in black-and-white does not end with the evening mode. In fact the moments of its triumph-supreme are recorded at afternoon bridge party or at five o'clock tea or at any of the smart daytime affairs which crowd the autumn social calendar.

This model is one of the swankiest of late importations. It is a striking example of how completely and how effectively an afternoon costume can go black-and-white this season. It is made of a thin-as-chiffon black transparent velvet which is striped. It is most designfully worked with its own stripes. Black and white buttons are its one item of trimming. By the way, this is a "button season," most everything has buttons on it if there is any possible excuse of putting them there.

The belt which does its part in giving this dress "class" is fastened with an onyx and brilliant buckle. The beret is of black transparent velvet, the shoes of black suede.

There are as many types of costumes this season as there are types of women, and the velvet suit is one of them. In their eagerness to play up black-and-white the style-minded are ordering the blouse of sheer white velvet to wear with the jacket and skirt of black velvet. This they top with a beret of the white velvet.

Recommend Apple Compote for Halloween Dinner.

Here's a recipe from the bureau of home economics which you might like to try for a Halloween dinner, as it's gay and seasonable.

6 tart apples
2 cups sugar
2 cups water
Red coloring or red cinnamon candies
⅛ tsp. salt

Select tart apples that will hold their shape when cooked, pare, and core them. In a pan large enough to hold all the apples make a sirup of the sugar and water, add the red coloring or red candies, and salt; put in the apples, cover, and simmer until the apples are tender when pierced with a straw. Drain, and place at once on plates for serving, fill the centers with tart jelly, and on top add a spoonful of hard sauce, grated coconut, or chopped nuts. Or the apples may be served cold with whipped cream.

The sirup may be used in fruit drinks, or more added to it and another lot of apples cooked in it.

Broiled Tomatoes

Wash tomatoes, remove the stem ends, cut in half, put in a greased shallow baking dish, add salt, pepper, and melted butter or other fat to season, and place under the flame of a broiling oven, far enough from the heat to allow the tomatoes to cook before browning. Broil for 20 to 30 minutes, or until tender and lightly browned. Serve hot garnished with parsley on crisp buttered toast.

Meat Croquettes Are Economical; Help Use Up Leftovers

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Meat croquettes are not hard to make, for they are best mixed and rolled in crumbs several hours earlier. They are economical in the home for the same reason they are economical in a restaurant—they help use up left-over cooked meat that is not shapely to serve as cold cuts or in other ways.

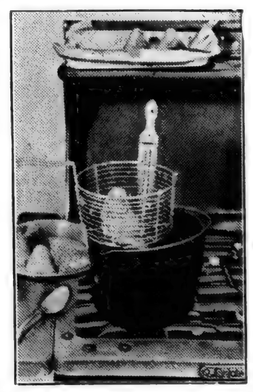
Some important points about making croquettes successfully are noted by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, which gives the recipe below. Mold the croquettes long enough in advance for the egg coating to set. Fry them in plenty of mild-flavored fat, using a kettle with a basket. Heat the fat to just the right temperature—350 degrees Fahrenheit—and do not let it smoke. Fry only two or three croquettes at a time, and watch them constantly. As soon as they are brown remove them from the fat, and drain them on absorbent paper so they will not be greasy. Keep them hot in a slightly warmed oven until all the croquettes are fried.

The following recipe is for beef croquettes, made from leftovers, but any cooked lean meat or chicken may be used:

Beef Croquettes.

2 cups ground lean cooked beef
1 cup mashed potato
2 tbs. gravy or stock
1 tbs. onion juice
1 tbs. chopped parsley
1 tbs. butter
Tabasco sauce, as desired
Salt
Pepper
Dry grated sifted bread crumbs
1 egg beaten up with 1 tbs. water
Fat for deep frying

Cook the parsley in the butter, and mix with the meat, potato, gravy, and other seasonings thoroughly. Mold into croquette shapes. Dip into the egg mixture, roll in the bread crumbs, and let stand an hour or longer to dry the coating. Heat the fat in a deep vessel to 350 degrees Fahrenheit, or until a cube of bread browns in 40 seconds. Place two or three croquettes at a time in a frying basket and lower slowly into the hot fat for two minutes or until they are a golden brown. Remove the croquettes and drain on a sheet of paper. Serve hot with parsley garnish and tomato sauce.



Deep-Fat Frying Kettle for Croquettes.

To make softer croquettes, omit the mashed potato, and either increase the gravy to three-fourths cupful, or use three-fourths cupful of white sauce. To prepare gravy or white sauce thick enough to act as a binder for a croquette mixture, blend three tablespoonfuls flour with one tablespoonful butter, add three-fourths cupful meat stock or milk, and cook in a double boiler, stirring until smooth. Mix the gravy or sauce with the meat and seasonings.

OLDER PEOPLE
Must watch bowels Constantly!

As we grow older the bowels become more sluggish. They don't get rid of all the waste. Some days they do not move at all. So older people need to watch their bowels constantly. Only by doing this can they hope to avoid the many forms of sickness caused by constipation.

When your bowels need help remember a doctor should know what is best for them, and get a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin from your drugstore. Syrup Pepsin is a doctor's prescription for lagging bowels, good for all ages.

No restriction of habits or diet is necessary while taking Syrup Pepsin. Made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other valuable ingredients, it is absolutely safe. It will not gripe, sicken or weaken you.

Take a spoonful next time your tongue is coated, or you have a bad taste in your mouth. It clears up a bilious, headachy, dull, weak, gassy condition every time. When you see how good it tastes and how nice it acts, you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the world's most popular laxative for every member of the family.

SOME TIMELY FOOD SUGGESTIONS AND FAVORITE RECIPES

By NELLIE MAXWELL

In many dishes where cornstarch is used for thickening, tapioca may be substituted. Many object to cornstarch largely because it is not well cooked. Any starchy substance needs cooking to burst the starch cells and make it digestible.

The following is something new and worth trying. Cook one-third of a cupful of quick cooking tapioca with one teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper and two cupfuls of scalded milk in a double boiler until the tapioca is clear. Pour into small deep pan and chill thoroughly. Unmold and cut into one-third inch slices. Fry thinly sliced bacon until crisp. Remove from the pan, dip the tapioca slices in flour and fry until a golden brown. This is served with the bacon.

Cranberry Relish.—Cook one-half cupful of tapioca with one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth cupful of raisins and one quart of cranberry juice and pulp strained and heated, for fifteen minutes in a double boiler or until the tapioca is clear, stirring frequently. Add one cupful of sugar, one-fourth cupful of walnut meats and four oranges peeled and quartered. Chill and serve as a sweet relish with fowl or meat.

Lemon Sauce.—Cook three tablespoonfuls of tapioca in two cupfuls of boiling water in a double boiler until clear, stirring frequently. Add two tablespoonfuls of butter, three-fourths of a cupful of sugar, three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice, two teaspoonfuls of grated lemon rind and eight marshmallows cut into small pieces. Serve poured over cake for pudding.

Cheese Souffle.—Cook three tablespoonfuls of tapioca in one cupful of milk until the tapioca is clear, stirring often. Add one cupful of grated cheese, stir until melted. Cool, add three beaten egg yolks, one teaspoonful of salt and three well beaten egg whites folded in at the last. Bake in a well greased baking dish, set into a pan of water. Bake until the souffle is brown and shrinks a trifle. Serve hot.

Coconut Cream Filling.—Scald two cupfuls of milk, add two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, four tablespoonfuls of flour, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, one tablespoonful of melted butter, three egg yolks, one-half teaspoonful of vanilla and one-fourth teaspoonful of lemon extract. Cook and cool. Cover with a meringue, using the egg whites and three tablespoonfuls of sugar, sprinkle with one-half cupful of grated coconut. Brown.

Fruit Dessert.—Take sliced oranges, using six; add one cupful of shredded dates and one-half cupful of shredded almonds. Arrange in layers, adding a little sugar, if needed, with a pinch of salt for the nuts.

Chicken Croquettes. — Make one cupful of thick white sauce, using chicken stock with milk or cream. Take two cupfuls of minced chicken, one-half teaspoonful each of salt, celery salt and onion salt and one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika. Mix all the ingredients, cool, then form into small croquettes, cone or cylinder shaped. Roll in beaten egg to which two tablespoonfuls of water have been added, then in crumbs and set away to chill. Fry in hot fat and serve with mushroom sauce.

EVENING STORY FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The little toad had been sent to a cousin in the East. The small boy who had sent him had hated to part with him, but his cousin was not very strong and he knew that the toad would be a nice, cheerful companion.

It was a very unselfish thing for him to do after he had tamed his little toad, which was a horned toad, and which was the kind that needed very little in the way of nourishment.

Mr. Horned Toad looked about him after he had arrived.

"It's very simple here," said the little boy, whose name was Dick. "I am afraid you won't like it as well as you did out West.

"We have no oranges growing on our trees—only apples. And our flowers do not grow so high."

Dick was afraid the toad might want to leave him—even after his long journey.

Now, Dick was sitting in a lounging chair in the garden and the toad was hopping about, having a very good time.

Knew He Would Be Loyal.

He was a little bit lonely for his home and his former master, but still all this was very new and exciting!

It did seem nice to have much room after the box and the moving train.

"Oh, I feel so sleepy," said Dick, and before he knew it his eyes were tightly shut and he seemed to see the toad hop upon his hand and then to the arm of his chair.

To toad put his head on one side and then on the other. He rolled his queer looking eyes and gave a low grunt.

"You are the strangest looking little creature I have ever seen," said Dick.

"I do hope you won't leave me. I am so afraid you will, because I know how you have oranges and peaches and all such wonderful things growing all about where you lived.

"It is warmer there, too, and you may like it to be warmer. I imagine a toad might like it out there, for I think perhaps a toad likes the warmth."

He was saying all this because he hoped so much the toad would want to stay, and he wanted him to hear all about it right away so that he would know and not be disappointed later on.

"Tut, tut, tut," grunted the toad. "You really aren't a toad and so you know nothing about it.

"Where I have come from they make a great fuss over us, but we are all thought of alike.

"Here I am a little different, a little odd, I can be considered an object of curiosity.

"I will enjoy it here I am certain.

"Besides, you can talk all day and all night about the goodies that grow on trees. They mean nothing to me. I wouldn't eat them.

"What do I need of such things when I have air. I am a horned toad! I like air. Nothing is finer than that. All the food in the world doesn't compare to the air."

And the toad grunted again.

"Never fear, Dick, I am going to stay here with you. And while you are growing strong I shall be around to amuse you.

"Because you don't feel strong enough to play this summer, I shall be such a funny little pet that you will get well sooner, and you will be able to join the other boys when they start their games in the fall."

Dick's eyes opened, and he knew that he had been dreaming the conversation with the toad.

But the toad was still by him, and from the toad's honest though ugly face, he knew he would be loyal.

And that was just what the little toad companion turned out to be! Loyal and good! Dick was so grateful that he had been sent to him, and the toad liked his new home and his new master so very, very much, too.

Pumpkin Pie Is Favorite for Thanksgiving

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Of all the Thanksgiving dinner desserts pumpkin pie is probably the greatest favorite. Perhaps the bride, trying her hand for the first time at the family holiday gathering, will have more doubts, though, about making the pie than preparing any other item on the menu. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture suggests that she make it the day before, leaving herself free to attend to the turkey and "fixin's," with the comfortable feeling that a good dessert is all ready on the pantry shelf. Let her use whatever recipe for pie crust she has already tried, or get one from her favorite cookbook. The shell should be prebaked, that is, cooked until delicately colored, before the filling given below is put in it. The pie is then cooked in a very moderate oven because of the eggs and milk it contains. When it is done it should be set like a custard. Squash may be used in the same way as pumpkin, but it should be drained of excess liquid.

Filling for Pumpkin or Squash Pie.

1¼ cups cooked pumpkin or squash
1 cup milk
¼ cup sugar
1 tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. allspice
¼ tsp. mace
½ tsp. salt
2 eggs
2 tbs. butter
Pastry

Heat the pumpkin or squash, milk, sugar, spices and salt in a double boiler, add the beaten eggs and butter, and mix well. Pour the hot filling into a baked pastry shell and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) until the filling sets. A spoonful of whipped cream may be served with each portion.

USE OF KITCHEN WALL SPACE SHOULD GET CONSIDERATION

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

One of the tests of convenience in a kitchen is good use of wall space in arranging the various work centers. The "kitchenette" in the modern apartment is the final word in getting all necessary equipment for food preparation into the smallest possible space. The kitchens and serving places on yachts and ships, too, have long been models of efficient compactness. The dining car is another excellent illustration of what may be done with limited, narrow, serving quarters even when meals are provided for a number of people.

Fortunately most of us who live in houses do not need to compress our kitchen workshop into quite such cramped quarters as the average kitchenette, ship's "galley," or dining car pantry. Too large a kitchen means a great deal of walking about in doing the housework, so we are always glad to strike a happy medium with a kitchen floor area ranging from about 94 to 108 square feet. The exact size will usually depend on the shape of the room, the placing of doors and windows, and the wall space required for such large equipment as the stove, sink, kitchen cabinet, and refrigerator.

Sometimes a still smaller area can be made convenient by placing the refrigerator elsewhere and dispensing with a ready-built kitchen cabinet. The picture, which was taken by the United States Department of Agriculture, shows how this was done in a farm home, by means of a built-in cupboard at one end of the kitchen. A jog in the kitchen wall on this side was utilized for shelves fitting the glass jars of dry staple supplies, and for a closet with sections of convenient shape for holding the containers usually put in a cabinet. One of these sections has a sliding panel instead of a hinged door.

Small Area in Kitchen Made Quite Convenient.

An enamel-topped table on casters takes the place of the counter on a kitchen cabinet. Above it are placed racks for the rolling pin and seasonings, and hooks for small utensils that can be hung up.

Of six blacksmith shops remaining in Dodge City, Kan., only two are equipped to shoe horses.

"I Feel Like a New Person"

"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was tired, nervous and run-down. I saw the advertisement and decided to try it because I was hardly able to do my housework. It has helped me in every way. My nerves are better, I have a good appetite, I sleep well and I do not tire so easily. I recommend the Vegetable Compound to other women for it gives me so much strength and makes me feel like a new person."—Mrs. Lena Young, R. # 1, Ellsworth, Maine.

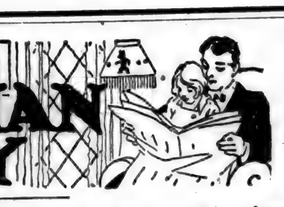
The SANDMAN STORY



OUR THANKSGIVING DAY

"ON THANKSGIVING day nearly everybody has a turkey or chicken dinner, with pumpkin or mince pie, nuts and raisins and many other fine things to eat. I think it would be nice to picture in our minds for a moment or two the people who made Thanksgiving, really and truly made it," said the Sandman.

"Of course Thanksgiving is just a word meaning to give thanks, but when we speak of Thanksgiving we are almost always speaking of a day—the last Thursday in November, as it always is now.

"And this Thanksgiving of ours was indeed made by those people many, many years ago, whom we are proud to call our ancestors.

"Here They Were Going to Have Freedom."

"In 1620, as we all know, 'a little band of Pilgrims' came to this country—brave, fearless souls, who had already met with difficulties and were not afraid to face more.

"They had already tried to cross the Atlantic, but their ships had leaked and they had had to go back.

"But they would have nothing to do with a word such as failure and this is, I think, in itself an inspiration to all of us when we feel discouraged and as though we were failing in what we are trying to do—and so at last the Mayflower left Plymouth, in Devonshire, England, and anchored on the American coast November 21.

"Here they were going to have freedom and, though the trip had been a terrible one, and though there were only a hundred of them, all told, to keep up each other's spirits, they did not lose heart.

"They had planned to land on the New Jersey coast, but, driven as they had been by gales and storms, they found themselves on the northern shore of Cape Cod, New England.

"Finally they chose Plymouth as their colony. Then came a terrible winter, when over half of their number died, but in the spring those who had lived through the winter still would not use the word failure—and decided to stay.

"And then, at last, came harvest time, and hope and great thankfulness was in the hearts of these people.

"So that in the autumn of 1621 they set aside a day in which they gave 'solemn thanksgiving to the glorious Hearer of Prayers!'

"The first national celebration of Thanksgiving was in 1789, when George Washington set Thursday, November 26, of that year as a day to be observed in which to give thanks for the blessings of the year.

"It was Abraham Lincoln who recommended that the last Thursday in November should be observed as a day of Thanksgiving. And ever since then it has been observed each year all over the country, and not from time to time in different states, according to whether their governors proclaimed it as such. Formerly that had been the custom.

"So it was Lincoln who gave us this day as a national holiday and day of Thanksgiving for every year.

"But it was because of that little group of people so many years ago that we have so much for which to be thankful.

"Sometimes it is hard to think that such terrible days followed one after the other, for the country is so big and prosperous and cultivated now.

"But everything has to be begun! And it seems to me that our present-day joyous Thanksgivings are just what those people, so full of pluck, would have wanted us to have.

"For people who could be so brave and who could endure so much for what they believed was right, could not help but have hearts full of love and joyous strength capable of great happiness."

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

PESSIMISM

IT IS impossible for any person to live an isolated life. We cannot dissociate ourselves from our environment. Whether we desire it or not, our daily surroundings play no small part in influencing our impulses and attitude toward life.

It is very interesting to witness how a group of people almost unconsciously surrender themselves to the influence of a single dominating personality; whose attitude toward any given subject under discussion is reflected in the conversation of the group. This group of persons in turn influence other people in smaller or larger groups, so that, as a poisoned germ which enters the body may play havoc, so a vicious mental attitude, artificially created, is capable of doing a great deal of harm.

L. A. Barrett.

Doubtless this is true regarding the prevailing pessimism of our day. The most-talked-of subject in small as well as large groups of persons is the depression in business, hard times, the desperate depression ahead of us this coming winter. The subject of unemployment has consumed days of useless talk. Everywhere one meets groups of persons who can see nothing but economic depression and hard times for a long time to come. Of course, there is unemployment, but it is not so large as we are taught to believe. Many persons will not work, because they refuse to do anything except the work they prefer. Others refuse to work except for a definite and fixed wage. It must also be remembered that this is the time of the year for a certain amount of seasonal unemployment. Of course, business is sluggish, but not so much so as at other depressed periods in the business cycles.

Some one wrote: "A watched pot never boils, and it is possible to spend so much time taking the pulse of the patient that we overlook the medicine that will bring recovery." What is needed is a turn about face, a straight, unbiased and candid facing of the facts, which will doubtless convince the unprejudiced inquirer that conditions are not as dark as they are pictured, and that action and not talk will usher in a more hopeful sentiment.

Modern Life Compels Virtue of Punctuality

Human beings, we suspect, are almost without exception tardy. The man who is always on time for his social engagements is regarded as a sort of freak by his friends; indeed, he is regarded as somewhat objectionable, for by his punctuality he makes them feel guilty when they arrive 20, 30 or 40 minutes late. As for the man who is on time for business engagements, he probably does not exist. There are a score or more time-clock companies listed in New York; all of them seem to be prosperous, and their wares are not bought, we may be sure, by companies whose employees are on time every morning to the minute. Left to their own devices, these employees would get to work anywhere from one minute to eight hours late.

Yet when you consider the human race in the aggregate as distinguished from human beings in the particular it is as punctual as an eclipse. It is more punctual than an eclipse, for if an eclipse were ten minutes late that would cause no particular surprise; but if the rush hour crowd at a restaurant were ten minutes late the manager would be out on the street running around to see where the parade was. Crowds can be predicted almost to the minute. Part of this, perhaps, is due to such compulsions as we spoke of above; time clocks, the necessity to eat lunch at a given hour and in a given length of time, and so on. But part of it is not. The big movie theaters run continuous shows, so that there is no special reason to get to them on time. If you miss the first part when you go in, you can always wait and see it before you go out. Yet the queues in front of these theaters always seem to reach their maximum length at about the same time; even here you could set your watch by the crowd. Inside, however, sitting about the foyer, you see many fidgety persons looking at their watches; they are waiting for somebody, and that somebody is late.—New York World.

Unharmed by Long Fall

Reversing the case of Humpty Dumpty, a Stockholm roofer recently fell seven stories to the street without causing himself more damage than a broken tooth. The workman, Tore Fredelin, was nailing plates on the edge of a mansard roof, when the plank he stood on gave way and he tumbled to earth. He said later that he remembered striking many beams before he reached the ground, but he remained conscious throughout. Passersby who had watched him fall could hardly believe their eyes when they saw Fredelin unconcernedly pick himself up and brush off his clothes.

In a quarrel, never say anything sarcastic to a friend you expect to make up with.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

MAY AND JUNE MARRIAGES

THE idea that it is unlucky to be married in May is not so prevalent as it was formerly, but the superstition still lingers. We get it from the Romans. Ovid mentions it as being a vulgar superstition in his day. The Romans apparently got it from the Greeks and brought it with them to Britain, whence we inherit it. It shows how a train of superstitious thought once set going will persist through the ages.

The curious thing about this superstition is that it should ever have originated; for the month of May in ancient times was dedicated to the goddess Maia, the mother of Mercury and the goddess of growth and increase.

The popularity of June as a month for marriage is likewise inherited from the Greeks and Romans for Juno, to whom the month was dedicated, as the especial patroness of marriage. Perhaps the discrimination between May and June had its origin in the fact that while Juno was the lawful wife of Jupiter Maia was only Jupiter's "affinity."

Your Home and You

DAILY SWEEPING

NO ONE has ever devised a method by which the housewife might be spared the daily task of sweeping up crumbs and dust from the living rooms of her house if she wishes it to remain attractive. The weekly sweeping is not enough. Sometimes the dining room rug or carpet needs brushing after each meal. The old-time method of strewing the rooms with rushes so that whatever dropped from the table filtered through the rushes to remain beneath until the rushes were cleared out may have had time-saving advantages, but surely not advantages of a hygienic sort.

Some housewives take a dustpan and small brush broom and bend down to do this daily brushing, as less dust is raised this way than with a broom. Better still, if they possess a long handled dustpan so that it is not necessary to stoop over to use it.

The carpet sweeper is of much value in this case, providing you take time to care for the carpet sweeper. It is certainly unhygienic to leave dust and dirt from your floors indefinitely in the brushes and pan of the carpet sweeper. Moreover, unless the carpet sweeper is cleaned out often it ceases to be an efficient sweeper.

You can buy toy carpet sweepers that prove very useful for brushing up crumbs about your dining table and about the tea table in your living room. Some housewives even have these tiny sweepers, for they cost very little. Then it is possible to use them without taking many steps.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"NOT TO LET ONE'S LEFT HAND KNOW WHAT ONE'S RIGHT HAND DOES"

"HIS right hand does not know what his left hand is doing."

For the past 2,000 years this phrase has been regularly used as a reference to a man who acts secretly, who keeps his movements and his thoughts so in the background that no one, not even his most intimate friends, know of them.

Originally this phrase was an allusion to secret charities. Even today it is still frequently used with this connotation.

Probably the earliest recorded use of the line appears in the book of Matthew, 7:3.

In radio speech Monday night, John J. Rascob, Democratic National Chairman said, quite everything has been thoroughly deflated, and business is now turning upward. The momentum is slow at first but within three months with the impetus, the automobile industry is sure to provide a change and starting with the January shows we will quickly leave depression behind and all will be singing "Happy days are here again."

This speech surely kills all the arguments put forth in Democratic speeches in Indiana and shows that the Indiana orators are looking through dark colored glasses instead of national glasses.

This is rather a rare admission at this stage of campaign, but we will have to give John credit with at least being honest.

Prosperity vs Depression

Prosperity is up for election, running to overthrow depression.

It's for the people to decide which will be chosen. Every man and every woman is privileged to ballot–every day.

Depression has no rightful place with a hundred and twenty million people, exchanging goods and services–capable–accustomed and willing to work–more highly skilled than other peoples–leaders in efficiency and progressiveness–backed by the vast natural resources of the United States. When we make it possible for the man who works to have a job we make it possible for him to buy food for his family and so help all business, including that of the farmer.

The rest of the world is of small importance compared with that free market of 120,000,000 people–homogeneous– of like tastes, habits and aspirations–living under the same laws–free of trade barriers. Foreign trade may be troubled by tariffs and revolutions, but at their peak our exports represented only five and a half billions of dollars of gross business in a year out of a total American income if ninety billion.

Stagnation of circulation is what's the matter with agriculture and with Business. Everyone can help to get that circulation moving again.

Government can't make Prosperity–alone. Bankers and other business leaders can't make Prosperity–alone. It's the people, united in opinion and purpose and courage, who determine Prosperity. They can elect it–none other.

Ballots that will be validly counted for PROSPERITY are of many kinds. Some one of them every man and woman can cast. For exaple:

Help a deserving man or a woman to get a little paying work–or, better, a regular job.

Spend wisely and not too timidly, and anticipate scheduled expenditures so far as is practicable.

Turn the deaf ear to false, mischievous rumors; and don't repeat them, if you do hear them.

Be willing to pay a fair price. Don't take advantage of the other man's necessity. Recognize that he has as good claim to a fair profit as you.

When a vampire that fattens on the miseries of others shows up, help to make him unpopular.

Discourage calamity howlers.

Keep business moving evenly, and remember that, to the average man, his job is his partiular business. When possible, reassure him against his fear of losing it.

Save, but save wisely, not in fright. Invest for the profit that sound enterprise pays and for the added profit that will come after the hysteria of pessimism has passed.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:

In the Commissioners Court,
DeKalb County, Indiana.

In the Matter of the Wm. Staman et al Road in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana.

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Commissioners of DeKalb County, Indiana, will up to the hour of 10:00 A. M., on the 5th day of November, 1930, at the commissioners court room in the court house of the city of Auburn, receive sealed proposals for the improvement of a highway in said county, which said improvement is known as and designated as the William et al Road in Concord Township, which said improvement is petitioned for by William Staman et al, and will consist of grading, draining and graveling of said road as set out in plans, specifications and profiles now on file in the Auditor's office of said county.

Said proposals received will be for all materials used, all labor performed and for the full completion of the said improvement in accordance with the report of the Engineer and Viewers, and the said plans and specifications and profiles aforesaid.

That the estimated cost of the said improvement is the sum of $12,780.00.

That the length of said highway to be improved is about three miles and is described as follows: beginning at a point where the center line of the Auburn–Newville improved gravel road intersects the section line running north and south between Sections one (1) and two (2,) Township thirty-three (33) north, Range fourteen (14) east, in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, and running from there south to the intersection of the Center line running east and west between Concord and Spencer Townships, in DeKalb County, Indiana, and there terminates the said highway being outside the limits of any city, and outside the limits of any incorporated town.

Each bidder must submit with his proposal, a bond with sufficient surety, payable to the State of Indana, in a penal sum double the amount of his proposal, conditioned for the faithful performance of the work on which he bids. If personal surety is given, they shall be residents and free holders of the State of Indiana. Each bidder must submit with his proposal an affidivat to the effect that he has not entered into any combination, collusion or agreement with any person relative to the price to be bid by any one; that he has done nothing to prevent any one from bidding; that his bid is made without reference to any other person.

Said improvement will be let as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder duly qualifying as such.

The Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

The work shall be completed within a time to be fixed by an agreement between the Board of County Commissioners, and the successful bidder.

Witness my hand and seal this 10th day of October, 1930.

CHAS. E. MISER for County Assessor

CHARLES E. MISER

In coming before the voters of DeKalb County for re-election, Charles E. Miser, Republican candidate for County Assessor, stands upon a record of four years' of service without equal in the county.

The record of Mr. Miser's efforts to equalize the assessments on taxables is plain and cannot be questioned. DeKalb county stands out as one of three counties in Northern Indiana which gained in valuation over last year.

There is perhaps no other county official that is more popular with the taxpayers than Mr. Miser. His pains taking attitude to the interest of the taxpayers has made him many friends. Because of his interest in the fairness to all and in making assessments as nearly equal as possible, his fitness for the office has been well demontrated.

Because of the unimpeachable service which Mr. Miser has given he rightly deserves the support of the voter of DeKalb County at the coming election. No mistake will be made in continuing him in his present position.

FAVORS TAX REDUCTION

Howard S. Grimm, Republican Candidate for Representative Issues a Statement to Voters on Taxation

WOULD DIVIDE THE GAS TAX

And Reduce the Tax Levy in DeKalb County 10 Cents on the $100 Valuation, Benefitting the Farmers in Lowering the Taxes

Howard S. Grimm, the Republican candidate for state representative for DeKalb county, has issued a statement to the voters of DeKalb County on his stand on taxation, favoring the reduction of at least ten cents on the present tax levy in DeKalb County.

Mr. Grimm proposes to divide the gasoline tax between the state and county highway departments equally, and by so doing shows that the county road repair levy could be reduced from 14 cents to at least 4 cents. This would make a nice reduction in the taxes that are paid by farmers. Mr. Grimm believes that the roads should be paid by the people who use them.

His statement is as follows:

It is right to know something about your candidate for State Representative and his views and policies on certain problems that are of vital interest to the taxpayers of the county and state. I believe in a more equitable tax law that would make taxation less burdensome to the people of the state and especially the farmers.

At the present time DeKalb County taxpayers are paying into the county gravel road fund the sum of $64,565.07 annually. In addition to this the county receives the sum of $32,252.29 as its share of the gasoline tax paid into the state on the basis of the number of miles of improved county highways, making a grand total of nearly $100,000.00.

I favor a law that will go the state a fifty-fifty distribution of the gasoline tax, thereby letting the people who use the roads of our county and state pay for their contruction and maintenance.

Such a law, if passed, would lower the present road levy and at the same time bring to the county the same amount of money for the county gravel road repair fund. To be exact, the county road levy could bereduced from 1 cent on the $100 valuation to only 4 cents on the $100 valuation. This is a saving to the taxpayers that would be beneficial and should be appreciated.

I believe that the taxes should be lowered wherever it is possible to do it. DeKalb County now has 424.75 miles of roads in the county highway system. The automobiles that use these roads should pay for them and not the farmers who till the soil while the motorists from the east and the west, from the north and the south, drive over our roads and get the benefit.

Also there should be some action taxen by the next session of the General Assembly against the use of our highways by overloaded trucks that are carrying immense cargoes of freight across our state.

I favor improved highways and believe that every farmer in the county is entitled to an improved highway in order for them to market their produce. In doing so, the farmer with his automobile or truck, would be paying his share of the cost if a gasoline tax would be equally used for that purpose.

If elected as Representative to the General Assembly I pledge my support to such measures as will insure a reduction in taxes and a more equitable distribution of the gasoline tax money that is being raised for highway purposes.

Under the present law there is a four cent gas tax in Indiana. Of this but one cent goes to the counties, and that is distributed according to the number of miles of improved county roads. Under such a gas tax law the state of Indiana has been able to hard-surface more than 3,100 miles of roads without a single cent of bonded indebtedness. Your county and my county is a part of this great common wealth, and our county is entitled to just as much of the gas tax as any other taxing unit.

If you think this is fair, then vote that way on November 4th. You can be assured that your confidence will not be misplaced.

My Platform:--

Honesty and efficiency in office, suppression of crime, and enforcement of all laws.

FRED D. EBERLY

Waterloo presents a candidate for county treasurer in the person of Fred D. Eberly, who was born and reared in Waterloo, graduating some years ago from the Waterloo High School, trained in business in executive and administrative departments, schooled in salesmanhip, possessed of a very pleasing personality, and thoroughly competent to conduct the important office of county treasurer.

Mr. Eberly has resided in Waterloo his entire life, making a home for his widowed mother. Mrs. Nettie Denison Eberly. He has been continually employed in various lines of business. He was elected a member of the Board of Trustees of Waterloo town in November, 1929 by a vote that demonstrated the high regard in which he was held by his friends at home. This same confidence is held for him as treasurer of DeKalb County. Wherever he is known in the county, he makes friends who boost for him. Mr. Eberly has had enough years of business experience to insure the people that he would make an excellent County Treasurer.

My record of honesty and efficiency in office speaks for itself. John P. Hoff for Sheriff.

The Young Ladies Social Club met at the home of Mrs. Pauline Baumgartner on Friday evening. Those who won prizes were Gaylon Markle, LaVern Koch, Minnie Walker and Troas Carpenter.

The Home Bureau will hold their family night at the school house on Tuesday evening. The program will be in charge of Clyde Hart, Claude Laub and Ora Wilmot. The refreshment committee, Clauda Hafner, Grace Laub and Rilla Markle. Pot luck supper.

CONCORD

If experience counts vote for John P. Hoff for Sheriff.

Mrs. Edd Bassett spent Sunday with her son, Virgil and family.

Quite a few around Concord are shredding corn before it gets bad weather.

The candidates are quite numerous now days. But some one will get left, no telling who.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Webster were Sunday evening guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dell Draggoo.

L. G. Fetters went to Ft. Wayne Sunday and brought his wife home from the hospital. She is improving.

Mrs. John Fetters entertained to Sunday dinner Mr. Elza Jones and Mrs. Rosa Camp of Edon, O., Mrs. Webb and little Wayne and Walter Fetters.

Mr. and Mrs. Ford Jackson had for six o'clock dinner Sunday evening, Mr. and Mrs. Charley Boulton of Auburn and later in the evening the Jacksons' spent a couple of hours in the Virgil Bassett home.

Junior, the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Bassett has been sick for three or four days. Dr. Shook made an examination and found a bad liver condition. The little fellow was better Monday and is still improving.

NEED OF CONSTITUTIONAL REVISION BROADCAST

Clifford Townsend, State Director of Organization of the Indiana Farm Bureau will broadcast over radio station WOWO 12:00 to 12:15, Friday, October 31. The subject of his speech will be "Need of Constitutional Revision."

The Inidana Farm Bureau, the League of Women's Voters, the Women's Federated Clubs, the Indiana Federation of Labor, together with a large number of Backers of Indiana are sponsoring the movement to encourage the voters to vote "yes" at the coming election.

Each voter when he or she goes to the polls will be handed a white ticket four inches square on which is printed "are you in favor of convening a constitutional convention in the year 1931?

Yes——
No——

As all voters will be expected to vote one way or the other on this question, all will be interested in hearing Mr. Townsend. Mr. Townsend is a farmer in Grant County but served at one time as County Superintendent of Schools in both Blackford and Grant Counties.

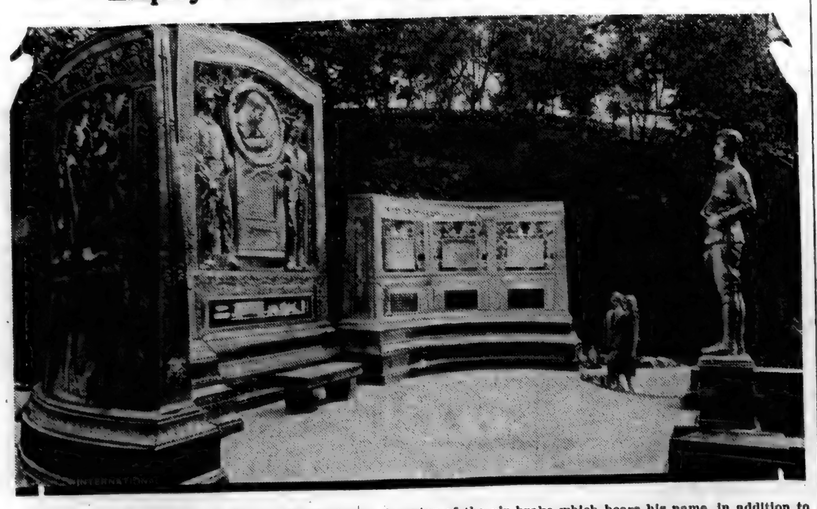
Employees' Tribute to Inventor of Air Brake



The beautiful memorial to George Westinghouse, inventor of the air brake which bears his name, in addition to many other appliances, which was recently erected at Schenley park, Pittsburgh, with funds contributed by 60,000 employees of Westinghouse industries. The monument, which is the work of Daniel Chester French, sculptor; H. Hornbostel, architect; and Masaniello Piccirilli, sculptor of ornament, includes a medallion of the inventor leaning over his drawing board, and the figures of a skilled mechanic and an engineer.

LIVE STOCK

OLD-FASHIONED HOG LOSES OUT

Feeder Should Select Breed He Likes Best.

Usually the best breed of hogs for any one man is the breed that he likes best. It is the type of the individual hog of a breed that is more important than the breed itself, explains J. P. Willman of the New York State College of Agriculture.

Thirty or more years ago the wide, thick, short-bodied, short-legged type showing extreme refinement were in demand. Some still prefer this type, but it has been replaced by a type that has proved more profitable. The old-fashioned pig took too long to reach market weight, Mr. Willman says.

The present-day type of hog has length to body, long legs, and large but not coarse bone. It should have in addition good depth and capacity of the chest and middle to insure constitutional vigor and good feeding qualities. The long, deep-bodied, somewhat leggy type of sows produce and raise good litters. Also the long, somewhat narrow-bodied, leggy, weanling pig with plenty of bone makes rapid and economical gains.

The type can easily be carried too far, however, and develop the "gun barrel" type of hog. Sometimes the rangy boar is criticized, but usually he will sire the kind of pigs that will get to the market before the average run of pigs and prove profitable to the feeder.

To Keep Animals Free From All Parasites

Clean herds, clean ground, clean stables, clean barns, clean pastures, properly drained, are the chief weapons to keep animals free from parasites. Plowing and cropping are measures that farmers should employ in their operations with the idea of fighting parasitic menace. There is no better way to disinfect the soil than by plowing. Overstocking should be avoided. Even though the pastures are rotated, overstocking concentrates the infection and increases the danger of the parasitic menace. The time to fight parasitic diseases is before they appear.

Careless methods which repeatedly expose susceptible animals to polluted and infected soil, may ultimately bring on parasitic diseases. The McLean County system of swine sanitation has done a great deal in the control of worms in swine, as well as other diseases. Sheep and poultry sanitation programs are merely simple procedures to avoid parasites.

Every Beast and Fowl Favors Its Own Vermin

An expert on lice can tell the kind of bird or animal that acted as host to the louse by examining the louse, for every bird and beast has its own particular sorts, says F. H. Wilson of the department of entomology at Cornell university.

The old idea that the cattle were infested with lice because the chickens roosted in the cow stable is false, he says. It is not hard to imagine the differences presented to a louse used to crawling and dodging among feathers when it suddenly finds itself in a forest of hairs. Their feet are not adapted for crawling on hairs any more than those of a dog for climbing trees. The cattle get their lice from cattle, the sheep from sheep, and turkeys from turkeys, according to Mr. Wilson.

Odd War Memorial Made From Scrap Metal Pile

A curious memorial to an officer of the World war is to be seen at Tirley, in England, in the shape of a clock made entirely of scrap metal and it is now doing duty in the parish church. It is the work of a resident. There are two weights which consist of assortments of old iron. They are wound up by a windlass which previously worked a canal lock. The driving wheel came from a winnowing machine; and the face, now in the church tower, was made from pieces of old oak and deal. Other parts of the works are made from the remains of a spade, a bean drill and a plowshare. The first model refused to go, so the builder smashed it with a hammer. Then he started his task all over again, and this time he has been successful.

WOMEN SHOULD LEARN USES OF MAGNESIA

To women who suffer from nausea, or so-called "morning sickness," this is a blessing. Most nurses know it. It is advised by leading specialists:

Over a small quantity of finely cracked ice pour a teaspoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. Sip slowly until you are relieved. It ends sick stomach or inclination to vomit.

Its anti-acid properties make Phillips' Milk of Magnesia quick relief in heartburn, sour stomach, gas. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement. Used as a mouth-wash it helps prevent tooth decay during expectancy.

Can't PLAY Can't REST —child needs Castoria

WHEN a child is fretful and irritable, seems distressed and uncomfortable, can't play, can't sleep, it is a pretty sure sign that something is wrong. Right here is where Castoria fits into a child's scheme—the very purpose for which it was formulated years ago! A few drops and the condition which caused the trouble is righted; comfort quickly brings restful sleep.

Nothing can take the place of Castoria for children; it's perfectly harmless, yet always effective. For the protection of your wee one—for your own peace of mind—keep this old reliable preparation always on hand. But don't keep it just for emergencies; let it be an every-day aid. Its gentle action will ease and soothe the infant who cannot sleep. In more liberal doses it will effectively help to regulate sluggish bowels in an older child.

All druggists have Castoria; it's genuine if you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature and this name-plate:

The desire to wound him filled her with a burning fever. At least then he would not be able to go for weeks without remembering her. He would think of her. His attention, his desire would be hers. For an intolerable moment she yielded to the pain of this desire, then rose, wrapped her faded cotton kimono over her bathing suit and turned to face Loring. For a moment she was struck with a bright memory. His composure, his self-assurance were broken by the upthrust of some powerful emotion. She was a girl again, at her mother's house, running up the front steps, he stood at the top in her way, looking at her eagerly, his face so—alive, disturbing.

They stared at each other, remembering, caught and held together. But Ernestine thrust this clamoring thought away from her. This man was Lillian's husband. This was Jonathan Hamilton's son, her father's son-in-law and adviser. He was one of her own people.

"You haven't been kind to Will, any of you," she stammered, trying to bring the talk back to commonplace.

"He hasn't accepted our kindness," Loring answered slowly.

"It isn't only that he's proud," said Ernestine. "He's vain as well. He's different. He's entitled to his vanity."

"At any cost?" asked Loring in a low voice. "I think there are men who would consider pride too dear—for your happiness."

Ernestine's thoughts were in confusion. Loring's words came back to her, nothing but poverty and childbearing and distress. Oh, she had had more than that from Will. She had had life! But was there to be for her no permanent peace and security with Will? She doubted it. And this doubt brought another: Has my whole instinct concerning Will been false? Is the family's judgment of him correct and my own mistaken? They think him erratic, trivial, unstendy, a failure—O God in Heaven, help me—

She turned away from Loring and took the path up through the shrubs toward the lawn about the house. She stumbled along as though to get away from the weakness, the tears, the fearful doubts that assailed her.

A motor had been humming along the lake road as she advanced from the water's edge, and now abruptly the car had entered the inlet road and swung about before the house. At this instant when she became conscious of it and its arrival, the air was still filled with the grinding of brakes, while the doors of the car spilled open and it disgorged three of four men who were carrying others. One of the two men lifted from the car was either dead or dying, for a thin bright stream ran from him as they laid him on the grass.

Bright red dripped from the running board. The other man was being carried indoors, while two tied their coats together to make a stretcher for the first man lifted out. A shout brought Madame Pastano from the house. The gardener, the houseman appeared on the run.

The whole household was instantly concentrated with skilled, practiced efficiency, so quiet, so quick that Ernestine was still gaping while it was all accomplished. The hose was running furiously across the lawn. The rug was brought from the floor of the car, and thrown into the lake, with rocks on top of it. The gardener put the hose inside the car and washed the floor and the running board. Another came from the garage with a different car rug, with a different license plate which he changed in a moment, and the driver of the car moved it up a little, so that the gravel could be picked up in a shovel, and carried and thrown into the lake, the fresh spot raked together.

Now old Grandmother Pastano, an ancient dame who spoke not a word of English, came from the porch, her head wrapped in a shawl, and got into the car and sat by the window, her thick jeweled hand resting on the edge of the glass. The car turned about and, with a different driver, moved sedately back along the lake road, whence it had come—as innocent appearing a vehicle as ever rode the highway.

No one had noticed her, there at the end of the lake walk, among the carefully cut shrubs. Ernestine moved back and came to the little summer house and sat down in it, for her limbs would carry her no farther.

The dreadful efficiencies of the Pastanos had all this time increased her wrath with Will. She could not bear it for him to be in a daze, to go about with the air which had exasperated Lillian the night Elaine was born—helpless, hopeless and confused. She couldn't stand the thought that he was a failure while these foreigners were thick with success.

Ruby Pastano had power. He loved money. He had it. He was dramatic and generous with it. He wanted it to show. He loved to empty his pockets—knowing well where he might refill them. And all summer she had compared this man's magic with Will's fumbling. Deliberately she had shut her ears against stories of political corruption, against tales of graft and bribery, of Ruby Pastano who was generous with policemen. Growing strong and well again, with the children blooming under the benevolence of this man whose kindness had been more acceptable to her than the kindness of her own people, because he was Will's friend and they were not, she had nevertheless been influenced to vexation beyond measure that Pastano should be so capable and Will so futile.

Now her tears fell from her eyes in great scalding drops.

What was she, Ernestine Briceland, doing in this band of cutthroats and thieves? All of Ruby Pastano's efficiency was to her nothing now but filthy rags. All her relationship with him and his family, from the beginning, had been built on misunderstanding. They were too far apart. Not even affection and liking, not even respect could bridge the gap, the difference in ideals, in standards, in purposes. This generous, unscrupulous man, bringing the victims of rapine so unfalteringly into the heart of his own home was Will's friend—not hers. She had nothing in common with these people, and she would never have. And she had shut the door of her heart against her own flesh and blood, because of Will's pride, and had opened it to these—these— She choked and her throat turned bitter with gall at them.

Abruptly the Car Had Entered the Inlet Road.

Abruptly she was conscious of an upsurging of patriotism. Her own people—her own kind! Americans, strong, decent, successful, ardent and clean. Kind—kind. Incapable of murder and plotting. These foreigners looked upon them all as fat geese to be plucked and did not understand the courage, the cleanness, the strength of kindness. She hated them with a furious hatred. The compulsion to be rid of them—of all of them, and Will as well—came upon her.

She was crying terribly. She ran back down the beach path and came to Loring playing in the water with Elaine and Peter.

"Get the boat," she said sobbingly, "I will go with you."

* * * * * * *

It was wonderful to relax in the comfort and security of home again. The children went off happily with old Annie, who had cared for Lillian and Ernestine when they were small, and who had always stayed with mamma, a privileged member of the household. Lillian scarcely left Ernestine's side a moment.

Papa planned softly about going into Chicago in the morning, to set through to a finish the details of the trust funds for his two girls. Loring kept his distance, reading and smoking by the table at the far end of the long porch.

Ernestine was almost asleep, relaxed and comfortable in her body for the first time in many weeks, and she was almost inattentive to papa's voice going gently on with plans.

"I will deed the Sheridan road house over to you, darling. Mamma and I will be in New York most of the time, but when we are in Chicago we will stay there with you. Loring told us that you would come back sooner if I withheld your settlement."

Something clicked in Ernestine's mind—a small sound, as though a lock had been unbolted. But she went on to sleep calmly enough, carrying down with her into unconsciousness her trouble and her pain. Loring said she would come back—papa had been so willing to obey her wish about not having her money, because Loring said she would come back the sooner.

She slept deeply, all through the long evening, all through the night. It was the first clear flush of dawn when she awoke, sat up under the light cover that mamma had thrown over her there on the porch swing and looked out across the water.

She awoke with a conviction. She could not do this. She could not leave Will. It was impossible. By what route she had come to this conclusion she could not have told. But in her sleep her true nature had asserted itself and her mind was fixed.

She had done what she had resolved never to do. She had denied her marriage.

"Oh, not I—not my true self—not my heart!" she whispered. "I never did deny Will nor my love. I'll go back today—to be his wife for ever—no matter what comes."

She felt calm and strong now and could look with impersonal horror upon her defection. In the clear light of morning, filled as she was with the conviction that she must for ever choose Will against all the world, further understanding came to her.

All these months that she had been hating Will and loving him and reviling him and saying such cruel things, it had been a deep unknown desire for her mother's home which goaded her. It had been rebellion against the continued humiliation of poverty and disappointment that their hopes and plans had not matured this time into success.

All her mental processes seemed loosened, open. Now from some canny instinct she was presented with a new enlightenment. She was—she had been—worse than the "gimme" women. She had been for months under the domination of a bitter jealousy of his work. She had been wounded because his activity was secret from her. She had loathed the mistress that he followed—his own career. So, wanting him to succeed and to earn money, she had not wanted him possessed with the preoccupation of such processes. She had seen in his gaze that inward adoration which is more obnoxious to a woman's greedy pride than another woman's lure can ever be—that love for what he was doing, that excluded interest in his own mind.

All her own mind clear at last in the limpid humility born of having failed Will, in intention, if not in conclusive act, she could reach a place on which to plant her feet for ever, as far as he and she were concerned.

"What have I to do with his work?" The answer to this question in the clear logic of her mind released her for ever from the petty jealousies of the artist's wife. The answer was "Nothing." She had nothing to do with his work at all. It was his own, and she must know it. The old unity she had wanted to preserve was possible only as a kind of over-unity, not going into details. It was the ground on which love placed its feet, the sky above love's head, but not the secret of the habitations of the soul.

He could not bear a child for her, though his love conceived it. And was not the business of bringing forth something new and bright, even if it were but a comic strip for the daily papers, as secret and silent a process as that in which she was now again engaged? They all knew she was to bear another child. But no one intruded upon her privacy save by the most discreet and apologetic kindness. And might not the creative processes of artistry be as secret, as involuntary?

She had been resentful as petty men were sometimes resentful of a woman's preoccupation and distress in maternity. Will had been natural with her, casual and kind, and she could accord him the same courtesy. She wept afresh, but not the dreadful scalding tears of the day before. These were unselfish thanking tears distilled from a heart grown calm and good again.

"O God, help me to be a good wife—help me to be a good wife to Will, O God. Help me to understand him, to grow and change when life demands it of me. Help me to be a good wife."

She went to the desk in the corner and wrote a telegram:

"I have left Pastano's, and am at mamma's cottage with the children. Please come and get us today.—Ernestine."

Mock Spirits in Daytime, but Fear Them at Night

Night has great terrors for the inhabitants of the island of Bali, in the Dutch East Indies, because of the great number of demons (butas) prowling about in the dark. To appease these evil spirits, the mother of each home places on the doorstep, or shrine, a plaited tray filled with fruit and rice, often with a small lamp to show the way. When the demons find what they want they are supposed not to molest the people of the home. If a man has to go about by night he always carries a lighted torch and sings to keep the spirits away, as they do not like either light or music.

In the daylight, however, the natives can make fun of these spirits without coming to harm. On festival days they dress up and imitate the demons, mocking them. But as soon as the shadows lengthen, the clothes are returned to the temple and those who have worn them pray a little longer than usual and offer a little more food than regularly to the spirits who may come to their doorsteps.—New York Magazine.

Alumni Associations

The organization of those who have been students is characteristic of American schools. The first alumni association was established at William and college in 1821. For many years alumni organizations were chiefly social, affording opportunity for the reunion of friends. As these associations developed, however, they proved to be useful not only in welding former students together in friendship, but in maintaining interest in and, in some cases, supplying funds for the various schools and colleges.

SIMON PETER, FROM WEAKNESS TO STRENGTH

LESSON TEXT—Mark 8:27-29; Luke 22:31-34; John 18:25-27; 21:15-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Now when they saw the boldness of Peter and John, and perceived that they were unlearned and ignorant men, they marveled, and they took knowledge of them, that they had been with Jesus.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Weak Man Becomes Strong.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Weak Man Becomes Strong.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How a Weak Man Became Strong.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Christ Gives Strength.

I. Peter Confessing Christ (Mark 8:27-29).

The time was near at hand when Christ should make the supreme offering of himself for sins on the cross. Knowing the tragic experience through which the disciples would pass because of it, he sought to prepare them for it by leading them into the apprehension of the cardinal doctrines of the Christian faith such as: the integrity of his person, atoning death, resurrection, and second coming.

Peter's confession was provoked by two questions of Jesus.

1. "Whom do men say that I am?" Opinions differed, but all recognized him to be a teacher or a prophet with more than human authority and power.

2. "Whom say ye that I am?" Jesus persistently claimed to be the very Son of God. He would have his disciples to possess a personal and experiential knowledge of himself as to being God manifest in the flesh.

II. Christ Warning Peter (Luke 22:31-34).

1. He told him of Satan's desire concerning him (v. 31). Satan is constantly striving to destroy men.

2. Christ's prayer for Peter (v 32). He prayed that Peter's faith fail not, not that he should escape the siftings.

3. Peter's confidence (v. 33).

His fall began when he refused to listen to Christ's words about the cross. Believers begin to weaken when they no longer desire to hear about Christ crucified.

4. Denial announced (v. 34).

This was to take place three times before the crowing of the cock.

III. Peter Denying His Lord (John 18:25, 27).

1. Before the servant maid (vv. 15-18).

Peter blundered in attempting to follow Jesus at this time (John 13:36). Presumptuous boldness frequently leads into embarrassing positions. Under the taunt of the Jewish maid he openly denied the Lord.

2. Before the servants and officers (v. 25).

Peter was now warming himself at the enemy's fire. When questioned, he denied his relation to the Lord. Separation from everything that is opposed to the Lord is necessary in order to have a clear testimony (II Cor. 6:14-18).

3. Before the kinsman of Malchus (v. 26).

This man had seen Peter with Jesus in Gethsemane (v. 10) when Peter rashly cut off the ear of Malchus. He put the question straight to Peter, "Did I not see thee in the garden with him?" At the utterance of the third denial, the cock crew, reminding Peter of Christ's warning (Mark 14:72).

IV. Peter's Restoration (John 21:15-17).

Peter had thrice denied his Lord. Therefore, before his reinstatement in the Lord's service he must thrice confess his love for Jesus. In this reinstatement and commission of Peter is set forth the motive and nature of the service which has Christ's approval in all times. Love for Christ, not primarily love for the sheep, proves the genuine shepherd.

1. "Feed my lambs."

The word "feed" as well as "lambs" signifies that the work here enjoined is that of nurturing babes in Christ.

2. "Feed my sheep."

The word here means to feed, guide, correct, and lead the maturer classes of Christians. It carries with it not alone responsibility of feeding, but corrective discipline. Failure will inevitably follow if this be attempted without love.

3. "Feed my sheep."

This doubtless relates to the care of aged Christians. The word "feed" returns somewhat to the meaning as in the first instance where he says, "Feed my lambs," so that the minister's responsibility to care for the aged is equivalent to that of the young. Peter was to express devotion to Christ by a martyr's death.

LADIES LITERARY CLUB

Mrs. Grace Dilley was a most efficent and pleasing hostess to the L. L. C. Wednesday evening, October 22, 1930. Mrs. Parlia Hull and Mrs. Avis Staman delightfully contributed to the program some very good vocal music. Mrs. Inez Hadsell led the discussion for the early part of the evening. The topic was "New York City."

However, it was during the remainder of the evening that the L. L. C. proved themselves wide-a-wake, up-to-date citizens. No more vital question is before the people of Indiana today than the question of the State Constitution revision. Having selected Mrs. Jennie Sechler and Miss Martha Miser for the affirmative and Mrs. Belle Woodcox and Mrs. LaVonne De Vore for the negative the speakers forcibly presented in debate, for general consideration, both sides of this very worthwhile question. Although the judges awarded the decision to the negative, assuredly, they were hard put in deciding, because both sides did so exceptionally well.

As you know the General Assembly of 1929 called upon the voters to decide whether or not we should revise our Constitution. This issue will be decided at the election next Tuesday. So, in order that the L. L. C. ladies might know the importance of this election, both sids of the question were presented in the following discussion.

If a convention is called to revise the constitution it will cost one half million dollars. What evils are there in the present constitution that warrant such expenditure? At this time, 93.5% of the taxts are collected from land and city lots. Why should a small portion of Indiana's wealth bring in all of the taxes? Does not wealth in the form of money, stocks and bonds demand police protection? Then why should that wealth not pay for part of government expenses? Not until the constitution is changed can we remedy this situation. Does this warrant such expense?

You, as a taxpayer not only pay heavily, but with the present system your money can be misused. We all want more public education, but now money appropriated for schools does not always reach its destination. Yes, while school money is less, some of the trustees in the state aid counties, for instance, have been duped into paying $60 and $70 a set for reference books valued at only $5 or $6. 250 gallons of perfumed disinfectants at $2 a gallon were sold to one trustee, when fumigating candles would have been sufficient. Consequently, state aid must be modified, and the county instead of the township must become the unit for organization in our Indiana educational program. Also, would not untying the hands of our able State Superintendents of Instruction help some? No sooner are they elected for their 2 years, until they must right about face and they must right about face and campaign for another election. Therefore, how can they put into practice any far reaching reforms in the short time they have to tend to the improvement of education in Indiana? We need fewer elected officers with longer terms, before schools can be freed of politics.

Does a good moral character train a man for the practice of law? The Constitution of Indiana requires nothing more than a "good, moral character."

These items suggest only some of the changes needed. The negative will contend that all changes shoud be made by amendments to the present constitution. Can this be done? It has been tried only 383 times——unsuccessfully.

Therefore lets discard our worn-out constitution for a new one, as we would an old dress that was good in its day, but now outwo and although made-over, is still ill-fitting and too small, for a new one of good material made to fit us in modern style.

You have heard the affirmative argumnt. Let the negative repeat that this proposed Constitutional Convention will cost one half million dollars. Cannot this expense be largely eliminated by amending the existing constitution through the regular channels? Whenever the people of Indiana are ready for reform they will vote with a sufficient majority so that the constitution, our basic law, can be changed. If the people themselves, not the politicians or a few factions, want change let them amend. Remember the constitution is to embody only the most fundamental principles, a Rock of Ages, not crumbling sand, shifting with every tide. Modern living is so changeable. Do we want to change the constitution with every new whim?

Recently, Illinois, Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky have rewritten constitutions. In each case the new one was longer and more complicated than the old. Let other states change constitutions! If we must have some thing different let us accomplish this through laws, for laws can be changed continuously to fit modern needs. Constitutions cannot.

If the Bar Association does not want lawyers with their present qualifications, let that group refuse to admit them to practice.

Some say the bill of Rights in our constitution will never be taken away from us. Yet a few now advocate change in our jury system and ask that a criminal be compelled to testify against himself. Is not this tampering with an individual's hard-won rights?

So you see if we alter a little, we will want to change everything. "What guarantee have we against extremes?"

Shall we, by our votes next Tuesday, call a Constitutional Convention? Yes? No?

OBITUARY

Bertha Ethel Place, daughter of Reed and Della Place, was born in Hiksville, Ohio, March 15, 1889, departed this life on October 25, 1930, aged 41 years, 7 months and 10 days.

Twenty-seven years ago she with her parents moved to this community where she spent the greater part of her life. Twenty-three years ago she became a member of the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners.

On October 20, 1907 she was united in marriage to Olen Dermott, to this union four children were born, Mrs. Violet Moore of St. Joe; Mrs. Latha Jewel of Elkhart; Howard, at home, and Viola, who died May 17, 1909.

Early in her girlhood days she showed great love for music, this talent she used to the delight of her friends and family.

Often in the evening she seated herself at the piano in her father's home, her father, mother, brothers and sister made the old home ring with their happy voices singing the old gospel songs which father and mother loved so dearly.

Her last days were spent in great suffering but through it all she bore it bravely. Among her last words were "I am ready and willing to go but I wish I might stay with my family."

She leaves to mourn, a loving faithful husband, three children, mother, three brothers, a sister, two grandchildren and many friends.

The funeral was held from the Coburn's Corners Church, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock, with burial in the Alton cemetery. Rev. J. O. Rose, Rev. J. N. Scholes and Rev. Brewster of Hcksville, officiated. E. R. Kinsey had charge of the burial.

Majority Over Tom Riddle, Wet Candidate of Democratts in Six Counties will Exceed 3,500

David Hogg, Republican, was re-elected to Congress from the Twelfth Indiana District by a majority of 3,551 votes over his opponent, Thomas P. Riddle, of Clear Lake, unofficial figures from all except two precincts in Allen county.

Although defeated in Allen county by 1,982 votes, Hogg rolled up a majority of over 5,000 votes in the five other counties of the district.

Returns from Steuben county, the home of Riddle, give Hogg a majority of 1,829 votes, his biggest majority in any county in the district.

The tabulation from the district, with the exception of the two missing precincts in Allen county, is as follows:

Allen County—Hogg, 20,666; Riddle, 22,648. Riddle's majority, 1,982.

Whitley County—Hogg, 4,118; Riddle, 3,547. Hogg's majority, 571.

DeKalb County—Hogg, 5,928; Riddle, 4,651. Hogg's majority, 1,277.

LaGrange County—Hogg, 2,942; Riddle, 1,987. Hogg's majority, 955.

Steuben County—Hogg, 3,822; Riddle, 1,993. Hogg's majority, 1,829.

Noble County—Hogg, 5,386; Riddle, 4,485. Hogg's majority, 901.

DEMOCRATS AND REPUBLICANS SPLIT OFFICES

Unofficial figures made at the time of going to press tonight indicated that the democrats carried DeKalb county for six county offices, excepting councilmen, and the republicans captured an equal number of the victories.

The democratic victories were for prosecutor, auditor, treasurer, recorder, sheriff, and commissioner southwest.

The republicans won for congress, state representative, coroner, surveyor, assessor and commissioner north.

The tabulation at the county clerk's office will not be completed until late tonight. Until that time there will remain a question as to whether Miser or Kain won for surveyor and whether Potter or Fisk was successful for commissioner north.

The unofficial figures follow:

For congress, Hogg 5928, Riddle 4651. Hogg's majority 1277.

For prosecutor, Ridenour 3592, Sharpless 6776. Sharpless' majority 3184.

For representative, Grimm 5181, Kelham 5076. Grimm's majority 105.

For auditor, Foote 4706, Lyon 5588. Lyon's majority 882.

For treasurer, Eberly 4720, Maxwell 5526. Maxwell's majority 824.

For recorder, Brown 4458, Waterman 5845. Waterman's majority 1387.

For sheriff, Conine 5214, Hoff 5293. Hoff's majority 79.

For coroner, Clark 5634, Hinklin 4646. Clark's majority 988.

For surveyor, Miser 5256, Kain 5236. Miser's majority 20.

For assessor, Miser 5204, Albright 4953. Miser's majority 251.

For commissioner, southwest, Guthrie 4806, Grube 5358. Grube's majority 552.

For commissioner north, Potter 5175, Fisk 5011. Potter's majority 164.

Congressman Hogg Re-elected

WATSON COMMENTS ON THE ELECTION VOTE

Says That Democratic Victory Tuesday was Not a Personal Repudiation of Presidtnt Hoover

Indianapolis, Nov. 5.—The democratic victory in yesterday's election "was not a personal repudiation of President Herbert Hoover," Sen. James E. Watson, republican floor leader of the senate, told the United Press today.

"It was merely the reflex action that has followed sweeping republican victories in presidential years during the past decade," Watson said.

"In 1922, following the Harding majority of 5,000,000 in 1920, the backwash set in and we virtually lost control of the senate.

"In 1926, the same thing occurred following the 6,000,000 majority of Coolidge in 1924, and we lost overwhelmingly in the house and senate until we had no majority.

"In 1928, Hoover carried the country by a 7,000,000 majority and this year we apparently were overwhelmed by the same backwash.

"If the house of representatives is democratic," Watson said, "I sincerely hope the senate also is democratic, and that the party has a clear majority in order that it may carry out its platform.

"If the democrats have a clear majority in congress, I expect them to immediately begin revision of the tariff, and to either repeal or modify the farm relief bill, both of which they campaigned against so vigorously. If they do not do this, they will betray the trust reposed in them."

JUDGE ENDICOTT TO ADDRESS P. T. A.

The meeting date for the Parents'-Teachers' Association has been changed to November 11, High School Gymnasium. This change to Armistice Day was made because the committee has been lucky enough to secure Judge Endicott of Auburn to talk. There is no need of telling this community about him, for he is already well known both as a speaker and a judge. His fairness in decisions and unbiased opinions cause his words on all topics to be worth listening to. Show your appreciation of the Judge's coming by being there Tuesday night.

The devotions will be led by Rev. Stoll.

A November meeting could not pass without recognition of Thanksgiving Day. A play called "The First Thanksgiving Day" will be given by the 5th and 6th grades. Miss Cleota Morr, teacher, says that every child in both grades who can be here, will have a part in the play. Included within the play are a Dutch dance and the Thanksgiving prayer.

Bring the children and come so that we will have a true representation of both parents and teachers; thus, we will be fulfilling our purpose of closer understanding between parents and teachers. Both groups are interested in the same children. Consequently, let us get acquainted with each other.

A FALSE ALARM

Yes, when it comes to fires, a false alarm is always more acceptable than a real one, and such was the case Tuesday evening, when a call to the John Hart home was made. Reflections on the house from a bonfire was the cause. The boys made the run and were glad to find that the call was an error.

THANKS TO VOTERS

To the Voters of Concord Township, I wish to express my appreciation for the support given me in the campaign for the office of Township Trustee.

ST. JOE MAN LEFT AN ESTATE VALUED AT $54,000

The estate of the late Joseph R. Sechler of St. Joe, who died October 26, is estimated to be worth $54,000 in an application for letters of administration filed in the DeKalb circuit court.

The property is divided as follows: personal, $50,000; real estate, $4,000. The only heir is a sister, Amelia Benninghoff of St. Joe, who is seventy-one years of age.

Upon the application of the sister, Merritt Sechler of St. Joe, was appointed administrator and he qualified by filing $100,000 bond, the First and Tri-State Corporation of Fort Wayne, as surety.

ASKING FORECLOSURE OF WEST END GARAGE

Lillie Johnson, by Attorney H. C. Springer, states in a complaint filed in the DeKalb circuit court that Stanton and Mae T. Osburn gave him a note for $2,000 Feb. 13, 1930, of which $50 was payable Aug. 1, 1930, $50 each six months' period thereafter, including Aug. 1, 1939, and $1,050 on Feb. 1, 1940. The note is secured by a mortgage on lot 9 in Leighty's addition to St. Joe.

No payment on the note has been made and a judgment for $2,500 and an order of foreclosure are demanded. The complaint further states that Oscar E. Driver holds a $500 mortgage against the property that is paramount and senior to the plaitiff's lien.

The property is not now occupied and the court is asked to appoint a receiver for it.

CHAMPION FLOOR SITTERS

The Loyal Happy Hustlers class of the Christian Sunday School proved themselves to be champion floor sitters last Thursday night at a Gypsy Hallowe'en party given by Mr. and Mrs. Ruple on Widney Avenue. The members of the class went armed with cushions, and wearing red bandanna handkerchiefs on their heads. Sitting around a "camp-fire" they made a picturesque group.

A round of stories was the first thing in order, then a mock wedding was put on by Mrs. Maxwell, Mrs. Yeiser and Mrs. Rupel, Alvin Rupel acting as train bearer, which caused much amusement.

The class was divided into two groups and several contests were indulged in, in which the "Odd" side seemed to be winners.

Refreshments consisting of hot weiners, sandwiches, coffee, marshmallows and apples were served by Mr. and Mrs. Rupel, assisted by Charles Bassett and Rozella Mendelshon. All expressed themselves as having had a very enjoyable evening, and one long to be remembered.

FAIRY TALE FOR CHILDREN WHEN STORY TIME COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

David had gone to the tip end of South America and was visiting Cape Horn.

In another moment after they had talked Cape Horn was shouting in a sing-song fashion this song, for it appeared that he, too, liked to tell his story in verse:

Some capes depend on fashions
Whether they be worn;
And if the world of style and form
Decides they will adorn.

But we, Capes of the Universe
Will not let style dictate
What they would do if they Could influence our fate.

For they might say to Cape Good Hope,
"You're out of style, old dear,"
And perhaps that is the reason
One cape is named Cape Fear.

For I've often thought it likely
That Cape Fear heard of styles
And of the way that humans
Indulge in pranks and wiles.

But whether that may be or not
We Capes jut out just so,
And so you needn't argue
For what I say I know.

As a matter of fact David hadn't been arguing but Cape Horn looked so angry again he thought it best to go away. He went over toward the Atlantic Ocean, with whom he felt very friendly. Atlantic Ocean had been alongside of him during so much of his traveling.

David had not gone far when an airplane buzzed overhead and then landed very near him. A little pilot jumped out of the airplane and, rushing up to David, said:

"Want to see Canada? You didn't see any of it before to speak of—just a glance merely—and I'll take you there now if you wish.

"The Living Map is too big for you to get over all that ground yourself for it would mean going back up through South America and Central America and the United States."

"How did you know I was here and where I've been?" David asked.

The little pilot laughed. He had a most unusual laugh. It made David feel as though he were sure he would have a good time if he went with the pilot. His laugh made him feel so pleased with everything—just as he felt when he went for tramps through the woods and the wind blowing through the trees seemed company.

"Want to See Canada?"

The pilot had a suit which looked as though it were made of very strong leaves. Around his head he wore a wreath of tiny, delicate leaves. He seemed to be very fond of leaves.

"Yes," the little pilot answered, "I'm a Map person, in a way. The General Overseer will tell you who I am. I'm mostly just myself figuring in the Living Map world and just at present ready to whisk you from one place to another in no time at all.

"I'm the breezy, merry, naughty, kindly air pilot, that's who I am."

"You're up to date," said David, "with your airplane."

Dyspepsia of Kings No Worry for Us Americans

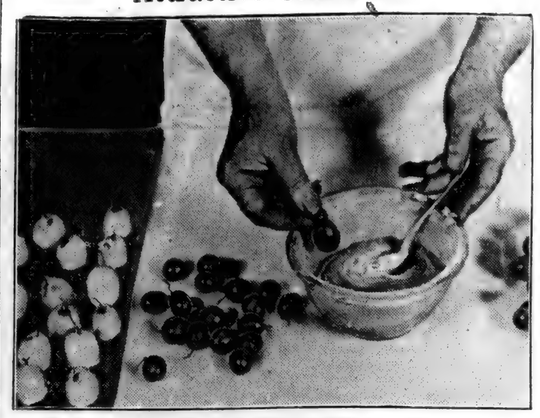
Four meals a day—breakfast at seven, dinner at ten, supper at four, and "livery" at eight or nine, was the mark of the aristocratic English family in the Fourteenth century. Laborers and tradesmen had only three meals a day, at eight, twelve and six.

"The average American today prefers to follow the sturdy English laborer's schedule for meals rather than the more de luxe dining plan," says Miss Catherine Hanley of the national dairy council. "Our stomachs are better off if we give them a rest between meals. If you enjoy good health, it is wise to limit any between meals piecing to fresh fruits, or a milk drink. Children, those who are underweight, invalids, and older people can usually profit by a glass of whole milk in mid-morning or afternoon."

Sinuses

The cells or cavities contained in certain bones, as the frontal, ethmoid, sphenoid and superior maxillary, are called sinuses. The frontal sinuses are two irregular cavities extending upward and outward from their openings on each side of the nasal spine, between the inner and outer layers of the skull, and separated from one another by a thin bony septum. They give rise to the prominences above the root of the nose, called the nasal eminences.

Grapes Dipped in Fondant Make Very Attractive Confection



Dipping Grapes in Flavored White Fondant.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

An unusually attractive confection for teas, dinners, and other formal occasions, as well as for gift boxes of home-made sweets, is made by dipping grapes in fondant. "Fondant," as the professional candy maker calls it, is the cooked sugar filling in chocolate creams or stuffed dates and other confections. It is sometimes flavored in various ways, as with oil of peppermint or wintergreen, rose, vanilla, or almond flavoring, and often colored with vegetable colorings. A sirup or candy thermometer is desirable for good results.

Firm grapes with unbroken skins should be used for dipping, and a little of the stem should be left on them. They should be dipped very quickly into the melted fondant and placed on waxed paper to dry.

The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture gives the following directions for making the fondant in which the grapes are dipped:

Fondant.

2 cups granulated sugar
¾ cups boiling water
¼ tsp. cream of tartar
⅛ tsp. salt

Put the sugar, water, and cream of tartar and salt into a saucepan over a hot fire. Stir constantly until, but not after, the sugar has dissolved. Do not splash the sirup. Remove the spoon and do not use it again after the sirup boils. Remove the sugar grains or crystals with a dampened brush or a clean wet cloth. Cover the pan for a few minutes. Let the sirup boil until it reaches a temperature of 235 to 238 degrees Fahrenheit, or until it forms a soft ball when dropped into cold water. Be sure the bulb of the thermometer is covered and does not touch the bottom of the pan. Pour the sirup in a thin sheet into a flat-bottomed cake pan and stir it with a flat wooden spoon until it creams. When it forms a soft solid ball, work it with the palms of the hands in the same way as bread dough until it is smooth.

Place the fondant in an earthenware or glass dish. Wet a clean cloth in hot water, wring out well, and lay over the top of the candy. After about 24 hours the fondant is ready to mold. Fondant made in this way will keep for months if covered with a moist cloth or stored in a tightly covered jar. It may be melted over hot water for dipping grapes, strawberries, or other fresh fruits, or any of the candied fruits such as cherries, pineapple, grapefruit peel or citron.

Other ways of using fondant include molding it to make centers for chocolate creams, pressing halves of nuts into balls of fondant, or rolling the balls in finely chopped nuts or shredded coconut. Nuts and coconut may also be worked into the fondant before it is shaped. Irregular shaped balls are sometimes rolled in cinnamon for "cinnamon potatoes," with "eyes" gouged out to make them more realistic. With or without nut meats fondant may be used to stuff dates or prunes.

"In plain blunt words, Bill, your pipe smells like a 'Hot-Box'!"

ONLY an old and trusted friend would venture to speak so frankly.

A new pipe, or an old one carefully broken in with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture, changes everything. And why shouldn't it? Sir Walter is milder and more fragrant. And it has the body and flavor found only in the finest of Burley, skillfully seasoned and blended. What more could we offer any pipe smoker? What more could he ask?

FROCKS OF SHEER VELVET ARE FAVORED BY THE YOUNGER SET

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

The lure of the season's new velvets is proving positively irresistible. As to the debutante set, it has taken up the theme of velvet with an enthusiasm which knows no bounds. Not only are these latest recruits to society looking their smartest in richly furred velvet suits and ensembles in the daytime hours, but they are all excitement over a new fad—that of the party frock which is quaintly styled of sheerest velvet.

For inspiration these young enthusiasts are harking back to the picturesque befounced fashions of the quaint 1830s, and what fun they are having in tuning the modes of the yesteryears into a very modern and sophisticated present. There's the adorable dress in the picture, for instance, its voluminous skirt and prim-fitted bodice turns the pretty trick of making youth look more youthful.

Perhaps it is the flounce measuring "yards and yards" around the hemline which more than anything else gives this winsome frock its air of quaintness. Or is it the fact of those multitudinous tiny folds of velvet sewed "row-and-row" on insets of peach-pink chiffon which reminds us that old fashions are becoming new fashions in the eyes of the modern style world?

Another pretty fashion which appeals to youth is the off-the-shoulder decolletage. Costume designers have found that this quaint silhouette is adorably youthful for the velvet frock. Wherefore young girls are dining, dancing and stepping out in the most fascinating little velvet frocks one may hope to see, their naive low-cut lines dropping off the shoulders quite in the same manner as they did in the long ago.

Most of these girlish necklines are held in place with shoulder straps, and the youthful note is sounded when these little bands are formed of tiny roses. A prim bouquet of these same roses at the nipped-in-at-the-waistline and the frock quaintly styled of dainty transparent velvet, be in black or in color, breathes the very essence of youth.

Lace, ermine, delicately beaded georgette and softly draped are also used at necklines.

Federal Home Economics Bureau Offers New Designs for Girls' Dresses

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

How the children grow over the summer! Vacation weeks have passed quickly. Children in their sun suits or bathing suits have needed little in the way of clothing. Then comes the distressing discovery that May has positively nothing to wear to school—she's outgrown every single one of her dresses, and must have a brand new set. It isn't merely that her legs and body have lengthened; she has broadened in shoulders and chest, her arms have grown longer, and altogether she's just a bigger girl and must be provided for accordingly.

We mothers manage to bridge the gap somehow with a hem let out here and there, while we hastily shop for prints and patterns for fall outfits. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture has some help for us this year, in the form of new designs for little girl's dresses. The one illustrated is a very good type to begin on, while there are still likely to be warm days when freedom of arm and a loose neck line will be much appreciated. If you put a generous hem into this dress—six or eight inches—you may even get over another summer with it, for it is roomy through the chest, and has raglan sleevelets which will take care of width at the shoulders.

Any preferred wash fabric can be used for this little dress. The one illustrated is made of blue gingham. Extra fullness is allowed on each side of the center front and center back by means of four inverted box pleats, stitched down a few inches and then pressed into place. The short sleeve was preferred in making this dress because of the freedom from restriction, and because it was made for the in-between season, when longer sleeves are unnecessary.

Notice especially the rounded out collarless neck line. When this dress is worn under a coat or sweater, as the weather will soon require, it will be much more comfortable than a dress with a rolling or sailor collar. Too, there will be nothing to smooth and straighten as the coat goes on. Both neck and front opening are finished with a simple and effective trimming made by overhanding with colored twist a short blanket stitch edge. The three square tabs for the buttons and buttonholes give a tailored finish.

Good Dress Type for a Six-Year-Old.

Old Industry Wiped Out

The plain of Jordan was assigned to the Knights Templar of Jerusalem by the Crusaders, and they are reported to have made $25,000 a year out of the sugar cane industry. The old mills are still there, in ruins, but under Turkish rule irrigation systems were allowed to deteriorate, and no canes grow there now.

TESTED RECIPES THAT WILL BE ENJOYED BY ALL THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

A dainty dessert and one easy to prepare is always popular with all housewives. Here is one:

Marshmallow Dessert.—Cut into small bits a cupful or more of marshmallows, add a handful of blanched and shredded almonds, cover with a cupful of whipped cream and at serving time serve in sherbet glasses topped with shredded pineapple.

Graham Cracker Date Tort.—Roll twenty-four graham crackers until fine with a rolling pin. Pour over the crumbs four large tablespoonfuls of butter melted. Prepare the following custard: Mix one cupful of sugar with one-half cupful of cornstarch, blend well, add a little salt and one quart of rich milk, cook until thick. Beat four egg yolks until light, add a little of the milk mixture and pour into the saucepan; cook until the custard is thick and smooth. Beat the egg-whites until stiff, fold in gradually one-fourth of a cupful of sugar. Cut up one package of dates into fine bits. Now prepare a layer of the buttered crumbs in a good-sized dripping pan, pour over the custard, then on the custard sprinkle the chopped dates; cover this with the meringue and over that another layer of the buttered cracker crumbs. Bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve cut into squares, top with whipped cream and a maraschino cherry. Use a pancake turner to serve the squares.

Fluffy Turnips.—Take four cupfuls of cooked and mashed yellow turnip. Melt two tablespoonfuls of shortening, add one-half tablespoonful of chopped onion, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of butter, one-half teaspoonful of salt, pepper and paprika to taste. Mix with the turnip, add two well-beaten egg yolks and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of the eggs. Place in a buttered baking dish and bake in a hot oven twenty to twenty-five minutes. Leftover turnip may be used for this dish.

A potato salad is one of the easiest salads to make and one which is often the poorest. Potatoes are tasteless when cold and should always be marinated with a french dressing for two or three hours before the mayonnaise is added.

For the occasion either before or after the nuptials, there is nothing which the hostess can afford which will be too much trouble. For the beginning the following cocktail will be most dainty.

Cupid's Cocktail.—Boil together one-third of a cupful of sugar with one cupful of water, or better—canned fruit juice—for two minutes, then add four tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and cool. Chill one cupful each of seeded white grapes, red cherries, diced pears, and pineapple. Mix all the chilled ingredients together and serve in glass cups placed on pink hearts on serving plates.

Fruit Salad.—Prepare a bed of shredded lettuce. Place a slice of canned pineapple upon it. Fill one-half of a canned pear with diced bananas and celery mixed with mayonnaise dressing. Lay on top of the pineapple. Garnish with strips of green pepper. Serve with french dressing.

Triumph Over Paralysis Claimed by Physician

General paralysis may be detected in its incipient state, making a complete cure possible, by a test just revealed and demonstrated by Dr. K. O. Newman, pathologist of the Oxford County and City Mental hospital, in England. He claims to have devised a blood-test, which would do away with the present process of removing spinal fluid from patients by a minor surgical operation, often painful and troublesome. The blood test would give an opportunity to apply treatment at a stage when prevention is possible, declares Doctor Newman. It is believed a cure might be effected by an early system of artificial innoculation with malarial fever.

Monopolistic Prices

In general, prices of goods under monopoly will be higher than under competition, but this will not always be the case if, as may happen, the costs under monopoly are less than the costs under competition. In some cases monopoly may result in lowering costs so much that the greatest profit is obtained by setting the price lower than under competition.

Government Stamp Insures Quality of Beef

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Have you noticed lately, when buying beef, that on the large cuts there is often a purple stamp such as "U. S. good steer" or "U. S. choice" repeated over and over again on the outside of the piece? This is in addition to the "little purple stamp" with which you have long been familiar, that informed you the meat was from a healthy animal and therefore wholesome. The new stamp is a grade or quality mark, intended to help the buyer—both the retail dealer and the customer—to know what sort of meat is being offered for sale. You may find one of five quality grades on the piece of beef you select: "U. S. prime; U. S. choice; U. S. good; U. S. medium; and U. S. common." These grades are named in the order of their excellence. U. S. choice, good, or medium, are good enough grades for most of us. It is a wise plan to look for meat bearing this government quality mark.

The initials "U. S." indicate that meat so marked has been graded by the bureau of agricultural economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The beef grades used are the same the country over. Choice grade beef in Portland, Ore., is choice in Portland, Maine. Before long graded and stamped lamb and other government graded meats may be had in many retail stores. Last year, at Thanksgiving and Christmas, United States graded turkeys came on the market. Turkey growers as well as turkey buyers liked the grading system.

One of the points which is considered important in grading beef is fatness. A good many people, in buying beef, want a lot of lean and just as little fat as possible. But good beef does not grow that way. There must be enough fat to make the meat tender and juicy. The fat on good beef is usually white or slightly creamy. Small particles of fat are distributed through the lean. This is called marbling.

The SANDMAN STORY

ABOUT RACCOONS

"NOW you know," said Mr. Raccoon, "that parents of children are much more particular about their children's names than animal parents are.

"My children are lovely little dears, but we don't worry about what we shall call them. They may have names or they may not.

"We're not fussy.

"But parents sit up for the longest time and say:

"'Dear me, shall we call the little rosebud (meaning the baby, you know)

"But We Let Them Eat Almost Anything."

Rose or shall we call her Hortense?'

"We don't fuss like that."

"You are particular that your children wash their food before they eat it, though," said Billie Brownie.

"Yes," said Mr. Raccoon, "we're fussy about that, and we're always anxious that the children eat plenty of fresh vegetables.

"But parents are the same way. Haven't you told me, Billie Brownie, of parents urging their children to eat vegetables when they wanted everything else but vegetables?"

"I think I have told you that. But I've also told you that parents are fussy about the hours their children go to bed and you're not fussy at all."

"We like the dears to sit up late at night so they'll be sleepy in the daytime when we are," said Mr. Raccoon.

"We wouldn't want them to wake up at dawn when it is just about dawn when we go to bed.

"But we let them eat almost anything so long as their food is washed.

"Parents are more particular about children. Yes, they are more particular in almost every way.

"But what I cannot understand is why they fuss so much about names. If they think of names, well and good. If they don't, why bother to worry their heads?"

"They enjoy thinking about what they will call their children," Billie Brownie said. "They don't worry so much about names. They enjoy it."

"Ah, well," said Mr. Raccoon "I say to myself so often:

"'Mr. Raccoon,' I say, for I always treat myself politely, 'Mr. Raccoon, you have the ways of a raccoon and not those of a human.

"'It is a lucky thing for you that you don't have to go to business and work in a bank or a shop or a garage.

"'It's a lucky thing for you that you don't have to wear a stiff collar and a necktie and a suit of clothes and heavy boots.

"'What would you do if you had to get up at an early hour each morning to go to work?

"'What would you do if you had to make a speech at a meeting?

"'What would you do if you had to talk over with your son whether he wanted to become a doctor or a lawyer or an engineer?

"'What would you do if you had to shave each morning or at least every other morning?

"'What would you do if you had to live in a house instead of a tree?'

"Yes, Billie Brownie, these are the questions I ask myself.

"And when I answer myself I say:

"'Mr. Raccoon, you're very lucky to be a raccoon. Very, very lucky.'"

"And you are lucky," agreed Billie Brownie. "I think so, too."

A GERMAN LEGEND

A LEGEND regarding a German peasant is as follows: A very humble home was not unlike a palace. Its exterior was crude and uninviting, but from within all was cheer and sunshine. The children of the home wore poor but tidy clothing, and their hearts were aglow with joy. Though the father worked hard he wore a constant smile, and the mother of the little family sang beautiful songs while she toiled. About the home was an atmosphere of happiness and content. No one seemed to worry, no hasty or angry word was spoken, and acts of selfishness were unkown within the family circle. It seemed to those who have closely observed the peasant and his family that a special and peculiar charm radiated from their lives. They appeared to their neighbors as quite different from the rank and file of persons in their station in life. Upon being questioned the father of the family explained the secret of their home life. He said: "I taugh my family to daily think that they were children of a prince, that their home was a palace, and all things were theirs, and that nothing worth possessing was deprived them—so we have made our humble home a palace in the true sense of the word." Only a legend, but a great and wonderful lesson.

L. A. Barrett.

The cause of much of the misery and unhappiness of this world is due to wrong thoughts. The mind is sort of a thermometer, registering the degree of mental poise and contentment. The outside world reflects the attitude of the inner world of right thinking. Our lives are very much what we make them. Our place in the world is dependent not so much upon outward conditions as upon inward determinations and ambitions. Heredity is a more potent factor in determining destiny than environment. The environment of the German peasant's home was not of a very high order, but what he expressed in daily life was a high idealism which doubtless he had acquired either through the inheritance of good parents or learned himself in the school of experience. There is a difference between living and existing—the German peasant actually lived—he was alive to the highest and best impulses and aspirations.

The tendencies that destroy may be overcome by forces within that build up. The word "live" spelled backward is "evil." It is ours to make the choice.

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

GETTING OUT OF BED

IN GETTING out of bed in the morning always take care to place the right foot first or the day will be unlucky. Many otherwise intelligent people also take care to place the right foot first when entering a house. The origin of the very common superstition with regard to the right foot is easily accounted for by association. It is a psychological offspring of the word "right" and its meaning of "in conformity with moral law, permitted by the principle which ought to regulate conduct," etc.

The word, as applied to the side of the human body which is toward the east when the face is turned to the north, is of exactly the same derivation and owes its present application to the fact that most people are "right-handed" and therefore the right hand is the right hand to do things with. And by extension the word came to cover that whole side of the body. And so in getting out of bed if the right foot is right the left foot must be wrong. Moreover, the word "left" is from the Anglo-Saxon, meaning weak, worthless and, originally applied to the left arm, has suffered the same extension as the word right over the one side of the body. Here we have one instance of a physical fact, aided by the use of words, transformed by mental association into a popular superstition.

PLANNING THE DINNER

OF COURSE the woman who has a corps of well-trained servants has little real work to do in planning dinner parties. It is the woman with one or no servants who must use some ingenuity. One thing that she should remember is that the simple dinner carefully prepared is more satisfactory than the dinner that requires long hours of preparation.

Sometimes it is an inordinate love of praise that actuates a woman to go to extreme pains to make elaborate and unusual dishes for her dinner parties. She wants to show her skill as a cook. Sometimes even she rings in numerous courses to display the variety of her dishes and silver. But this really does not add one whit to the actual enjoyment of the guests.

If you must make most of the preparations yourself plan courses that can be prepared some time in advance. It is difficult to serve a dinner composed of dishes all of which need close attention at the last minute.

A first course consisting of a fruit cocktail of some sort appeals especially to your guests and a fruit cocktail is better for having been prepared hours in advance and set away in the refrigerator. Usually the salad course can be prepared beforehand. And the dessert, too, can be made in the morning.

"TO A T"

"WHAT," inquires a reader, "is the origin of the expression 'to a T' and what is the correct way of writing it? I refer to the expression as used in the following manner: The instructions were followed to a T?"

The authorities differ on the answer to this question. According to one well known etymologist, we have the term as a contraction of the expression "to a title," the last word of which means the smallest possible amount or fraction.

However, we are inclined to lean more to the idea that we have the phrase after a carpenter's tool or instrument known as the T square which is used for the purpose of making parallel lines.

We believe that it is from this source that we have the expression written "to a T" without quotation marks, of course, as a metaphorical allusion to preciseness and exactitude.

Call for Definition of Still Small Voice

The case of the woman who has advertised for the owner of a gold pin set with small diamonds which she found 25 years ago, is described as one of troubled conscience. Through a quarter of a century the woman must have been stilling the small voice within her that was reminding her that she was keeping something which was not hers and which she was making no effort to return to its owner.

What is this conscience which abides with all human beings and compels us to acts which we do not wish to perform? The dictionary definition is of no help in answering the question. "The knowledge of our own acts and feelings as right or wrong" explains nothing. The difference between right and wrong is so often a personal one, and when a person wishes to justify an act of his to himself it is generally easy. Wrong can be made to appear right to oneself if self-interest is allowed to become paramount. But despite the justification, conscience is never wholly stifled.

It nags and nags at one and gives no peace until, like the woman with the pin, it finally forces what may be called confession. The cynical Talleyrand said that to be happy a man should have a good digestion and no conscience. Possibly, but if it is so, practically no one is truly happy. Conscience may undoubtedly be fostered and what troubles one generation may not trouble another. But conscience is a fixed part of ourselves, something which is born with us. It is of the moral order of the universe, a monitor implanted within us by a Supreme Power.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

MOTHERS ARE LEARNING USES OF MAGNESIA

From the beginning of expectancy until baby is weaned, Phillips' Milk of Magnesia performs the greatest service for many women.

It relieves nausea, heartburn, "morning sickness," inclination to vomit; helps digestion. Its mild laxative action assures regular bowel movement.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is better than lime water for neutralizing cow's milk for infant feeding.

All drugstores have Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in generous 25c and 50c bottles. Always insist on the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

Sent Suit to Waxen Effigy

Just before his recent visit to this country, Sir Thomas Lipton went to Madame Tussaud's museum in London, which is famed for its collection of wax effigies of famous men, with the object of inspecting the figure of himself which had just been put on view. Sir Thomas at once took exception to the manner in which the figure was clothed, and the next day he sent one of his own yachting suits down to the museum with the request that the figure be put in it, which was promptly done. The manager of the place said that the new suit fitted the dummy to a "T."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Well brethren, the three epidemics are all past now—Hallowe'en, taxes and the election. No casualties. Let's all arise and sing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

But what ever discrepancies that the last week's activities have left we can rest assured that the three following events will help even the effects thus made when Thanksgiving, Christmas and New Year sweeps in and out.

If prosperity has been waiting on the passing of the hallo–tax–election combination before it showed up, then we ought to hear prosperity pee-wee chirp most any time now.

Speaking of hard times, we can well remember that our predicament is as wide as the world which removes the lonely feeling that we are all alone in this mess.

Never-the-less we will expect our county officers elected to establish prosperity in DeKalb County regardless of world conditions. The township officials will take due notice thereof also.

Since prosperity is more of a psychological attainment than an economic and spiritual attainment the newly elected officials will see to it that us constituants receive protoplastic balm needed in these "dark ages."

Trappers say that the fur-bearing animals are wearing their furs short this year which gives us the traditional assurance that we are to have an open winter this year and next. Fine. Now he can have a spasm of open winter and closed pocketbooks.

But what worries us most is the fast that we don't know what the capaign true story tellers are going to work at now. We will now have another bunch of unemployed to join the W. W. W's.

The W. W. W's. are not the I. W. W's. Neither does the W. W. W's. mean, We Want Women. The three W's mean We Want Work to support the women we already have got. To support these faithful household necessities We Want Wages.

We know that W. W. W's. don't mean we want wine and whiskey.

The Ohio–Indiana basket ball league officials met at the Community Gym on Tuesday, October 28 to plan for the coming season.

St. Joe is fortunate to be included in this league as it is composed of the best teams of Northeastern Indiana and Northwestern Ohio. Fourteen games will be played by each team, seven at home and seven away from home. The services of the best referees in this part of the state have been secured in order to insure an impartial verdict in these games.

The St. Joe Independents have a good team this year composed of some of last year's members plus some new material that looks good. Mr. Byers, Ronald Zonker and Clifton Draggoo are among the new members to be added. The first game will be played at Hicksville on Tuesday, November 25.

RISING GASOLINE TAXES OPPOSED

At the present time every state levies a tax against gasoline, ranging from two to six cents a gallon, and it is forecast that the total revenue this year will reach the record sum of $550,000,000. Gasoline is subjected to the largest sales tax of any commodity, with the possible exception of cigarettes.

However, many legislators are not satisfied even with this. Campaigns are underway, in a number of States–notably Louisiana, West Virginia, Maine, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Washington, Nebraska and Colorado–to push the tax rates still higher. In the beginning, when gas taxes were only one or two cents a gallon, it was a popular form of taxation with the public and apparently many officials still believe that "one cent more won't make any difference."

There are unmistakable signs that the public, long patient, is tiring of excessively high rates and perrenial increases. The voters of North Dakota recently refused to increase the tax from three to four cents a gallon, and the disapproving voice of the public has been heard in other states.

'IS FAIR PLAY PASSING?' GAME OFFICIALS ASK

Is the spirit of fair play and true sportsmanship passing with man? Is a desire to protect and restore wild bird, animal and fish life instinctive, or should one expect to find it only in a generation raised from childhood in an atmosphere of the out-of-doors? These are some of the questions "Old Timers" and educators are asking.

Violations of game laws are increasing, according to reports received from many state game departments by officials of the American Game Protective Association.

Numerous arrests are made and heavy fines often are imposed for shooting bob-white, quail, pheasants, squirrels, and other game species out of season. Many hunters take more game in season than they are allowed. Many persons hunt at night with searchlight or torch—all of this is illegal. As well as unfair, officials point out.

Large seine nets are used illegally to make huge catches of fish. Some anglers poach on waters that are closed in order to give some fish species a chance to increase. Numerous fishermen take undersized fish that should be put back into the water until they have reached maturity.

Such practices are not only illegal—but they are unsportsmanlike. Game laws have been passed during recent years to protect the wildlife of this nation. The closed season is one way to restore game by protecting it.

No doubt many violators, however, are sportsmen and conservationists at heart, and their criminal acts result from ignorance of conservation, restoration methods and protective laws. Many of these can be converted into real sportsmen if every agency and individual working for community betterment will teach the high ideals of conservation is the Composite opinion as expressed by state and national conservation officials.

PLEASANTLY SURPRISED ON ANNIVERSARY

Cecil Likes was very pleasantly surprised Sunday when he came home finding the house filled with guests and a bounteous dinner awaiting him. The occasion being in honor of Cecil's nineteenth birthday which was last Friday.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Likes and children, Glenn, Alvin, Mary and baby Joann, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. D. Seigman and baby, Lila Jean, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Lindley, Russell Griffin, Charles B. Lawson and Mrs. Virginia Lawson in whose home the dinner was held, and the guest of honor and wife and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Cecil Likes and Mary Virginia.

The dinner consisted of fried chicken, mashed potatoes, sweet potatoes, gravy, cold slaw, potato salad, beet pickles, celery, light and dark cake, fruit salad, bread, butter, apple butter and coffee.

Everybody enjoyed the day and also the dinner. Cecil received several very nice presents.

OBITUARY

Elijah Inhofe, son of Robert and Lydia Saylor Inhofe, was born at Hayasville, Ohio, September 8, 1847 and departed this life at his home in Butler, Indiana, October 27, 1930, aged 83 years, 1 month and 20 days.

The deceased was united in marriage on June 3, 1869 to Mary E. Reasoner and to this union were born three children, Ora D. Inhofe of near Butler, Mrs. Nevada Wyatt of near Butler and Mrs. Lula Armstrong of St. Joe.

Following the death of his companion he was again united in marriage, in the spring of 1911 to Mrs. Ann Akins, who also preceded him in death and on April 27, 1924 he was united in marriage to Mary E. Inks of Nappanee who survives him.

In the year 1863 Mr. Inhofe heard his country's call and enlisted in Company H, 88th Indiana Volunteer Infantry where he served during the remainder of the Civil War. Upon his return home to Newville, Indiana he engaged in occupation of farming which pursuit he followed for many years until advanced age prevented him from hard labor when he removed to Butler where he has since been a resident loved and respected by all who knew him.

He was a member of the G. A. R. Post of Butler and the Masonic and Eastern Star Lodges of Butler.

In the year 1913 he united with the United Brethren Church at Newville during the pastorate of Rev. Shilling and later was transferred to the Butler United Brethren Church, of which church he was a member when he passed to his reward.

The deceased is survived by his loved companion, and the three children and seven grandchildren and twelve great grandchildren, besides other relatives and friends.

The funeral services were conducted from the Newville U. B. Church on last Thuraday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. B. F. Parker from Butler officiating assisted by Rev. W. Roudebush, the local pastor. Burial was made in the Newville cemetery, E. R. Kinsey funeral director.

CLUBS

LADIES LITERARY CLUB

Ghostliness, weirdness, and mystery—such was the atmosphere last Friday evening when the Ladies Literary Club entertained their husbands at a very unique Hallowe'en Party.

The members of the committee masked as ghosts and conducted their guests secretly from the darkness and gloom of the St. Joe Ball Park to the country home of Miss Violet May. Here they were enticed by several ghosts to enter the deep unknowns of the cellar. "Ghost" May officiated while the crowd experienced the gruesomeness of being "buried alive."

To add to the horror already produced "Ghost" Woodcox, very dramatically told the story of the negro lynching at Marion. At the opportune time a curtain was raised and there before the terrified eyes of the spectators hung two negroes—properly lynched. Weird music made the scene much more effective.

The guests were then taken to the living rooms which were decorated profusely by Hallowe'en suggestions—pumpkins, cats, corn shocks, and witches. Here many Hallowe'en stunts and games were enacted. Much merriment was the outcome of an attempt to identify each masked person. From whence cometh all this strange apparel?

As the hour of eating drew near the guests were spirited upstairs by a ghost who gave this inviting welcome "Enter here at your own risk!"

Clever tombstone place cards were at the tables and the "grave" centerpieces contained the "remains" of the L. L. C. The guests were by this time ready to enjoy the luncheon which consisted of sandwiches, fruit salad, doughnuts, pumpkin pie and whipped cream, olives, pickles and coffee.

CULTURE CLUB

Words almost fail to express the enjoyable time indulged in by the ladies of the Culture Club at a Hollowe'en Fete, held Wednesday eve, October 29th with Mrs. Roy Bowser as hostess.

The committee, Mrs. Edith Sailer, Mrs. Floy Smith, Mrs. Dessie Hurni, together with the hostess, determined to do away with the period of boredom started the evening's frolic by stationing a Weird Spectre, who with much difficulty, finally succeeded in convincing each one, as they arrived, that the only available entrance was through a large truck tire arranged by the committee.

After screams of laughter and much hesitancy an the part of some of the overweights, an attempt was made, and with the magic aid of the Spectre all went safely through and landed on a springy bed of ehse. From this they were ushered, by the hostess, into beautifully decorated rooms and were greeted by ghosts and hobgoblins, after which they marched around the Witch's Caldron to receive their fortunes.

Contests of the evening consisted in corn-shelling, guessing of the characters represented, and what would you do if you lived in a graveyard. A lively progressive game showed the artistic talent of the guests and finished the evening's entertainment.

The arrangement of the tables, and a palatable lunch consisting of pumpkin face sandwiches, individual pumpkin pies with whipped cream, golden glow salad, pickles, coffee and cider, proved the artistic and culinary ability of the hostess.

A vote of thanks was extended to the hostess and committee in appreciation of their efforts, after which all expressed their feeling that the evening will be one long to be remembered.

FARM YOUTH SPOTLIGHTED AT CHICAGO STOCK SHOW

Boys and girls of rural America will next month share the limelight of the agricultural world that will be directed upon Chicago on the occasion of the nation's premier livestock show, the International Live Stock Exposition, which will be held at the Chicago Stock Yards, November 29 to December 6.

According to Secretary B. H. Heide of the exposition, the number of young people taking part in this national gathering will be increased this year from 1000 to 1400. They will come from 43 states as well as the province of Ontario, to participate in the contests, demonstrations, meetings, and banquets that are a part of the National 4–H Club Congress held within the gates of the International.

Free Trips Offered

Most of the boys and girls will receive free trips to this event as rewards for outstanding accomplishments in 4–H Club work in their home states and counties. These trips are given by organizations and individuals who are interested in the worthy accomplishments of these farm youths and girls, who are not only educating theselves to better methods of farming and housekeeping, but whose work reacts to the benefit of the communities from which they come.

The International Live Stock Exposition, with its Junior Live Stock Feeding Contests, its Junior Live Stock Judging Contests, its Junior Corn Show, and the 4–H Club Congress within its gates, has, of recent years, become the nation's leading conclave f youthful activity, as well as the country's foremost livestock show.

Low Fares For All

Although many of the young people who will visit the International will have earned free trips, the railroads have made it easier for everyone to visit the exposition by granting reduced round trip fares to Chicago at this time, the management announces.

CHECK UP ON CORN TESTING PLOTS

There will be a demonstration meeting at the corn borer farm one mile north of Auburn on Friday, November 7th to look over the corn variety and fertilizer plots that have been planted to determine what variety of corn is best for DeKalb County conditions. Through the co-operation of P. T. Ulman and the corn borer research department Purdue University it has been possible to carry on this work this year. There will be some very striking difference brought out and every farmer who is interested in increasing his income from corn should come and study the results.

This corn demonstration was planted on a field that has been limed and a heavy crop of sweet clover plowed under last fall. These different varieties were of fertilizer alike, and it will be very interesting to see how the different varieties of the corn will respond under dry conditions as they have been this year. County Agent, E. E. Stinson and H. R. Muller, representative of the corn borer research department from Purdue will be there to explain the results of the demonstration. 100 hills on every variety will be husked and placed at the end of the row for comparison. The discussion will start at 1:30 prompt so that you may get all the information in a short while.

ROWE ISSUES CHALLENGE TO YOUTH

The ninth annual conference of the DeKalb County young people was held in the Church of Christ at Garrett and goes down in our county's religious history as one of the best ever held. From the standpoint of spiritual attainments, this conference was marked for its consecration of young lives to the cause of christianity.

H. C. Rowe put the finishing touches to the conference with a fine address, "Youth in Quest" which was a climax to Mr. Rowe's career as an inspirer of young people in the upward direction.

The following are a few thoughts from his address:

"Every young person in the world makes three major choices in life—personality, life work and a life mate. Many people call life a lottery, in which all things happen by chance, and do not present themselves to the judgment of the individual until too late. This idea is erroneous. Tis true that there are a few cases in life where things turn out contrary to expectations but in most cases all the spilled milk and beans of life are the direct and indisputable results of premeditated bad choices made by all young people. Life is sagging with its enormous load of misfits in all professions—created and brought into existence by free and undisturbed individual choice. All of the earth's inquirers who ask of themselves and others the true paths of life fall into two classes. Those who ask how much harm there is in this or that thing and those who logically ask which is the best course to pursue regardless of the social results and the sacrifices. The trial vocational pursuits of sort duration all point to the fact that young people fail to choose early the right path. Failure, not the result of chance but failure—the result of a bad choice when they knew better and could have done otherwise if they had wanted to.

This old moth eaten alibi that you have become a failure because of your brother, sister, mother, father, aunt, uncle, cousin, niece, nephew, step father, step mother, step aunt, step uncle, foster or adopted relatives is all old arguments of bad repute. They are not responsible for your success, are they? Then why should they be responsible for your failures? You are the one that is responsible for yourself. Chas. Lindburgh and Hickman were both raised in the same community and chose to be just what they wanted to be and they proved the fact by their lives that they chose for themselves. Twenty-six of our presidents came from poverty row but that did not keep them from choosing the right path. They were what they wanted to be. You will be what you want to be. Blind fate, a hunch or a good break has nothing to do with success. You manufacture your own good and bad breaks—you are your own wrecking crew or builder—its up to you. As a matter of fact there are grown up people in the world that are quitters and failures, only because they didn't have the gumption and spunk and grit to say no to the crowd when it went wrong, but went with it. I have a lot of respect for any young girl who refuses to marry a question mark for a man—she has a chance to find out for herself. It is better for a girl to live with and talk to parrots and cats all her life than to sell out to a man of no aim in life. Sure you have a fight. Let any one who thinks that there will not be a fight to live a clean life, step up and try it. Do I believe in a personal devil? Absolutely. I have transacted business with the old boy myself. I know him. There is no argument about it. There must be a devil if there is a God. And if God works for me and my best interests the devil must certainly work against me. Young people who stand alone are ridiculed by the bums but they are cheered by the decent element. Don't be afraid. Dare to be your own clean self"

HORSE SENSE

A place for everything and everything in its place is worth a lot when you want to find something.

"Apples at meals and at bedtime serve as an excellent laxative and thus make an end to headaches by removing the cause."
—Dr. John Harvey Kellogg.

Fall and early winter are ideal seasons to destroy rats and mice. Barium carbonate with an attractive bait is effective, but where the bait is to be used about the poultry house or wherever domestic animals will be near, red squill is a safe poison to use.

The hen which is still laying will be worth putting into a special breeding pen next spring. Mark her now with a leg band.

Mulch strawberries in the fall after the ground is frozen, with three inches of straw. This tends to prevent winter killing or heaving out of plants, and aids in keeping the berries clean during picking season.

The foundation of the house is nothing of which the owner need feel ashamed, and there is no law of good plant design which requires that it be completely hidden by planting.

Tankage self-fed to hogs that are running in standing corn will increase the gains about one-third, compared with hogging off corn alone.

If there is hardpan near the surface of the soil, don't blow a hole through it in order to plant trees—locate your orchard elsewhere.

It is possible to distinguish between a squash and a pumpkin, although some people maintain that it cannot be done. The squash has a round stem and a protruding blossom end; the pumpkin has an angular stem and a depressed blossom end.

Apples ripen almost twice as fast when held in storage at 50 degrees as at 45 degrees; and twice as fast at 40 degrees as at 32 degrees. Therefore it is important to keep the storage temperature low.

No plant should be given a place on the home grounds merely because of its odd appearance.

In the central west, practically all corn borers winter as full grown borers, or larvae, in corn residues. This offers an important point to direct controls.

Chicken manure is better used on raspberries than on strawberries.

Toamto juice is a healthful drink. It should be found on the shelf of every modern grocery and in the ice box of every home.

Oats are equal to corn for fattening lambs when one pound of cottonseed meal is fed to every twelve pounds of oats, other feeds in the ration being corn silage and clover hay.

Further information on any of the above subjects may be obtained from the Purdue University Agricultural Experiment Station.

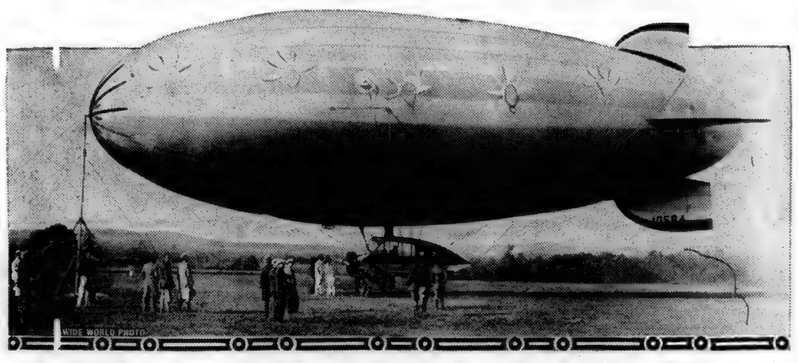
Scene of the Wedding of Boris and Giovanna

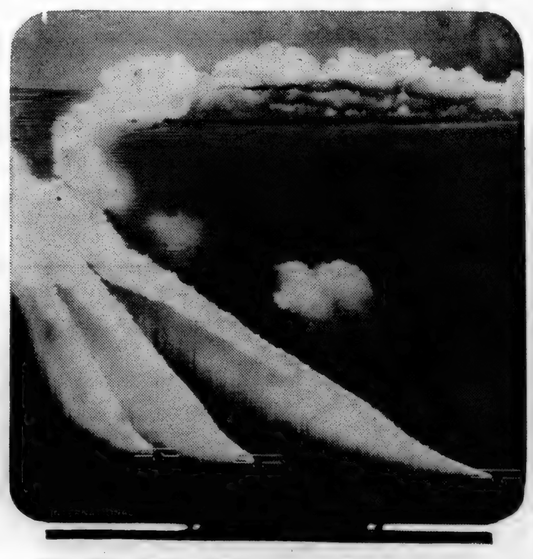
The age-mellowed beauty of medieval times is exemplified in this scene of the interior of the church of St. Francis at Assisi, Italy, where King Boris of Bulgaria married Princess Giovanna of Italy. The church was built in 1228 shortly after the death of the beloved saint. The immortal artist, Giotto, and his pupils painted the frescoes here shown which are still in an excellent state of preservation.

Capt. Anton Heinen's Air Yacht Baby Blimp



Here is the baby blimp designed and built by Capt. Anton Heinen and first shown to the public at the All Eastern air races at Trenton, N. J. This "flying yacht" is about 100 feet long and carries eight persons. It may be made in quantity for private use.

Beautiful Smoke Screen on Navy Day



Three planes whizzing through the air leaving in their wake graceful billows of smoke which extend to the water, making an effective curtain with which to hide ships from the enemy in time of war. These maneuvers were part of the Navy day program on October 27, at Washington.

For TEETHING troubles

FUSSY, fretful . . . . of course babies are uncomfortable at teething time! And mothers are worried because of the little upsets which come so suddenly then. But there's one sure way to comfort a restless, teething child. Castoria — made especially for babies and children! It's perfectly harmless, as the formula on the wrapper tells you. It's mild in taste and action. Yet it rights little upsets with a never-failing effectiveness.

That's the beauty of this special children's remedy! It may be given to tiny infants—as often as there is need. In cases of colic and similar disturbances, it is invaluable. But it has every-day uses all mothers should understand. A coated tongue calls for a few drops to ward off constipation; so does any suggestion of bad breath. Whenever older children don't eat well, don't rest well, or have any little upset, a more liberal dose of this pure vegetable preparation is usually all that's needed. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. Doctors prescribe it.

Hotter Than Sun

During its brief life, a 20,000-volt spark of electricity is 59 per cent hotter than the sun and 100 times as bright. These conclusions have been reached through an analysis of the electric spark at the University of California with a camera whose shutter operates in one billionth of a second.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Lucky Stroke

Hubby—Great guns, our poor relations have made a fortune in oil.

Wifey—How fortunate. Now we can pay back their visits.

People who love to call a spade a spade are always dragging the conversation over to the subject of spades.

"When I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I could hardly do my housework. I was so nervous and weak from Change of Life that I had to lie down very often. I heard about the Vegetable Compound through a pamphlet which was left at my door. I am doing all the housework for a family of four and it keeps me on my feet. I have taken six bottles and I have gained strength and flesh."—Minnie E. Hicks.

She wakened old Annie, gave her money and sent her over to the hotel with the message.

* * * * * * *

They had a long talk on the beach that afternoon. Ernestine told Will everything, all that she had thought and felt, all that had happened the day before—Loring's talk with her, the murder car at Pastano's, her revulsion of feeling, how she had come home, and how, in the night, while she slept, everything had straightened out for her. Will lay beside her in silence, her hand in his, and again and again as she talked her fingers were pressed against his lips. They were back again in the cradle of love—rocked in magic which overcame all difficulties and healed all misunderstandings.

He told her then about himself and about what he had been through.

"I've made ten or eleven different developments of Poole's cartoon, altering them all, and I've made each one up for about six weeks, and planned the continuity out beyond that time, but I can't sell them. When I sat down to write to you what was there to say? I would resolve to try again, hoping to have some wonderful news for you. I've not been eating or sleeping—I missed you so, and I repented so my selfishness with you, and my attitude toward your family. I've not been reasonable, or fair—or generous. I felt that you were slipping away from me, because I couldn't hold you—because I didn't rate you."

These pictures moved Ernestine profoundly. Weeks of work, and nothing sold. The fear of losing her and the children, and the need to stick at the thing he was trying to do until he did it. She could feel in him a sharp pain of restlessness and discouragement, and her love poured out on him.

"Darling—it doesn't matter. I can stay here with mamma all summer. She understands. I can stay here until you get your comic strip right. They understand that it's you and I together always, Will."

"Don't cry, darling."

"It doesn't mean a thing," she told him and added with some whimsicality, "it's my condition, darling. I am simply weepy, and when I think how near I came to doing something that would have ruined all my life and yours—"

"You couldn't—you didn't—not even nearly, Ernestine."

Peter had come up to them, and, seeing his mother's tears, he began to wail loudly, and Elaine crowded close and thrust out a trembling lip. Will drew their attention from Ernestine, and gravely, abstractedly, he began to amuse them. He marked out the old familiar squares.

"Make a cat, Daddy—make a cat," commanded Peter, and Will, listening to Ernestine, but only half attentive, began to put down the cats that Peter loved so, the squares for a drawing board, a bit of stick for a pencil, the firm wet sand making a good plaque.

The child screamed with joyous mirth, and Elaine, beside him, clapped her hands with delight.

"Tabby cat's got his head stuck in a tin can. Look, Mamma!"

Will's attention swerved from Ernestine. He sat staring at what he had drawn, as though at a stranger's work. His face wore a startled look. The small squares, in which two ridiculous cats went through a ridiculous adventure. Suddenly he leaped to his feet and gave a whoop which a Comanche Indian might have envied.

"Don't worry—our fortune is made. Can't you see—there it is. Not Mr. Poole's old comic strip in any way, shape or form, but my own darned old cats? Even the children can see it. Trust me a few days longer."

* * * * * * *

The cats were a great success. When fall came Will was working on the Sun again, in Mr. Poole's old office, under a three-year contract. The cat drawings were valued at sixty dollars a strip the first year, and more the second and third. Six days a week at sixty dollars a day. A full page for the Sunday supplement, in colors, at a special price. The tide of money and prestige poured in on them in a startling way. The movie people made attractive offers. Will knew how to make animated movies.

The Todds moved into a Colonial home only about a mile from mamma's. They had rented the house "to see how they liked it" with the possibility of buying it in their minds. Will offered the West side house in on a trade, but Ernestine would not sell the little house.

"You never can tell," she insisted, and though Will laughed at this, he did not resist her tenderness toward the house.

Papa established the trust funds. Money poured in upon them in the ridiculous and unreasonable way in which money behaves. It seemed now that nothing was too nice for the Todds. The new baby was born under the most promising conditions, in the Colonial room in the modern and beautiful home. A boy, long limbed and with a pointed face, like Will's.

Lillian was with Ernestine every day, and Ernestine noticed for the first time that Lillian's beauty was fading. She hung over the new baby, she was gentle with Peter and Elaine, who visited their mother at every possible moment. Once when the two had been watching the nurse bathe the newcomer and wrap him deftly in binder and cloth, turning him about in her hands while he gave soft grunts and sighs of satisfaction, and then at last tucked him in snowy flannelette into the curve of Ernestine's arm, with a little spank and tender scolding, Lillian looked at Ernestine with tears in her eyes.

"I wish," she said, "that it had been this baby's birth that Loring knew about." Her voice trailed away and Ernestine tingled with a sense of guilt. So that was why Lillian had no children!

"It's hard for people who haven't children to understand how quickly all the woes of bearing them are forgotten. I never think of that old time any more, and I'm sure Will doesn't. Anyhow—if it had been worse, don't you think Elaine was worth it?"

"Yes," said Lillian, "of course she is. But it was a dreadful time, Ernestine. I don't believe you have ever known how near you came to dying. It was a terrible time for all of us."

"After all," smiled the younger sister, "in such a case an inch is as good as a mile. That whole dark time—it was all so wrong, apparently, for me to have that second baby, and now wild horses couldn't tear her from us. You can't always plan things out."

Later, Will came in, and found Ernestine alone.

"Remember that murder car you saw at Pastano's last summer?"

"Of course, I'll never forget it."

"Well, the new district attorney has arrested six of Pastano's relatives. It seems those men were killed in a fight with another bunch of gangsters. But these fellows were Pastano's men, and the next night they got the others with a machine gun, and now they're all locked up—both gangs. Loring has undertaken to get bail for them and get them off. Of course, it's quite respectable in Chicago to defend the most notorious criminal before the bar, but mamma doesn't like this. It was too close to home."

Ernestine could not help but smile at the twist Will could give to that word "mamma." Yet strangely, her mother and her husband had arrived at a basis of mutual understanding and liking since Will had been making his comic strip. Will said mamma was right about things. "Of course she wanted her daughter to marry a good provider," exclaimed Will, "just as you will want Elaine to marry a man who can take care of her. Mamma Briceland is too good a mother to be satisfied with less. And besides, she's pragmatic. She's got something to be proud of now, and delighted to have it. I tell you, Ernestine, I think Loring has worn it a bit thin, with his greediness and bossiness and always reminding them that he made papa rich."

Ernestine wondered if she would want Elaine to marry a good provider, and suddenly she felt in her heart a strong loyalty to the difficulties that had beset their ways.

"I don't care whether the children are rich or poor," she told Will. "But I want them to love and suffer, and to have hardships—I want them to live—and value life. I do, Will. I don't want it to be easy for them. Having things too easy is one form of poverty when you think about it."

CHAPTER XIII

Hankerings

Prosperity was good for Will. He worked regular hours. He looked fresh and well. He adored the children and enjoyed them more than he ever had, and no woman ever had a more loverlike husband than Ernestine. Two or three times a week they went to the theater, or to concerts, satisfying a long-starved hunger for beauty of sight and sound, for movement and color. Ernestine had picked up easily the old threads of social contact, as though she had been living in another city all this while. The old friends closed around her as naturally as though she had never been far from them, and in a little while the jargon, the familiar jokes, the odd intimacies were back with her again.

The money flowed in uncontrollably. They bought a second car, and there were beautiful clothes, new jewels and furs for Ernestine, charge accounts, a pony stabled at an expensive riding academy for the children. They talked of buying the house they were in, but already it seemed small. Will thought he would like to be nearer the lake and farther north. He felt that they needed more room.

One day in the fall when "Billy the Baby" was two years old, Ernestine entertained her bridge club and that afternoon seemed to her a perfect example of what life might be for a woman. She was proud of her home, proud of her thin china, her beautiful silver, her gracious friends. The new maid was well trained. The cook, stimulated by flattery, had outdone herself. The children came in and spoke to the guests who all exclaimed over them. They went out with their nurse to walk to the lake. Even Lillian, who had become silent and remote since her last trip to New York, displayed some of her old gay spirits. The talk fell into happy reminiscence of their childhood and girlhood.

After the guests were gone and Ernestine was helping the maid to tidy the living room, putting cushions in place, folding the card table covers, as the girl set the furniture back, Lillian stayed on, lying back in a chair of red velvet, her fair head pressed against the fabric, her arm hanging laxly over the side of the chair, smoking a cigarette, watching Ernestine. As the maid went out with the tables and covers and a tray of ash boxes, Ernestine flung herself down with an exclamation of weariness. Lillian astonished her.

"What's the matter with Will, kitten?"

"Why—he's all right. He's a little thin, but he'll pick up. He always loses weight in hot weather."

"But it's October now. It hasn't been really hot for weeks. I saw him on North Clark street today while I was waiting in the car for Loring, who was visiting one of his Greeks. He came and talked to me. He looked very white and thin, I thought—and his eyes were too bright—feverish. You must give him milk and eggs. Will is the type, linear I think you call it, that runs easily into T. B. He's indoors too much."

Ernestine was silent, thinking swiftly. "Will's all right, I think," she said a little shortly, but she looked grave. Lillian arched her brows in disbelief, but said no more. After a while she left in her own car, while Ernestine sat on the big couch the silk and satin pillows, the wide low room with its charming furniture and carved fireplace forgotten in an instant.

What was Will doing on North Clark street? He and Mr. Poole had had an office there long ago. Will had been strange of late.

Silver Hoard Put Away by Romans Unearthed

At Caerleon in Monmouthshire, where, a Roman legionary fortress stood to keep the Welsh marches for the Caesars in the Third century, excavators digging there unearthed some interesting secrets.

The one that is the oddest is that of the three centurions of the Second Augustan legion whose names, Quintinus Aquila, Vibius Proculus, and Vibius Severus, have been newly found. One of them must have been a hard-faced man who had done very well out of the war (like some men of a later day).

Whether it was hidden by Quintinius Aquila or by one of the two named Vibius we may never know; but beneath the floor of the quarters of one of these three centurions was a hoard of 280 silver coins. They may have been wrung from the neighboring Britons. Perhaps they were part of the military chest of the soldiers.

Some of the companies of the legion about that time appear to have been given marching orders for the north, where they were to take part in the work on Hadrian's wall.

Irish Finds Prehistoric

Discovery of a prehistoric cemetery in County Meath, Irish Free State, is believed to prove that there are still many interesting finds in this former seat of the ancient kings of Ireland. Antiquarians declare that the rich pasture lands cover valuable relics of the time when all roads led to Tara and great gatherings were held on the plains of Meath.

RECD. 6PM. NOV-11-1918 MARECHAL FOCH.

The words contained in this message threw the world into a frenzy of joy on that eventful morning of November 11, 1918, the anniversary of which is being observed by the nations engaged in the World war. It is the late Marshal Foch's order halting hostilities on the front.

No longer cleaves the ruthless sword,
And gone is war's grim panoply,
Dead homes, dead men—and now, O Lord,
A moment's rest
'eside the monument that we
Have builded for ourselves, not thee.

The years shall dull our grief—and yet,
Though now the battle dust is lain,
Can we forget? Can we forget?
We need thee, Lord,
For thine the boon that tears of pain
Once shed shall not be shed again.
—Albert J. Cook, in American Legion Monthly.

How Soldiers Got the News

It was Monday, November 11, 1918, when hostilities came to an end from Switzerland to the sea. Twelve years ago at eleven o'clock of the eleventh day of the eleventh month—"Finis la guerre."

It was a memorable day, a more memorable moment when, at the stroke of eleven, the noise of cannon stopped, machine guns grew still, and rifles ceased to crack. For the first time in four years the air was free from flying missiles, and there was quiet on the tortured face of a war-torn land.

Over here, one remembers the noise which accompanied the wildest delirium of celebration the country ever has known. But what lingers in the mind of every man who was a member of the A. E. F. in France is the moment of deafening silence which punctuated the end of the war.

There could be no noise of celebration to equal the roar of the war which certain members of the American expeditionary forces had been engaged in. They had been listening to the granddaddy of all noises, louder noises and more of them than ever had been heard in the history of the world. So it is not the noise which is memorable to the American soldiers who were at the front twelve years ago; it is the sudden, complete cessation of all noise.

Good News Flies Fast.

Along the twenty-seven miles of front held by Americans, firing continued literally until the eleventh hour. Word of the impending armistice had spread faster than the flu during the epidemic. None of the doughboys believed it at first. They had heard the same thing before. It was just one of those rumors. Only the preceding Thursday night—the night the envoys came over from Spa—some one had passed the word that the armistice had been signed and there had been a small flurry of excitement, lights where there should be no lights and indiscriminate firing of arms resulting in hard-voiced reprimands.

But this time it was true. From the wireless station on the Eiffel tower in Paris Marshal Foch's order to cease firing at eleven o'clock had gone out into the air to the half-incredulous line which the Americans held from near Sedan to the Moselle.

The high command had a notion of passing the wonderful order along in a military manner, to have the corps report it calmly by wire to the divisions, the divisions to the brigades, the brigades to the regiments, the regiments to the battalions, and so on until every member of every squad knew about it. But it did not work out that way.

The news spread by that form of wireless known to man long before Marconi was born. It started early in the morning with the first blush of dawn. It ran along a thousand mess lines of men shivering and stamping in the mud, clattering their mess gear and clamoring for chow. Truck drivers shouted it to one another on the roads. Dispatch riders flung the words over their shoulders as they kicked the stands of their motorcycles into place and turned on the gas. So over winding, battered roads, into kitchens, camions, hospitals, ammunition dumps, gun emplacements, dugouts and barracks went the tremendous news—"Finis la guerre. Eleven o'clock."

With this knowledge in mind, the war went on in a final burst of reckless abandon. Everyone wanted to have a hand in it before it ended. It is told how at one point where a Yankee outfit was having a brisk battle on the east of the Meuse a man stationed at one battery stood with a handkerchief in his uplifted hand, a watch in the other. It wanted one minute of eleven o'clock. In front of him were the guns of the battery, four of them. Attached to each lanyard was a long rope, manned by gunners, cooks, signalmen, soldiers, messengers, stragglers, everybody. At eleven o'clock the handkerchief fell, the men pulled and the battery fired its last shot. And so it was, at hundreds, thousands of places along the line.

Stopped Fierce Action.

Probably the hardest fighting being done by the Americans in the final hour of the war was that which engaged the troops of the Twenty-eighth, Ninety-second, Eighty-first and Seventh divisions with the Second American army. They had launched an attack above Vigneulles just before dawn. It was no tea party. They knew nothing of any order to cease firing, and were hard at it when word reached them just in time, brought to the edge of the battle front by runners scurrying from fox hole to fox hole.

Then, at the stroke of eleven, after every gun in the war seemed to have been fired simultaneously, some of them without any attempt at direction, silence—utter and absolute silence—fell upon the land. It was as if the world had suddenly died. Men looked at one another bewildered. But only for a moment. Then—

Every man in the A. E. F. threw down his tools of war. A slow grin spread over his face. And then he yelled. At that moment every one was slightly befuddled, slightly mad. Then another amazing thing happened.

The battered, torn landscape which a minute before had been as bare as the palm of your hand, became alive with men. They crawled up out of the earth, dirty, disheveled figures, and looked about them a good deal surprised to discover so many people in a place which had looked so deserted.

Fraternizing With Foe.

The Germans came up grinning, eager to swap caps and equipment for tobacco and food. A stranger with an all-observing eye looking down upon the scene at this moment would never have been able to tell from the looks of things which side had won the war.

And that night, for the first time since the war started, there was light, illumination other than the flare of guns, the burst of shells and the tapering beams of searchlights sweeping across the dark sky in search of hostile airplanes.

Now that the war was over the boys lit everything they could find. Screens were torn from windows and doors. A new moon shone. Rockets and flares were sent up to brighten the sky. And that night there was many a man who could not sleep. It was so d—n quiet.

Thus ended the five hundred and eighty-fifth day of America's participation in the war. That was twelve years ago. "Finis la guerre."

THOMAS, THE HONEST DOUBTER

LESSON TEXT—John 11:14-16; 14:5-8; 20:24-29; 21:1, 2.

GOLDEN TEXT—And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God.

PRIMARY TOPIC — Learning to Trust Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Thomas, the Man Who Wanted to Be Sure.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Learning to Trust Jesus.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Value and Peril of Doubt.

The name Thomas means "a twin." His alternate name, Didymus, means the same. From the linking of his name with Matthew in the listing of the disciples, it is commonly inferred that Thomas was a twin brother of Matthew.

Thomas is constantly presented in the Scriptures as a man of skeptical mind, yet of unquestioned character. He was an honest doubter. The Lord is not displeased when men put him to the test. No honest skeptic has ever been left in darkness. The truth of Christ's declaration still obtains, "If any man will do his will, he shall know" (John 7:17).

I. The Fidelity of Thomas (John 11:14-16).

When Lazarus, the beloved brother in the Bethany home, was sick, the distressed sisters, Mary and Martha, sent for Jesus because they had come to know him as more than a mere man. Jesus, after a strange delay, went to Bethany. He knew, and apparently the disciples knew, that going to Judea at this time meant death. His mission in going unto Judea was twofold: to strengthen the faith of the disciples (vv. 11-15), and to restore to these sisters their dead brother.

Jesus fearlessly discharged his duty, though his life had been threatened. He plainly declared that Lazarus was dead. Thomas was skeptical as to Jesus' ability to raise Lazarus from the dead. In spite of this fact, his loyalty moved him to cast his lot with Jesus.

II. Jesus, the Way to the Father's House (John 14:5-8).

Jesus asked the disciples to trust in him even as they trusted in God, assuring them that he was going to the Father's house and would come back and escort them to heaven. Christ asserted that he is:

1. The Way to God (v. 6).

Jesus is more than a mere guide to the Father's house or a teacher. He is the way itself.

2. The Truth (v. 6).

He is not merely the teacher of truth, but he is the truth incarnate. In him we have the truth about man, what he is and what he ought to be and what he shall be in the future. In him especially we have the truth about God. Only as Christ reveals God can men know him (John 1:18).

3. The Life (v. 6).

Christ is not merely the giver of life. He is the very essence of life.

III. Thomas Makes Absolute Demands (John 20:24-29).

1. Jesus manifests himself to the disciples, Thomas being absent (vv. 24, 25).

He was absent at Jesus' first appearance after the resurrection, just why, we may never know. His absence deprived him of a vision of the Lord. Absence from the assembly of believers always occasions loss. The other disciples went to Thomas with the glad news of the resurrection, but he did not believe their testimony. His stubborn disbelief was such that he doggedly declared that unless he saw the nail prints and put his finger therein and thrust his hand into the Lord's side he would not believe.

2. Jesus manifests himself to the disciples, Thomas being present (vv. 26-29).

Observe:

(1) The Lord's kindness to those who have difficulties (vv. 26, 27).

Thomas deserved rebuke, but the Lord quietly supplied the evidence demanded.

(2) The Lord reveals himself to Thomas (vv. 27, 28).

Upon this revelation of himself Thomas was transformed from a doubter to a confessor.

3. The superior blessing of believing without sight (v. 29).

Having patiently furnished Thomas with tangible evidence of his resurrection, Jesus instructed him that to believe in him without such tangible evidence as he demanded was a higher and better state of mind than his.

IV. Jesus Reveals Himself After the Resurrection (John 21:1, 2).

Thomas had learned his lesson. He was on hand the next time the Lord revealed himself.

RICHARD W. SHARPLESS

Decratic candiate for Prosecuting Attorney Wins by the Largest Majority 3,184 Votes

For Sale: 1930 Majestic Radio Model No. 93. Excellent condition. Geo. D. Stoll, Spencerville. 45tlp.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Martin of Fort Wayne, spent Sunday in the Geo. Simanton, Sr., home, the ladies being sisters.

Rev. Stoll attended the annual meeting of the South Conference of the Michigan Synod which was held at North Manchester on Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. V. Widney, of Columbia City, took Sunday dinner with Mrs. Alice Copp and in the afternoon were callers at the Mrs. Hattie Widney home.

Mr, and Mrs. R. J. Hillegas from Huntertown were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Buckingam, also Miss Mary Foltz and Mr. Chester Schofield from Defiance.

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company is arranging for 75,000 tons of steel rail for 1931 delivery. The rails and track fastenings will be delivered during the first five months of 1931 and the order represents an ultimate expenditure of $4,800,000.

Another class has been started in the children's department of the Lutheran Sunday School. The teacher is Miss Mary Curie. The teaching staff of the children's department consists of Mrs. Ray Reasoner, Miss Martha Miser, Miss Mary Curie, Mrs. Cora Curie, and Rev. Stoll.

About twenty guests arrived at the home of Cal Laux with well filled baskets Sunday morning, the occasion being the birthday anniversary of Harry Laux and Mrs. Dora Briner of Montpelier. Mrs. Irma Harper and daughter and Howard and Kenneth Means were afternoon callers and Royal Crousch of Blagesley was a supper guest.

Cy Kline had a narrow escape for his life last Wednesday evening as he was going home from Spencerville. He stated that a shot went through the wind shield of his car and just missed him, when he was near the school house. Just were the shot came from is not known, but the position indicated the north-east corner of the school building.

Although the number of motor vehicles registered in the United States increased 76 per cent in the seven years from 1923 to 1929, grade crossing fatalities during the same period have remained relatively constant, ranging between a minimum of 2,149 in 1924 and a maximum of 2,568 in 1928. The fundamental reason for this showing, is the organized and aggressive safety work of the railroads.

Chicago is called the Windy City or the City of the Winds because of its exposed situation on the margin of Lake Michigan and the frequent heavy winds blowing from the direction of the lake. A generation or two ago the most common nickname for Chicago was the Garden City, owing to the great number, extent and beauty of the public gardens and parks in the city. Chicago is also called Porkopolis in humorous allusion to its extensive pork-packing industry.

PURELY PERSONAL

Mrs. Virginia Lawson has been on the sick list for several days but is better at this writing.

A new double-track bridge 1,400 feet long will be built by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad across the Potomac River at Harper's Ferry, W. Va., to replace the present span at that point. The new bridge will consist of eleven deck-plate-girder spans, requiring 4,400,000 pounds of structural steel and 4,000 cubic yards of concrete. Work has been started. In addition to the new bridge, the line of railroad will be changed to afford easier crossing of the river by reducing the curvature and shortening the line. These improvements will cost $800,000.

First prize for individual newspaper stories in a county agents news writing contest has been won by B. V. Widney of Whitley County. The contest was held in connection with the annual extension conference held at Lafayette last week. L. M. Youngblood of Jennings County took first honors in a division for a series of articles published in a weekly newspaper, and B. V. Widney took second in this class. Considering the competition in all the classes the winners are due much credit.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, NOV. 13, 1930 — NUMBER 46

DRIVE FOR 1931 MEMBERS STARTS THIS WEEK

The campaign for 1931 members of the Indiana Farm Bureau started this week in district 2, consisting of the following counties: Allen, DeKalb, Elkhart, Kosciusko, Lagrange, Noble, Steuben, and Whitley.

There are ten farm bureau districts in the state and each one will put on an intensive campaign on consecutive weeks each starting on Monday and continuing until the following Friday. All the counties of a district will make their drives at the same time according to M. Cliff Townsend, state director of organization.

It is a new plan of membership campaign and it is expected to result in increasing the membership in every unit of the state. Volunteer solicitors met on Monday in each county and received instructions in making a house-to-house canvass by townships. The township in each county securing the most members in proportion to eligible families will be awarded a banner of honor.

"Never did the farmers need an organization as they do now and never was the Indiana Farm Bureau so well equipped to serve them," says Mr. Townsend. "A vest pocket membership certificate will be issued to each new member."

In the upstate districts members will be asked if they care to save a busel or more of seed corn to be given to a brother member in the drought stricken counties downstate.

A spirit of brotherly -love and helpfulness has been endangered by farmers coming in contact with one another through the medium of farm bureau meetings, say farm bureau officials. "Your moral support means the advancement of this noble cause," says W. H. Settle, president, in addressing farmers of the state. "The reverse means that the results of past years' labor would crumble and vanish. Farmers in the past have been called upon to meet many difficult situations and never have faltered and I have every reason to believe that this unstained record will be kept intact. The spirit of mutual hopefulness is the incentive that promotes all things useful to society in general. That is the foundation upon which the farm bureau is built."

The state membership for 1929 was 40,000. The state membership for 1930 was 43,000. The goal for 1931 is 51,000. DeKalb County membership, 1929 was 50. DeKalb County membership, 1930 was 415. DeKalb County Goal for 1931, is 600.

DeKalb County Drive started Tuesday, Nov. 11th, and ends Friday night with a Big Carry-in Supper. Election of officers. Music by Pumpkin Center Quartet, at the Commercial Club Rooms in Auburn. Ice cream and cake will be furnised by the DeKalb County Farm Bureau.

ELIJAH INHOFE LEAVES WILL DISPOSING ESTATE

The will of the late Elijah Inhofe, who died at Butler October 27, disposes of $4,500 in personal property and $1,650 in real estate. The heirs, according to letters of administration issued by the DeKalb circuit court, are the widow, Mary E. Inhofe of Butler, and three children, Ora D. Inhofe of Butler, Sarah N. Wyatt of R. F. D. Butler, and Ethel L. Armstrong of St. Joe.

To the son, Mr. Inhofe bequeathed his automobile and the parental home, the latter bequest being subject to the right of the widow to occupy the house for 3 years. The household goods were left to the two daughters in equal shares together with $150 each in cash. The widow is given $100 in cash. Mr. Inhofe recited that he and his wife entered an ante-nuptial agreement April 26, 1924, by the terms of which she was not to be a beneficiary of his estate.

The residue of the estate is left to the three children in equal shares. The son was nominated for executor.

The son qualified to act as executor by filing $9,000 bond, with Samuel Armstrong and S. S. Wyatt as sureties.

The program will consist of piano and vocal solos, readings, plays and impersonations.

No admission will be charged at the door. Free will offering. 46t1.

OBITUARY

William Howard Northrup, son of William and Angeline Thayer Northrup, was born in Ashtabula County, Ohio, December 14, 1854, and died in St. Joe, Indiana, November 8, 1930, aged 75 years, 10 months and 24 days.

Mr. Northrup was united in marriage with Mintie Andress, December 4, 1874, and to this union were born two sons and one daughter: Earl DeForest, who died in infancy; Thayer Andress, who died June 2, 1929, and Mrs. W. L. Hamilton, from whose residence the funeral was conducted. Mrs. Northrup died June 18, 1930, since which time Mr. Northrup has longed to go to her.

Mr. Northrup's father died when Howard was ten years old, and at the age of twelve he came to Indiana with his widowed mother, a younger brother and sister, and located in the Coburntown community where he spent the greater part of his active life.

After marriage he conducted a farm a little more than a mile east of Coburn's Corners, but later, he purchased a farm about the same distance north of the church, where for many years he conducted a fruit and truck farm, driving a team regularly to the Fort Wayne market. He was very energetic in business, and always contributed the full measure of strength to whatever he undertook.

Mr. Northrup united with Coburn's Corners Church of Christ, June 11, 1871, and associated with that congregation for many years, but when age and ill health compelled him to be less active in business he moved to St. Joe, and has since affiliated with the Church of Christ in that village. He always manifested a keen interest in religion, and had firm convictions in the Bible as a ground of faith. Since Mrs. Northrup's death he has been concerned with the question, "Shall we meet our loved ones over there?" This was for him a vital question, for all of his people, except one sister, Mrs. Lillian Dunn of Brooklyn, N. Y. and one daughter, Mrs. W. L. Hamilton who was with him until death, have preceded him into the eternities.

For the last ten years Mr. Northrup has been in ill health, and for the last six years has been unable to walk. With failing health came the irresistable desire to recover it, and in this pursuit he was as vigilant as he was in business. He first sought help in an institution in Benton Harbor, Michigan, but to no purpose. Later he drove to Hot Springs, New Mexico, remained there for several months, and their continued into California for a similar period. Mrs. Northrup and Thayer accompanied him on this long drive, more than nine thousand miles. But from all his travels in quest of health he returned without permanent results. Few have fought more courageously than he for life and health, but since his life companion was called from his side, he has prayed for an early departure to be with her. His call came on the morning of November 8, and he answered it in the faith of the Redeemer.

The funeral was held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Hamilton on Tuesday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Rev. J. N. Scholes officiated, assisted by J. O. Rose of Angola. Burial was made in the Alton cemetery by E. R. Kinsey.

REVIVAL SERVICES ATTRACT GREAT CROWDS

Packed to the doors, standing room at a premium and every available space for chairs being taken up, was the result of the large crowd on Monday evening at the M. E. revival services at Spencerville, and the capacity of the house being taxed frequently during the past week is an uncommon occurrance.

Workers from the Redacre tabernacle at Fort Wayne were present at the Monday evening meeting, which was responsible for the excessive audience but crowds of unusual size have characterized the meeting nightly since its beginning on November 2.

The local pastor, Rev. Homer J. Studabaker is putting forth every effort to make the services attractive and worth while and the music in charge of Rev. and Mrs. Thompson is appealing to the public, and, eac night special attention is given to the children when they render a part in each of the services.

Plans for next week have been announced for Ralph Rader and his staff of workers to be in the meeting.

The public is asked to attend.

STAMAN ROAD SOLD FOR $8,929.60

A contract for the construction of the Wm. Staman gravel road in Concord township was awarded by the county commissioners at their November term to Betts & Essinger of Columbia City, for $8,929.60.

Other bids were received as follows: Arthur Rosenberry of Butler, $10,700; Howard Stroh of Garrett, $9,765.85; Forder & Davis of Hicksville, $9,619.75; C. A. Studebaker of Uniondale, $10,250; Peter Shingledecker of Van Wert, O., $10,727.25; and Baker and Dunn of St. Joe, $10,231.37.

The estimate of County Surveyor Charles Miser was $11,881.60. The road is three miles in length.

When this road is completed Concord township will be nearly all gravel road, with the exception of less than three miles, and this should all be done as soon as possible, as there is nothing that adds to a community as good roads.

THIS IS NO JOKE

Kansas, a pioneering state in the cause of prohibition, is made the butt of many jokes because of its dry attitude. It is no joke, however, what Kansas has reaped as a result of its bone-dry law. In Kansas there are:

Fifty-four counties without any insane, fifty-four counties without any feeble-minded, ninety-six counties without any inebriates, thirty-eight counties without any poorhouses, fifty-three counties without any persons in jail, fifty-six counties without any representatives in the state penitentiary.

THANKS TO VOTERS

I appreciate very much the support given me by all parties, at the recent election.

I will try to serve all citizens alike in conducting the Township affairs. Yours, 46t1. O. K. Shull.

LARGE CROWD ATTENDED P. T. A.

Attracted by a good program a large crowd was present at the Parent Teacher meeting Tuesday night of this week.

Featuring the entertaining part of the program was te playlet given by the 5th and 6th grade pupils taught by Miss Cleota Morr, the Girls' Glee Club and a ladies quartet.

Judge W. P. ndicott furnished the educational portion of the program. In a clear and interesting way he told of the problems presented to our court, especially the cases of delinquent children. His talk was very instructive from both an altrustic and financial viewpoint. Under the latter head he explained the money saved the taxpayer under te present established system of caring for children who are without homes.

The P.-T. A. President, Mrs. C. C. Woodcox closed the meeting with a short business session. Reports were received and a motion was carried that the P.-T. A. buy bulbs for fall setting in the school lawn.

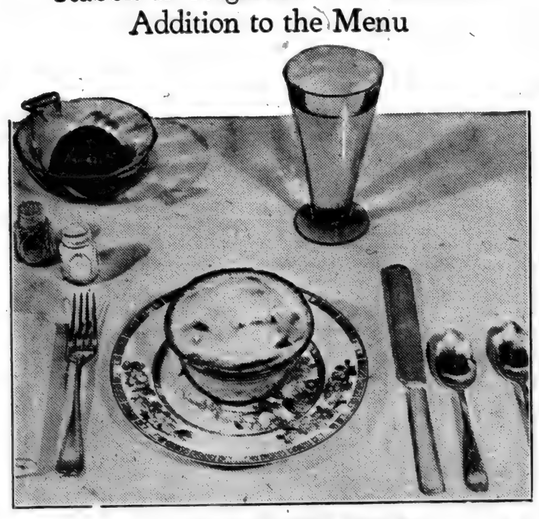
Rabbit Is Regarded as a Delicious Addition to the Menu



Ramekin Useful for Individual Rabbit Pie.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Domestic rabbits are being raised for meat as well as fur in many parts of the country, although their production is most highly developed in the western states. The meat may be eaten the year around, and is coming to be appreciated as a very delicious addition to the menu. In color and flavor domestic rabbit meat is so superior to wild as to seem an entirely different article of food. All the meat on a domestic rabbit is white and delicately flavored throughout. In food value rabbit falls in the class with poultry and other meats as a source of efficient protein.

Most of the domestic rabbits are marketed at eight to ten weeks of age, and are then termed "fryers." The bones of these quickly grown rabbits are very brittle, and in preparing the meat for cooking care should be taken to break them in such a way that they do not sliver. Like young chickens and tender chops and steaks, young rabbits need longer, slower cooking. They are usually first simmered until tender and then used for casserole dishes, pie, croquettes, salad, or other dishes of which cooked meat is the basis. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, in co-operation with the bureau of biological survey, has worked out a number of new ways of preparing rabbit meat. A new publication, Leaflet 66, called "Rabbit Recipes," is now available on the subject. The following recipe for rabbit pie, which is one of the best ways of cooking an older rabbit, is from the leaflet.

Rabbit Pie.

1 rabbit
¼ tsp. salt
1 onion, chopped
1 green pepper, chopped
¼ cup chopped parsley
3 tbs. butter or other fat
Flour
Dash of tabasco sauce
Pastry

After wiping the meat with a damp cloth, cut into two or three pieces. Place in a kettle, barely cover with hot water, add the salt, partly cover the kettle, and simmer until tender, or about one and one-half to two hours for a mature rabbit. Drain and measure the broth, and remove the meat from the bones in large pieces. Cook the onion, green pepper, and parsley for a few minutes in the fat in a skillet and stir frequently. For each cup of broth measure 1½ tablespoonfuls of flour and mix well with the fat and seasonings. Add the broth and stir until thickened. Add more salt if needed and a dash of tabasco sauce. Mix well with the rabbit meat and pour into a baking dish, or into individual ramekins. Cover with pastry and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) until the crust is golden brown.

GOOD THINGS TO EAT THAT WILL BE ENJOYED BY THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

So much to do that is not e'en begun,
So much to hope for that we cannot see,
So much to win, so many things to be.
—William Morris.

Where the child must carry a lunch at school, every effort should be made to make the food appetizing. Fresh fruit when it is possible should always be included. Jams, jellies, dried fruits such as figs, prunes and raisins or dates will help out when apples, oranges and fresh fruits are not available.

Fruit Paste. — Thoroughly mix chopped dates, raisins, dry figs and finely ground nuts with orange juice and a little cream. Spread generously on thin, buttered bread.

Egg Sandwich.—Chop hard cooked eggs, moisten with lemon juice, season with salt and pepper, spread over a lettuce leaf, place on a buttered slice of bread. Cover with a plain buttered slice.

Carrot, Celery and Nut Sandwich.—Mix ground raw carrots, celery and nuts with lemon juice and boiled dressing. Put the mixture into cases made by scooping out a roll cut in half. Fit the halves together.

Quick Orange Jam.—Take two cupfuls of orange pulp and juice, one lemon, pulp and juice, and one and one-half cupfuls of sugar. Boil ten minutes. Put into jelly glasses and seal. Serve in sandwiches or with toast. A small glass of this jam makes a dainty addition to the lunch-basket.

For a wholesome sandwich, spread one slice of the buttered bread with orange marmalade and the other with cottage cheese. Put together and wrap in waxed paper.

Party Sandwiches.—These should be served as soon as prepared. Mash bananas and fresh raspberries in equal amounts and moisten with sweet cream, add a pinch of salt and a bit of sugar if needed. Spread white bread with butter, then with the fruit mixture. Put the slices together and cut into fancy shapes. If the fresh berries are not obtainable, use raspberry jelly. If desired especially festive, decorate the top of small sandwiches cut into rounds with a spot of the jelly.

Heart Cakes.—Make a cake batter, baking it in a shallow pan. Take one-half cupful of shortening, one cupful of sugar well creamed, flavoring to taste, two-thirds of a cupful of milk and two cupfuls of pastry flour sifted with three teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Mix well and fold in the stiffly beaten whites of three eggs. Bake in a moderate oven. Cut when cool into heart shapes and cover the entire cake with pink frosting.

To make the frosting use four tablespoonfuls of hot cream, two tablespoonfuls of butter and one and two-thirds cupfuls of confectioner's sugar. Mix the cream, butter, salt and flavoring, add a little red coloring and the sugar a little at a time, beating well. Arrange each cake on a paper doily and insert darts of gold paper.

Date Meringues.—Blanch one-half cupful of almonds and when dry chop. Cut two cupfuls of dates into slices with wet scissors. Beat two egg whites until stiff, add two-thirds of a cupful of sugar, slowly beating all the time, flavor with vanilla and add one-fourth of a teaspoonful of salt. Fold in the dates and nuts and drop by teaspoonfuls in smooth mounds on a well buttered baking sheet. Bake in a slow oven for thirty minutes.

Glazed Apple Rings Served With Cold Meats

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Glazed apple rings are particularly good with either roast pork or cold cuts. The directions for making them are from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. If you do not have the leaflet, "Pork in Preferred Ways," by all means send for it, as it contains several other suggestions for serving this popular meat.

4 large tart firm apples
1 cup sugar
1 cup water
2 tbs. butter, melted
¼ tsp. salt

Prepare a sirup of the water, sugar, and salt, cook for about 10 minutes, and add the butter. Wash, core, and pare the apples, and cut crosswise into two or three thick slices depending upon the size of the apples. Butter a large shallow pan and place the apples in it in a single layer. Pour the hot sirup over the apples, cover, and cook slowly in a moderate oven until the apples are tender. Turn the slices of apples carefully so as not to break them, leave the pan uncovered, and continue the cooking until the sirup has become very thick and slightly browned. Serve either hot or cold with the main course of the meal.

You Should Know How to Serve the New Fruits

In recent years such former fruit novelties as Japanese persimmons, avocados, loganberries, mangos, papayas, and many other interesting and delicious new fruits have become generally available on the market in their season. As soon as a new fruit becomes common it is desirable to know how much sugar, acid, and other chemical constituents it contains. Doctors and dietitians need such data if they are to include it in their diet lists. The bureau of home economics recently issued tables giving proximate chemical composition of fresh fruits and fruit juices. Averages for new and unusual fruits and for apples, cherries, peaches, and all the familiar kinds are shown in terms of carbohydrates, calories, and other chemical units. Separate figures are given for summer, fall, and winter apples, sweet and sour cherries, and other varieties or types of a fruit that differ markedly in their composition.

FAIRY TALE FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The pilot was taking David for a trip in his airplane. He certainly was taking him over great distances.

They were flying off toward the east now, over farms and forests, then over a province in Canada which David could just make out was marked "New Brunswick."

As they flew here, very low, too, David saw a river with the most curious waterfalls.

They weren't high but were very strange. They started to go one way for a little and then they turned around and went the opposite way.

"They're the Reversible falls in the St. John river," the Pilot shrieked at David through the trumpet. "So named because they can turn themselves around—pretty clever of them!"

It was growing darker and darker now. They were landing! David did not quite know where he was—somewhere near his friend Atlantic, for he was faithfully nearby.

The Pilot helped David out and then rushed off again, leaving David quite alone. He did not know what to do but he was feeling very sleepy and he decided he'd better get some sleep before he did anything else.

He made a pillow of some spruce branches and found a comfortable spot for his out-of-door bed.

In the distance he thought he could hear some of the Boundary men singing:

Flying, flying, flying
Nova Scotia way,
Passing through New Brunswick,
Then o'er Fundy Bay.

Flying, flying, flying,
Over Tides so rare,
But you will sleep and rest
Before you go elsewhere—

Flying, flying, flying—

But David never heard any more of that song. When he awoke there was no sound of voices, save those of some sea gulls flying overhead, shrieking at each other.

The water dashed up over the rocks and the breakers rushed back and forth, breaking over the rocky shore of Atlantic. The sun was shining very brightly, the air was deliciously fresh and made David feel able to go on adventuring for always.

All over he walked, through woods, along the most beautiful streams, through a peaceful, quiet valley. Almost everywhere—if he walked far enough—he found water. He wondered if this could be an island and then remembered that there had been land joining this with New Brunswick—so this must be Nova Scotia.

And now he remembered having seen a sign when he was in New Brunswick which pointed the way to Nova Scotia. This must also be a peninsula. Isthmus had told him about peninsulas—they just liked to keep in touch with the land—no more than that.'

They weren't so stand-offish as islands; yet they had a good many ways like islands. They almost let the water go around them.

He went up along the coast and saw a most beautiful harbor as he passed along, one of the most beautiful harbors he had ever seen. The harbor, wearing a magnificent, smart suit of blue said, in a deep, strong voice: "Halifax Harbor is my name."

The rocks along the coast were wild and dangerous looking, yet there was a great beauty to them.

Juvenile Hollanders

In the country schools in Holland the little girls are quaintly dressed in long dark dresses, white aprons, snowy-white Dutch caps and wooden shoes. The boys wear loose, baggy trousers, jerseys or sweaters and soft caps. The girls keep on their snowy Dutch bonnets during school hours; in fact, they are only taken off at bedtime.

HIGH COLOR, NEAT TAILORING FEATURE PRACTICAL CLOTHES

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Novel materials which revel in high color and which exploit a neat tailoring are the thing when it comes to the chic frock for the practical hour. One of the proud boasts of this season's dresses and suits for street wear, likewise for classroom and in the office) is that they are styled with a view to achieving slenderizing lines.

This point is aptly illustrated in the youthful gown pictured to the left. Note how the box pleats giving breadth to the hemline are positioned quite low so as to preserve a carefully fitted hipline. The low-placed flare is made a feature throughout the present styling program. Some of the flounces on dressier gowns are placed below the knee.

Among other details which contribute to the chic of this dress shown to the left, is the point-edged fastening of its skirt which buttons.

For the making of this ideal fall frock the designer chooses a most attractive bemberg weave, its tweed patterning being in cricket green and white. We are hearing a great deal these days about fabrics not made of silk, not of wool, not of cotton or linen but of synthetic yarns—man-made fibers which have been processed with that Twentieth century ingenuity which marks the progress of the times in which we live. The printed crepes of bemberg are especially good looking, many of them being authentic reproductions of silk and wool patternings.

The modest little suit to the right is fashioned of a bemberg weave which accents a tweed effect in navy blue and beige. This simple style is one which could be very easily made at home at little expense and it is just such a type as will be ready to slip on in answer to the ever recurring "what to wear" question. The blouse is in monotone beige.

For the schoolgirl an intriguing and practical theme is the one-piece dress of inexpensive patterned bemberg crepe which has a separate top coat or jacket of flannel, the color of which repeats the leading tone in the print, perhaps navy or brown or the very fashionable bright red. To carry out the ensemble idea the coat should be lined with the printed crepe.

Some Timely Advice on Selecting and Caring for Your Furs

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The satisfaction obtained from a fur or a fur-trimmed garment depends on making a good selection in the first place and on giving the garment good care while it is in use. There is a wide range of durability in different furs, but price is no indication of durability. For example, chinchilla, a most expensive fur, is not so durable as rabbit. Much is said about the preparation of rabbit fur to make it look like higher-priced furs, but if the customer understands what she is getting and takes good care of her coat, she may have full satisfaction and pleasure in it.

The biological survey of the United States Department of Agriculture lays great stress on dealing always with a reliable furrier and in going to him exclusively for repairs, storage, or other matters connected with a fur or fur-trimmed garments. Some of the special points in the care of furs are as follows:

If any defects appear in a fur garment while it is still comparatively new, take it at once to the firm from which you bought it. The most expensive garment and the cheapest are equally liable to small troubles, such as a parted seam, a tiny hole, or broken hairs that have not been entirely removed and so give the appearance of shedding.

The leather, or skin, of the piece of fur has been specially treated to make it pliable. The furrier or reputable dry cleaning plant experienced in handling furs has special methods of cleaning furs to retain this quality. If your fur garment is damp or wet, do not put it on or near a stove or radiator. Hang it on a padded hanger properly and let it dry slowly at ordinary room temperatures.

Do not hang your furs in a closet with steam pipes. The air in the closets of steam-heated apartments is generally too dry for furs, unless there is provision for humidification.

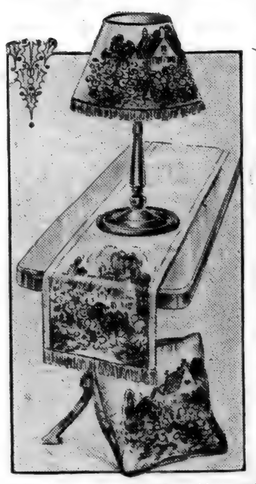
Dainty Presents for Friends at Christmas

Hand-Embroidered Gifts



This trio of lamp shade, table scarf and cushion, of heavy natural-colored linen, embroidered in gay wool yarn, emphasizes the vogue for ensemble furnishings in the home. As a Christmas-gift suggestion it scores 100 per cent perfect. The materials are easily available at any fancywork department.

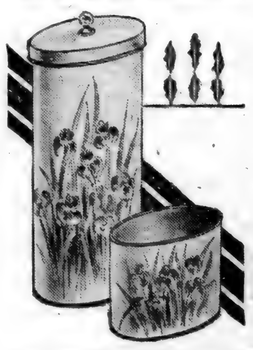
Hamper and Basket Ensembles



The ensemble's the thing! Everything in the household is supposed to match these days—to move in "sets" as it were. A word to the wise Christmas shopper is sufficient. The latest combination to join the ensemble movement is hamper and waste-basket ensemble. The shops are showing adorable lacquered sets flower-decorated so artistically that they are sure to add a beauty touch to any environment.

Screens the Radio Light

Women who like to give hand-painted presents for Christmas are making these radio-light screens by the dozens for their friends. You buy the stand and the screen all ready to paint. You cover the base with sealing-wax paint, smearing it on with a palette knife so as to give it a rough surface. To paint the figures or design hold the pattern (cut from fancy crepe paper or a magazine) back of the mica screen which is semi-transparent, carefully tracing the outline. Then color as per copy or according to fancy with the liquid transparent sealing wax.

Miniature Spinning Wheels

The spinning wheel, as an article of decoration, has come back. Miniature ones are designed to set upon the what-not so as to create an atmosphere of quaintness, such as interior decorators are so keen about these days. A timely Yuletide suggestion, this.

AVIATION

THE air races in Chicago are now an event of the past but the contribution made by them is of no small value. Great crowds witnessed the stirring maneuvers of the pilots; but an even greater crowd manifested its interest by watching for reports. The most striking characteristic of these races was its international aspect. Persons from all over the world had their eyes fastened on Chicago. Many of the foreign countries sent to the races their most expert pilots whose demonstrations were not only exceedingly difficult to perform but also manifested courage of a very high order.

L. A. Barrett.

Aviation has increased by leaps and bounds during the past year. In 1929 there were registered 16,000 miles of passage way and in 1930, 38,000, while the number of air ports increased during the same time from 1,046 to 1,552. The use of the airplane by the navy departments of the governments of the world will doubtless become a very important means of linking nations more closely together. The commercial use of airplanes will promote more speedy transportation and thus aid greatly in international relations in the economic world. How far it will be used for passenger travel is still an open question. It is not likely that they will supplant travel by train or the automobile, although passenger travel is bound to increase. Great hopes are entertained by the postal authorities at Washington for larger and more efficient use of airplanes in the transportation of mail, especially en route from New York to points in California, Seattle, etc.

Like all adventures in the field of progress the airplane must overcome outstanding difficulties. At present there seem to be two. First, the element of risk. While this has been greatly minimized during the last few years, there still remains a large percentage of risk. People have not yet become accustomed to think in terms of air travel and the occasional disaster is heralded from the house tops, causing more consternation than a train wreck. The other difficulty is the great cost of air travel.

In time, however, the airplane, like the automobile of today, will become the accepted method of travel and economic transportation.

"When the belles peel for combat, there's a heavy toll in the ring."

Should Have Known What He Would Do

The hero of this one is not exactly as meek as Moses, but yields often to the wishes of a somewhat domineering wife, with mental reservations.

The two went north not so long ago and, when the husband's two weeks of vacation were over, he yielded to her entreaty that she be allowed to stay on the lake for the remainder of the month and assured her everything would be all right at home. Of course, he would take his meals out, but he would sleep at home and take care of everything just as she would were she right there.

The woman came home Sunday to find the grass out of bounds, every window shade awry, and ashes, cigarette stubs, newspapers and whatnot scattered everywhere. But greater than her dismay at the disorder was the shock she received at friend husband's attitude toward her displeasure at the state of affairs.

There was no apology, no remorse on the part of the culprit.

"What is the meaning of this?" she asked, falling into the time-worn question that wives save up for just such a situation.

"It's just my idea of 'Revolt in the Desert'," he answered calmly, and stood his ground right there.—Kansas City Star.

Combine Billiards and Golf

"Snooker golf" is the name of the latest variation of the miniature course game, and it combines some of the features of both billiards and golf.

The course is laid out like the conventional billiard table, with concrete edges on the lawn corresponding to the edges of the table, and the usual number of pockets or holes about the sides. Sixteen balls are used, being racked in a triangle and broken at the start of play, as in pool. The cue is the putter and the cue ball is an ordinary golf ball.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Bright Editors

Some time ago Clement Wood, the writer, purchased a farm and wrote invitations thereto in verse, sending copies to a number of editors. Three editors promptly returned the verses with regrets that they were not desired for publication. But one editor accepted the verses and sent Mr. Wood a check.—Collier's Weekly.

Always Chance for Accident

"I'm afraid of my wife," the timid citizen complained to his lawyer. "Why, she's even threatened to attack me with an ax."

"Huh! Why worry? Did you ever see a woman try to chop a stick of wood?"—Portland Express.

An Elevator Girl

By RUBY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

"THIS girl is employed because she is courteous, helpful and intelligent. Anything she can do to assist you she will gladly do."

Mary read the sign above the elevator door. "Courteous, helpful, intelligent," she repeated. "Well—I think I could qualify."

She let her eyes fall on the young woman who was running the lift up and down in the crowded department store. The efforts did not seem much. It would take a little practice to be able to stop just at the right place, she decided. It would take a little concentration to remember what articles were sold on each of the eight floors but she believed she could hold such a position.

Ever since the automobile accident in which her brother had been so badly injured that he was still unable to work, Mary had been wondering what sort of employment she could get to help augment her widowed mother's not too large income in caring for the big family of children. Before the accident, Mary's most helpful place had seemed to be at home, helping to care for the children. Things were different now.

It was the busy season and Mary found no difficulty in getting a position. Inside of a few days she was dressed in the becoming gray uniform of the shop employees and was doing duty in the easily running elevator.

Mary tried to live up to the sign. She was always helpful and she used her intelligence. Even when the car was crowded and shoppers crowded and pushed and fussed and complained, she always tried to retain her courteous manner.

One Saturday afternoon she had an experience that proved her kindness and, in a roundabout way, added to the family income.

The elevator was half full and at the rear stood a tall, pale man with a child in his arms. The child might have been two or three years old and was able to walk, but was frightened at the motion of the elevator and screamed and clung to its father. They were going up several floors and the continual crying and screaming annoyed an irritable woman who, also, was going to a top floor.

"That child should be at home with its mother instead of making every one in the store uncomfortable," the woman said, losing her temper.

The pale and very much worried father said quietly, "The child has no mother."

There was dead silence in the little car.

When they reached the top floor, Mary stopped her car and stepped out after the man and the child.

"My rest hour comes in a few minutes. Won't you let me take the little one with me while you do your errands?" she asked.

The man's face lighted up. "Oh, you are too kind," he said.

But Mary, accustomed to children, insisted, and it was not long before she had the little girl sitting comfortably in the restroom looking at a book. She had learned from the man that his wife had been dead only a short time and he had not yet decided on what to do with the child. They were strangers in the country from England and it was a difficult problem.

During her rest hour Mary had an inspiration. Why not ask her mother why she could not take care of the little one for awhile?

She worked out the idea in her mind and presented it to the man.

"I—I don't like to be separated from her. She is all I have now," he explained at length. "Might I see you again in a day or two after we have all thought it over?" The man had an attractive accent and his plight was pitiable.

Mary's mother was only too glad to take in the man and his baby. The only man in the house was her disabled son, now, and it would mean an added income and perhaps congenial companionship.

Tom Elson—for that was the man's name—proved to be a very quiet man and Mary and her mother fell in love with his tiny daughter. She played with the older children and was well behaved.

On Saturday afternoons, after awhile, the father got into the habit of going home by way of the shop where he had first seen Mary.

"Mary," he said to her one afternoon a year after he had gone to live with them, "would you mind my telling you what I think that sign in your elevator ought to read?"

"No," said Mary, "of course not."

"It should say, 'This girl was employed because she is beautiful, lovable—and wonderful.'"

Mary was lost for a reply.

Tom was a little afraid of what he had said. They were both silent for awhile.

"I know it seems very soon for me to tell you I love you, Mary—but—"

Mary looked at him. "But you do, Tom. I have known it for a long time and we are going to tell mother about it and—"

"And it will be all right—won't it, dear?" he asked.

By the time they reached home they had worked it all out so as to find happiness for themselves and yet make no one else less comfortable.

Why It Is "Dead"

A "dead language" is one which is no longer used as a means of communication by any peoples.

Iceland Althing First of World Parliaments

Iceland in June, 1930, celebrated two great events: the one hundred nineteenth birthday of Jon Sigurdsson, its George Washington, who wrung home rule from Denmark in 1874; the thousandth anniversary of the althing, oldest parliament in the world.

A century before the battle of Hastings, 850 years before our own government was founded, the franklins (free landowners) of Ireland were living under a constitution (the constitution of Uliot) and a regularly constituted lawmaking body. The althing met in midsummer and was the occasion for great feasts and merrymaking, as well as numerous bruises, lacerations and concussions.

What political life and law were like in the old days is recorded in Iceland sagas and law codes. The althing did not function perfectly, nor did the judicial system which was set up, the real governing being done by the various chieftains; nevertheless, the althing forms a magnificent tradition. It looks down from its hoary eminence with paternal solicitude for such youthful bodies as the English house of commons and the United States congress.

Many Plants That Lure Insects to Their Death

There are a great many varieties of insectivorous plants which grow almost all over the world. The first group of these plants is known as the pitcher plants, which have the blossom in the form of a pitcher which acts as a death trap for flies and other insects. The insects are attracted by a fragrance or some other lure, enter the mouth of the pitcher, and crawl down toward the bottom, being forced onward by small spikes downward pointing from the sides of the pitcher's throat. The poor fly is thus given no chance to escape and when he reaches the bottom he is caught in the sticky mass of fluid there and his body juices absorbed by the plant. Two other types of insectivorous plants are the Venus' flytrap genus and the Dionaea which grows only in the low coast regions of North Carolina. This little plant is probably the most famous stem variety of the insect-eating plants. A third type is a Sundew Drosera, which is common to Australia. This is also a large genus containing a great variety of species.

Bit of Greece in France

Antibes, like all the other places along the fascinating French Riviera, has had a romantic history, says a writer in the Detroit News. It was founded more than 2,000 years ago by descendants of the Greek colonists who had built a thriving city on the site of Marseilles. Legend says that among these first settlers were some men and women who had come from Greece and that they chose Antibes as a place to build because the scenery there reminded them so much of Greece. Phenicians and Carthaginians, Romans and Gauls, Germans and Italians and French—they have all met on this coast in the centuries that have passed since, but Antibes has managed more than any other town in France to retain its Greek appearance.

University's Art Treasure

A full-size copy of Murillo's "Immaculate Conception" in mosaics is in the chapel of the Catholic university at Washington, a gift from Pope Pius XI. Three artists labored nearly four years in the Vatican mosaic studio to piece together nearly 800,000 bits of colored glass and of other mineral compounds which form the finished picture, the original of which is preserved in the Prado at Madrid. The mosaic is 9½ feet long and 6 feet wide. Without a frame, it weighs 6,600 pounds. The pieces are of 20,000 different tints and shades.

Beautiful Capetown

The sea voyage to South Africa is the fair weather voyage of the world. Capetown, once a remote outpost of civilization, is today one of the world's finest cities. It is not only beautiful and delightfully situated but the cape is historical as well, for it was here in 1487 that Dias saw the sea-route to India and this incited Columbus, who in his search for India found America instead. The discoveries between 1487 and 1497 mark this era as the dawn after the Dark ages and the first rays hit the cape when Dias discovered his way around.

Mythological Birds

Probably the best known of the fabulous birds of prey were the roc, which was a bird so enormous that it obscured the sun where it flew and carried away men in its talons; the phoenix, which was a bird with a beautiful voice and a long tail like a peacock's, which was supposed to rise from the ashes of fire; and the harpy, which was a terrible bird with a woman's face and breast and great claws like an eagle's, which pursued men who had sinned.

Magnification

The magnifying power of a telescope is proportional to its length as well as the shortness of focus of its eyepiece. Thus the use of different eyepieces yields different magnifying powers, but those exceeding 1,000 are seldom used because of the trembling of the earth's atmosphere. Compound microscopes may magnify as much as 4,000 times.

New Orleans Conducts Business Over Coffee

Few affairs of importance have been discussed in New Orleans except over a cup of coffee, writes Ralph A. Graves in the National Geographic Magazine. Here, as in the Near East, business seems to function more easily to the accompaniment of sips of the bitter black French drip than in any other, and the most harassed executives will pause for ten minutes in mid-morning, leave their offices and go to the restaurant or the hotel for a cup of coffee—nothing more.

On the top floor of one of the most progressive banks in the state—and in countless other establishments, no doubt—there is a special kitchen and dining room to which the employees retire when the bank closes at three; after their cup of coffee they return to their desks.

In one big manufacturing plant every workman brings with him each morning a small coffee pot which he deposits under his pet steam-leaking valve, so that as the condensing hot water drips constantly, he provides himself with small quaffs of the beverage throughout the day.

Salt Superstition

The story which gave rise to the belief that to spill salt is unlucky is this: For some reason salt is thought to be a mystic substance. To spill it places you in the power of evil spirits. Your good angel is posted at your right shoulder, while your bad angel holds forth on the left. When you spill the salt, if you fling a bit in the bad angel's eyes, it blinds him so that he cannot take advantage of your misadventure and saddle you with something unpleasant.

Oxford's Prize
Queen 632632

One of our aged cows—a show cow in particular—won first and grand champion at Defiance County Fair and stood a very close second at the Northeastern Indiana Parish Show. Queen in the past 270 days produced 453.7 pounds of butter fat from 8,447 pounds milk; figured on the prevailing markets had value of $208.05 Feed costs were $67.29 leaving a net profit above feed of $140.76. Conclusive evidence indeed that good cows remain a profitable venture even during the lean years.

GOLD MEDAL ONION GROWER WINNER

P. O. Hurley, Agricultural Agent for the B. & O. Railroad, was in the county Monday working with County Agent, E. E. Stinson, on the B. & O. thousand bushel onion club. There are nine men in DeKalb County who are making an exhibit in the Northern Indiana Muck Crop Show in the B. & O. Thousand Bushel Onion Club. This county has more medal winners in the Thousand Bushel Onion Club than any other in the state. Henry Murray, a prominent onion grower near Garrett is the only gold medal winner in the state. Mr. Murray produced 1,070.6 bushels on one acre.

Other growers in DeKalb County are entering muck crop produce in the open classes at the muck crop show.

There will be a special educational program on Friday and a banquet Friday evening. A large delegation from DeKalb County art planning to attend these meetings.

LADIES INVITED TO DEMONSTRATION

The ladies of DeKalb County are invited to attend a demonstration on how to make parchment waste paper baskets given by Miss Blanche Zaring, the Home Economics Extension Department Purdue University in the Assembly Room of the Court House on Friday afternon, November the 14th. This is the last meeting of the home furnishing project that the township home bureaus have been cooperating in during the past year.

Miss Zaring will completely demonstrate the construction of the beautiful waste paper basket. These baskets are very attractive and no doubt many of the ladies of this county will be interested in seeing how they are constructed. Complete directions for the construction of the baskets will be given out at the conclusion of the meeting.

Every lady in the county is invited to attend the demonstration. The town folks ae just as welcome as those living in the rural commuities.

TENDERS RESIGNATION AS COUNTY AGENT

Earl E. Stinson Thursday submitted to the county board of education his resignation as county agricultural agent, effective Dec. 31.

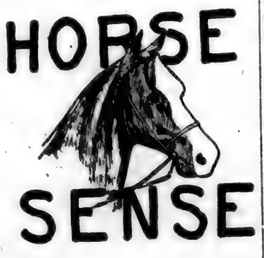
The resignation was not accepted, but Township Trustees Larry Brandon, Jesse B. McClellan and Isaac Barker were designated as a committee to confer with Mr. Stinson and ask him to reconsider his action.

Mr. Stinson will do extension work for the United States department of agriculture and will be located in Michigan, Wisconsin or Minnesota. His compensation will be greater than he is receiving here.

Mr. Stinson has been in this county 5 years and his last contract of 2 years would expire next September. He was educated in Iowa State college and he came here from Orange County, Ind., where he served as county agent five years.

His successor will be recommended by Purdue University and the appointment will be made by the county board of education. The appropriation for DeKalb county's share of the salary and expense is made by the county council. The university contributes $1,000 of the salary.

HORSE SENSE



Using soybean straw, oat straw, corn stover, and some soybean hay for winter feed and bluegrass pasture for summer, T. M. Garland, of Parke county, kept his beef cows at an average cost of $23.36 during 1928. Beef cows similarly fed have proven profitable on many Indiana farms, for the production of baby beeves.

BIG PROGRAM PLANNED FOR LIVE STOCK SHOW

Chicago will be host to the country from November 29 to December 6, when the International Live Stock Exposition will draw to it a mammoth display of the manifold wonders of the rural world.

Extending throughout twenty acres of buildings and a large part of the adjoining pens in the Chicago Stock Yards, this renowned exposition will unfold to the visiting thousands an eye filling pageant of the final products of scientific methods applied to present day agriculture, says B. H. Heide, secretary-manager of the Show.

Junior Contests First

Although, according to the management, the exposition is not scheduled to open officially until November 29, the first Saturday following Thanksgiving, one important event, the Junior Live Stock Judging Contest, will take place on Friday, November 28. State champion teams of farm boys and girls are sent to Chicago from a large number of states to compete for national honors.

Saturday, November 29, marks the official opening of the exposition. It will be a day crowded with events of interest to young people, with the Junior Live Stock Feeding Contest, the Collegiate Live Stock Judging Contest, and the opening of the 4-H Club Congress. Saturday evening will bring the first of the Horse Shows, which will continue each night, except Sunday, until the close of the exposition.

Crowded Program Monday

On Monday every available ring will be filled with aspirants for the highest honors of the year which go to International Winners. Important on Monday's program are the steer classes, as well as many of the separate breeds of cattle, horses, sheep, and swine, while Tuesday will furnish a highly spectacular event on the occasion of the selection of the grand-champion steer.

Auction sales of both pure bred and fat cattle, fat sheep, and swine will be held on Wednesday and Thursday, culminating in the open air auction in the Stock Yards of the grand champion steer and the carload lots of commercial cattle which comprise in themselves one of the most impressive sights of the exposition.

Record breaking prices for these choice meat animals are received. At the 1928 International $7.00 a pound was paid for the grand champion steer and last year $8.25 a pound.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Royal Riddle

ABOUT no other ruler have there ever been asked so many and such pointed questions as about Elizabeth, queen of England. Was she a man? Was she really the daughter of Henry VIII? Was she dark or fair? Was she a murderess? Was she really the "Virgin Queen" or was she a mother?

All these and scores of other queries have come up from time to time, and, owing to the paucity of authentic information from contemporary historians and the veil of reticence which appears to cloak even the frank narratives of the Elizabethan era, it is extremely difficult to answer any of them authoritively. Even the matter of the parentage of the queen is still largely one of conjecture and her parentage appears to be open to more than a shadow of doubt. But when historians begin to comment upon the relations between the queen and certain of her courtiers they find themselves lost in a maze of contradictory statements, a veritable labyrinth of lies.

It has been affirmed with some degree of authenticity that a child was born to the queen by the earl of Essex at Kenilworth castle and a writer in the British "Notes and Queries" during the last century states: "It is a tradition in the family with which I am connected that Queen Elizabeth had a son who was sent to Ireland and placed under the care of the earl of Ormonde, a distant relative of 'Good Queen Bess.' Papers are said to exist in the family which prove this statement."

Another story has it that the child was the son of Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, and that documents in the state paper office of the British government contain evidence of a conclusive nature about this and, on October 9, 1572, Sir Edward Dyer wrote to Sir Christopher Hatter a letter which has been carefully hidden from the public but upon which a leading historian comments in the following words:

"It is not lightly, nor upon slight grounds, that the character of any woman should be suspected, much less when that woman was one of the most powerful monarchs that ever swayed the English scepter. Notwithstanding all the explanations of historians and the unauthenticated stories so commonly promulgated against Elizabeth, the writer's opinion was entirely against the justice of the accusations, but the letter in question has produced a conviction of a different nature. This important conclusion, if just, affords a key to many acts of Elizabeth's life which have hitherto been irreconcilable with the magnanimity which she sometimes displayed."

An entry in the manuscript of a free school of Shrewsbury tells of a certain son of the earl of Leicester and Queen Elizabeth and there is a tradition that this mysterious son was brought up secretly at the free school, but what became of him is not known nor is it easy to account for this curious entry in the parish church book.

"The Tourist's Illustrated Hand Book of Ireland" refers to the same matter by saying: "One of the interesting features pointed out in the burial ground of the parish chapel of Carrick-on-Suir is the grave of Thomas Butler, the natural son of her maiden majesty, Queen Elizabeth," and Burke's Peerage gives an extract from the "Dictionairre de la Noblesse," published in Paris in 1771, detailing the tradition that Thomas Butler, the tenth earl of Ormonde, and Queen Elizabeth were the parents of Piers Fitzthomas Butler, father of Sir Edward Butler who was created Viscount Galmoye in 1646.

Bearing on this same phase of the affair, a writer of the time calls attention to the fact that the earl of Ormonde was high in the favor of his royal mistress and that "he was a very comely and graceful personage and of a dark complexion which made the Irish give him the sobriquet of 'Duff' and gave occasion to her majesty's calling him her 'black husband.'"

On the other hand, there are quite as many and apparently as authentic statements to the effect that Elizabeth was entitled to be called the "Virgin Queen"—so that, in all justice, it must be admitted that the question of her maternity must at least be ranked among the mysteries which surrounded so many of the rulers of her time.

Stirring

They were undecided as to where they should go.

"Let's run along to the new cafe for a cup of tea," said George to his young lady.

"No, George," she replied. "I don't like the place—they never provide teaspoons there."

"I didn't know that," he admitted "Why don't they?"

"Well, I suppose it's because they consider the music so stirring that spoons are not needed," was the reply.—Weekly Scotsman.

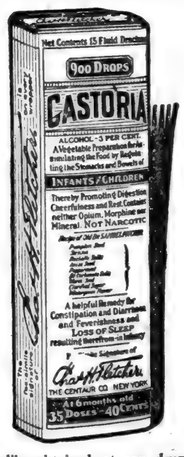
Wakeful restless CHILD needs Castoria



WE can never be sure just what makes an infant restless, but the remedy can always be the same. Good old Castoria! There's comfort in every drop of this pure vegetable preparation, and not the slightest harm in its frequent use. As often as Baby has a fretful spell, is feverish, or cries and can't sleep, let Castoria soothe and quiet him. Sometimes it's a touch of colic. Other times it's constipation. Or diarrhea—a condition that should always be checked promptly. Just keep Castoria handy, and give it promptly. Relief will follow very promptly; if it doesn't you should call a physician.

All through babyhood, Castoria should be a mother's standby; and a wise mother continues it in more liberal doses as a child grows up.

Readily obtained at any drug-store, the genuine easily identified by the Chas. H. Fletcher signature and the name Castoria on the wrapper like this:

My Friends: Correct Your Eating Faults and Lose Your Fat With Kruschen Salts

Yes; I'm forty-five today—built like a race horse, my friends say—and I know I feel 10 years younger than I did three months ago—and I'd hate to tell you how much fat I lost with Kruschen.

I call Kruschen Salts the "magic salts" because when I was fat and wretched, despondent and half sick all the time—it took only one bottle that I bought for 85 cents to liven me up—put ambition and energy into me—make me feel years younger and with the help of a change in diet show me how to lose the fat I was so ashamed of.

Cut out pastries and desserts—go easy on potatoes, cream, cheese, and butter—eat lean meat, chicken, fish, vegetables and fruits and never fail to take one-half teaspoonful of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

Every drug store worthy of the name in the World sells Kruschen Salts—an 85 cent bottle lasts 4 weeks—not much to pay for buoyant health.—Adv.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY. NOV. 20, 1930 | NUMBER 47

ERNEST W. JOHNSON HEADS COUNTY COUNCIL

Ernest W. Johnson of Concord Township, was on Saturday elected president of the new DeKalb county council.

The new councilmen were all present at an organization meeting called by County Auditor Estell Dawson in compliance with the law.

The members of the council besides Mr. Johnson are Joseph R. Wiley, Cleve H. Grube, Gilbert Bonecutter, Pearl Barton, Harry M. Shull and Frank R. Bowman.

Upon motion of Mr. Shull, Mr. Bowman acted as chairman pro tem. Mr. Grube then moved that Mr. Johnson be elected president. There were no other nominations and the vote for Mr. Johnson was unanimous.

The majority of the council, including Mr. Johnson, is democratic. He and Mr. Wiley are the only members who served on the preceding council.

The new council will meet again in special session Dec. 2 to consider addtional appropriations asked for the year 1930 amounting to $3,389.05.

ASKS RECOUNT OF SURVEYOR'S VOTE

Charles T. Miser late Saturday afternoon filed in the DeKalb circuit court a petition for a recount of the votes cast for county surveyor in the election held Nov. 4.

The official returns show that Calvin C. Cain, the democratic candidate for the office, won with a majority of 68, the vote for him being 5,236 as against 5,168 for Mr. Miser. Mr. Miser considers it probable that his name was confused with that of his uncle, Charles E. Miser, who won, according to the official returns, by 282 over Brown Albright, the democratic candidate.

Saturday was the last day to file for a recount. The law provides that the costs be paid by the candidate filing the petition.

The court will appoint those to recount the votes it is expected this week.

NEW VARIETY STORE FOR SPENCERVILLE

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

Few Americans know that the original Presidential Thanksgiving Proclamation was lost for over a hundred years; that it was found at an auction sale in 1921; that it was bought by the Library of Congress for $300.00; and that it now reposes in the archives of that institution—one of the most valuable documents in the world. The Division of Information and Publication of the George Washington Bicentennial Commission, in a statement issued today, relates the story of the lost proclamation.

On September 25, 1789, Elias Boudinot introduced the followlowing resolution in the House of Representatives:

"Resolved, That a joint committee of both Houses be directed to wait upon the President of the United States, to request that he would recommend to the people of the United States a day of public Thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging, with grateful hearts, the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity to establish a Constitution of government for their safety and happiness."

Harmless as this resolution seems, there were objections to it. In reading the Annals of Congress of that period, we find that Representative Aedanus Burke of South Carolina thougt we should not mimic Europe "where they made a mere mockery of Thanksgiving."

Representative Thomas Tudor Tucker, also of South Carolina, argued that it was not the business of Congress to ask for a national day of Thanksgiving.

"They (the people) may not be inclined to return thanks for a Constitution until they have experienced that it promotes their safety and happiness."

These objections, however, were overruled; the resolution was passed and sent to the Senate for concurrence. The Senate approved and appointed its committee to wait on the President. The joint committee was made up of Ralph Izard of South Carolina and William S. Johnson of Connecticut, from the Senate; Elias Boudinot of New Jersey, Roer Sherman of Connecticut, and Peter Sylvester of New York, from the House.

Washington complied with the request and on October 3, 1789, issued his proclamation, calling for a National day of Thanksgiving on Thursday, November 26.

And then the document dropped out of sight. It aparently was misplaced or attached to some private papers in the process of moving official records from one city to another when the Capital was changed. However, it happened, the original manuscript was not in the official archives until 1921 when Dr. J. C. Fitzpatrick, then Asst. Chief of the Manuscripts Division of the Library of Congress, and now Editor of the forthcoming George Washington Bicentennial Commission series of Washington's Writings, "found" the proclamation. It was at an auction sale being held in the American Art Galleries of New York City. Dr. Fitzpatrick, an expert in Wasington, examined the document and found it to be authentic. It was written in long hand by Wm. Jackson, Secretary to President Washington at the time, and was signed in George Washington's bold hand. Dr. Fitzpatrick purchased the document for $300.00 for the Library of Congress, where it is now kept as a treasure. And no amount of money could remove it.

The original Proclamation of Thanksgiving, and, indeed, the first Presidential proclamation ever issued in the United States reads as follows:

"By the President of the United States of America.

"Whereas it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God to obey his will, to be grateful for his benefits and humbly to implore his protection and favor— and Whereas both Houses of Congress have by their joint committee requested me 'to recommend to the People of the United States a day of public thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed by acknowledging with grateful hearts the many signal favors of Almighty God, especially by affording them an opportunity to establish a form of government for their safety and happiness.'

"Now, therefore, I do recommend and assign Thursday, the 26th day of November next, to be devoted by the People of these States to the serivce of that great and glorious Being who is the beneficent Author of all the good that was, that is, or that will be— That we may then all unite in rendering unto him our sincere and humble thanks—for his kind care and protection of the People of this country previous to their becoming a Nation—for the signal and manifold mercies and the favorable interpositions of his providence, which we experienced in the course and conclusion of the late war—for the great degree of tranquility, union, and plenty, which we have since enjoyed—for the peaceable and rational manner in which we have been enabled to establish constitutions of government for our safety and happiness, and particularly the national One now lately instituted—for the civil and religious liberty with which we are blessed and the means we have of acquiring and diffusing useful knowledge; and in general for all the great and various favors which he hath been pleased to confer upon us.

"And also that we may then unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech him to pardon our national and other transgressions —to enable us all, whether in public or private stations, to perform our several and relative duties properly and punctually—to render our national government a blessing to all the People by constantly being a Government of wise, just, and constitutional laws, discreetly and faithfully executed and obeyed—to protect and guide all Sovereigns and Nations (especially such as have shown kindness to us) and to bless them with good Government, peace, and concord. To promote the knowledge and practice of true religion and virtue, and the increase of science among them and us—and generally to grant unto all mankind such a degree of temporal prosperity as he alone knows to be best.

"Given under my hand at the City of New York the third day of October in the year of our Lord 1789.

(signed) George Washington"

Celebration of Thanksgiving Day in America can be traced back to the earliest days of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. From there the custom spread to all parts of the United States.

OF SPECIAL INTEREST TO TRAPPERS

Persons who are interested in trapping in the St. Joe River, will do well to heed the message of Walter Shirts, Supt. of Fisheries and Game in Indiana, as his letter will give information that cannot be disputed. An inquiry has brought the following:

"The St. Joe river is navigable and therefore the public has a right to trap in the river up to low water mark, which is the ordinary and average water line, but to go upon the bank and above low water mark, the trapper must have the written consent of the landowner in order to be within the law. In case of such trespass the remedy would be for the landowner to have the trapper arrested for trapping without the consent of the landowner. Our wardens have authority, as have also sheriffs and constables, to make arrests in such cases."

HUNTERS SHOOT LAMB

Hunters, through their carelessness shot and killed a lamb in the Peabody clearing south of town, and was found by Ben Soule who has charge of the woods. Elsewhere in this issue will be found notice which warns against hunting on these premises. It is such work that has riled nearly all the farmers in this vicinity against the average sportsman, and the only way to stop it is to arrest those who violate the wish of the landowners.

AN APPRECIATION

Due to my splendid vote in Spencer Township I feel myself indebted to the Voters of my Township, and I shall always try to prove worthy of the confidence you have placed in me by electing me to the office of Trustee, and the interest of the people will always be considered.

BEAUTY SPOTS IN INDIANA

The Newville Township Home Bureau Club met with Mrs. Sadie Washler November 12th at an all day meeting. A good crowd was present and a bountiful dinner was served at the noon hour. Mrs. Myra Conine lead the meeting. The topic was "Beauty Spots of Indiana." Each onc present spoke of some scenes of Indiana, which was most interesting. After the regular meeting we elected officers for the coming year, which are as follows: President, Blen Moore; vice president, Bertha Clise; secretary, Mildred Kling; treasurer, Lena Pierman; pianist, Mrs. Rodenbush; chorister, Mrs. Conine; press reporter, Mildred Kling. The project leaders are Sadie Washler and Gatha Roberts. Flower committee, Mamie Ginther. Finance committee, Lena Pierman. Program committee, Blen Moore, Bertha Clise, Lena Pierman and Daisy Roberts. After a very pleasant day with Mrs. Washler, the club ladies left at a late hour voting to meet with Mrs. Bertha Clise for the Christmas meeting. There will be a good program and pot luck dinner will be served Christmas exchange presents not costing over ten cents, and to be held December 10th.

VISIT ELMER VOLKERT'S

Geo. Hart and father, M. C. Hart, and their families, were Sunday guests of Elmer Volkert and family at Quincy, Mich. Elmer has been quite poorly for the past three weeks with neuritis. Due to treatments administered by his physician he had an infection in his eyes and has been blind for some time as a result. He then went to Battle Creek for treatment and he is just able to see light. It will be some time before he has his sight fully restored. George reports Elmer as having a growing business.

IN MEMORIAM

Of our dear wife and mother who passed away one year ago November 17, 1929.

Just a year ago today
Sad memories we recall,
When you dear, "wife" fell asleep,
And left us one and all.
So peaceful you drifted away,
Your pain and sorrows are over.
We loved you and we miss you,
But He called you away to stay,
So we hope some day to meet you
In that beautiful home far away.

W. E. Henly and Children.

NAMES DEPUTY

Announcement was made Friday that the new deputy sheriff under John P. Hoff, who takes office January 1, will be Herbert Grimm of Waterloo. Mr. Grimm expects to move to Auburn before the first of the year. Mr. Grimm was defeated in the primary as the Democratic candidate for sheriff.

HISTORY'S MYSTERIES

Unsolved Riddles That Still Puzzle Authorities Here and Abroad

The Death of Lord Bentinck

SON of the fourth duke of Portland, one of the most famous sportsmen of his day, there is little reason to wonder at the fact that Lord William George Frederick Cavendish Bentinck had a passionate love of sport in his blood and that racing was the dominate note in his brief life from the day when he started to accumulate a stable of his own to the time when, having failed to win the Derby, he sold all his horses and abandoned the turf in despair.

One by one all the prizes of the race-course had come to him—with one exception. But the blue ribbons which crown the winner of the Derby seemed destined never to be his, despite the fact that upon several occasions they appeared to be within his grasp. So deep at last became his chagrin at the continued failure of his horses to win the grand prize of the racing world that, in a moment of pique, Lord Bentinck decided to sell all his stable and remove his colors from the field.

Among the horses which Lord George disposed of at figures which represented far less than their actual value was none other than the great Surplice, the winner of the next year's Derby and the St. Leger stakes. Lord Bentinck had actually had the coveted prize in his hands, only to let it go! How keenly he felt the blow may be gathered from the following entry in the diary of Lord Beaconsfield:

"I met Lord George Bentinck in the library of the house of commons. He was standing before the shelves with a volume in his hand and his countenance was greatly disturbed. Surplice, whom he had parted with among the rest of his stud, had won that paramount stake which had been the object of his life. He had nothing to console him and nothing to sustain him, except his pride. Even that deserted him before a heart which he knew at least would yield him sympathy. He gave a sort of superb groan.

"'All my life I have been trying for this and for what have I sacrificed it?' he murmured. It was in vain to offer solace. 'It is the blue riband of the turf,' he softly repeated to himself and, sitting down before a table, buried himself in statistics."

Was this disappointment the cause of Lord Bentinck's death, or was there foul play connected with it? was the question which all England asked, when, only a short time later, his body was found in an open field not far from his home. He had risen that morning, apparently full of health and spirits, and, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, had set out to walk 'cross country to Thoresby, Lord Manvers' estate, where he was to spend the week-end. His valet, who had gone on in advance, awaited his arrival but, when night fell and the nobleman did not put in an appearance, a searching party was made up and it was not long before one of the members discovered the body, cold and stiff. Lord Bentinck had evidently been dead for some hours but what had been the cause of his mysterious death?

The coroner's jury, after considering the evidence for some time, finally agreed to commit themselves and returned a verdict of "Death due to the visitation of God; to wit, a spasm of the heart."

But there were many who were by no means satisfied with the vague verdict of the inquest. Lord Bentinck had always been a man of remarkable vigor and robust health and he had apparently never been feeling better than on the day of his death. Was it likely that such a man would drop dead during a quiet and unexciting stroll across the country? Was it not more likely that he had met some one closely related to him—some one whom rumor credited with having been the cause of a violent quarrel only a few days before—and that a scene had ensued, in the course of which Lord George had either fallen or had received a fatal blow?

Unfortunately, the ground had been trampled and all footprints which might have told of such an encounter had been obliterated by the time the officers of the law arrived upon the scene, and, as the verdict of the coroner's jury gave an excuse for dropping the case, the truth as to whether Lord Bentinck was struck down by "the hand of God" or by a much more human agency remains one of the mysteries which will never be solved.

Music a Gift of God

Music is one of the fairest and most glorious gifts of God. To it Satan is exceedingly hostile. Thereby many temptations and evil thoughts are driven away; the devil cannot withstand it. Music is one of the best arts: the notes give life to the text; it expels the spirit of sadness, as one observes the King Saul. Some of the nobles and usurers imagine that they have saved for my Gracious Elector three thousand gulden yearly by cutting down music. Meanwhile they spend thirty thousand gulden in useless ways in its place. Kings, princes, and lords must support music, for it is the duty of great potentates and rulers to maintain the liberal arts and laws. . . .

We should accustom the youth continually to this art, for it produces fine and accomplished people.—Martin Luther, in "Table Talk."

Castoria... for CHILDREN'S ailments

ARE you prepared to render first aid and quick comfort the moment your youngster has an upset of any sort? Could you do the right thing—immediately—though the emergency came without warning—perhaps tonight? Castoria is a mother's standby at such times. There is nothing like it in emergencies, and nothing better for everyday use. For a sudden attack of colic, or for the gentle relief of constipation; to allay a feverish spell, or to soothe a fretful baby that can't sleep. This pure vegetable preparation is always ready to ease an ailing youngster. It is just as harmless as the recipe on the wrapper reads. If you see Chas. H. Fletcher's signature, it is geniune Castoria. It is harmless to the smallest infant; doctors will tell you so.

You can tell from the formula on the wrapper how mild it is, and how good for little systems. But continue with Castoria until a child is grown.

She looked through everything and found material with the dust of a year upon it. In a pile were pictures of the poplar tree. He had made the tree again and again. She caught a hint of desperation. He had been deliberately careless. He had distorted the limbs, but neither the carelessness nor the distortion had given him the quality that lay now on the board with the charcoal sketch of herself on the stairs—a thing called Life. Vitality!

Months of work. Months of struggle. Secret, silent—a new idea, a new stirring pain goading him out of his path.

And every morning he had to go and make the cat cartoons. He had to go from the Sun to the movie studio. When he was longing to experiment with this new conception. He was ready to leave satire for a new form of beauty. He was ready to establish a new and modern school of work.

It was not an unnatural development. Looking back, it seemed to Ernestine that the years had conspired in order to accomplish this. She remembered the little boy with his leg in a brace, who had made the book of bird pictures for her—a book she still loved and possessed, and which she had been showing to Peter only a day or two ago. Will had so loved the color of wings.

She recalled the water colors on his mother's walls: the smudged pictures of John Pryor when he was a baby—crude but warm. She remembered what Mrs. Todd had said—all the neighbors thought Will would be a great artist some day. If he were not subjugated to her biological necessities!

Through the newspaper environment and his hero worship of John Poole he had become a cartoonist. And he had had hard work and desperate struggle to accomplish that. But the very things this success had brought him had been a means of releasing this deeper, more sincere impulse. The comfort, the affluence, the sense of security, all had enabled him to begin to give heed to another voice.

And Will had thought in his simplicity that he could have a secret! He had imagined that he could, in his idle hours, pursue this new and delightful gift of artistry. He had experimented here alone with new tools, new methods, and thought that no one would ever know. Ernestine was wiser. She knew the consequences of activity, secret or open. This studio was going to destroy the cats as certainly as love destroys infatuation.

She stooped and brushed lightly with her lips the charcoal image of herself descending the stairs. She locked the door and went away, her lips firm, her eyes glowing in her lovely face.

"Whenever you are ready, Will, I will be ready, too."

But Will did not seem to be ready. He had changed. He had become silent, morose, irritable. There was no question now as to where he was spending his time, for he played bridge hours every day. He won constantly, Ernestine kept him as clean of money as she could, subverting all that she could lay hands on to her own purposes. She did not know how much money he won at cards, but his mania was a new thing, and she could not understand it. One night at a dance in the club to which he belonged she saw him through the open door of the cardroom, sitting at a heavy round table, his face absolutely set, his dark eyes watchful, playing in an intense absorption.

"How does he play?" she asked her partner, a friend of Will. "I've played with him, of course, but always with women, and he seemed indifferent—careless."

"I wish I could get him at a table when there were women there," the man, a middle-aged illustrator, answered. "He has a great deal of my money. Why, he plays an extraordinarily good game, and every one likes to play with him because he minds his own business. He plays for study, but he doesn't row. He makes no mistakes, but he doesn't jump on the fellow who does. And cards! Oh, boy—he has them. He has an absolutely marvelous memory."

Ernestine knew this. Will's memory was part of his equipment as an artist. He would be able to visualize each trick that had fallen, without error, she knew. But she was troubled. She understood the psychological use of the word "substitution," and it occurred to her in connetcion with Will at the bridge tables, but she could not get the thing clearly. Will was drugging himself with the mechanical occupation of cards. The cards interested, absorbed, fascinated him. The mesmeric fascination of the game were useful to him as a means of stilling something—she could not quite get it. She could not ask him whether he had ceased going to the little office. She felt balked and wounded.

One day when he telephoned that he would not eat at home, and came in after midnight, he flung down on the table a roll of bills.

"I've been playing for ten cents a point. Won rubber after rubber," he said indifferently.

Ernestine picked up the money and counted it.

"This will pay for—" she began, and Will exclaimed passionately:

"My G—d, Ernestine, what do you do with the money? I never see you that you don't have your hand held out to me."

Her fear gave her sudden fury.

"Am I to account to you for every penny?" she exclaimed. "I did without long enough. Now that you're earning, are you going to be niggardly with me? Don't you dare ask me what I do with my money!"

He made no answer, his face bored and scornful. She had been thinking that when he came in she would try to talk to him, but now the moment was passed. He undressed and got into bed, and said in his quick irritable way:

"Either turn out the light or go somewhere else. I'm tired."

"From working?" she asked, and then regretted swiftly. That was too much like that other time—that other pain.

Will did not answer, but turned his back and flung his arm, in the blue pajama sleeve, up over his eyes. Ernestine put out the lights except the small lamp at her side of the bed, and sat on the bed for a while, her feet drawn up and her arms clasped around her knees, thinking, her mind turning this way and that, her heart full of pain.

"Will?" she said at last gently, but he did not answer. She went around and stood beside him, looking down at him. He was asleep. His eyes and brow were hidden by the fold of his arm, but his wide mouth, his mobile, sensitive, excited mouth was in repose. Where had she seen that droop before? It was Elaine's. It was the gentle enduring fold of her mouth, when she had been little and sick so much, and had borne it all with such remarkable patience. Will's mouth was like that. Not in cut or form, but in the line of its expression. Will was bearing something. He was sick. He was enduring. Ernestine felt herself lost in a dark wood. Fiercely, passionately, she buried in herself her personal resentment and pain. She must find a way out for all of them. If she could see what to do! If something would show her the way!

Next morning Will ate his breakfast and went out, his manner more normal that it had been of late. He kissed her cheek, and said to her:

"Was I rough last night, kitten? You're pale. Sorry. I left the money in your desk drawer. Use it. It's all for you and the children, anyhow."

"Thanks, Will," she said indifferently, for now she did not care about the money at all. "Do you know anything about Loring and Lillian? We've not seen them for days. I've been spring housecleaning, and haven't even phoned her. I tried to get her just now, and no one answered."

"I think Loring and Pastano are having some trouble," said Will. "I saw Ruby a day or two ago, and he was black in the face about something Loring tried to put over on him. He'll be hard, if he gets turned against your brother-in-law. I'll call Loring at his office today, and see if I can find out what's up. Well, so long. I'm late."

Ernestine was busy with her family and household all morning, but with a sense of troubled foreboding in her heart. She went to the phone two or three times, but could not get Lillian's house nor Loring's office.

"Funny thing Lillian's maid isn't at home," she thought, but no one answered the prolonged ring at the other house. Ernestine went on about her work, and at eleven o'clock, Molly called her to the phone.

"Hello," said Ernestine.

It was a woman's voice, crisp, young and businesslike.

"Mrs. Will Todd?"

"Yes."

"This is the Van Hueten Clark Street Savings bank calling. Could you come down here right away?"

"Why—I don't know. Why should I?"

"I'm afraid I can't tell you that. You're to come here for a private conference. I believe it's important."

"Why, yes," said Ernestine. "I can come. But I don't understand. There's not a run on the bank, is there? I've all my savings—"

"Oh, no," said the cheerful voice. "Nothing like that, I assure you. Can you be here about ten minutes of twelve? The doorman will take you to the private office."

"Well," said Ernestine, "it all seems very mysterious, but I'll come. I'll be there at ten to twelve."

"Thank you, Mrs. Todd. And, please, I was to ask you to come by the Clark street car, and leave the car at Ontario street, instead of coming in your own car."

The crisp voice was disconnected. Ernestine put the receiver in place wonderingly. Well, there was no answer to her questions until she was there.

She left the street car at Ontario street and walked south. The doorman at the bank greeted her with a stiff nod, left his place and walked back through the big downstairs room. Ernestine followed him. He paused at the foot of the wide stairs that led to the balcony.

"The last door, on the left side of the balcony," he said to her in a low voice, and Ernestine went up the stairs, half frightened with this secrecy, walked forward again, toward the street, passed indifferent employees and opened an unmarked door, entered a private office, and closed the door behind her.

Ruby Pastano was standing by the green-curtained windows, looking down into the street through a tiny slit he held open with his finger. He turned to her.

"Ernestine!"

"Mr. Pastano!" She did not know whether she was relieved or more frightened. At least, here was some one familiar.

"Will you shake hands with me?"

He came to her, big, sober, non-committal and offered her his hand. Ernestine laid her hand in his big thick palm and noticed, as she did so, how extraordinarily long his fingers were, as he took her hand in both of his.

"I've been wondering, all the way over here, who it was that had sent for me," she said nervously. "I did not expect to see you—I don't know what I expected. I had a dreadful dream last night, and I've been frightened and nervous all day."

"Sit down, won't you?" the voice, silky, soft, as always, had in it a note of gentleness that went to Ernestine's heart, in spite of her formed and set prejudices against Ruby Pastano.

He drew up for her a chair upholstered in red pigskin, and she sat down, upright, ready for flight, on the edge of it. He seated himself before her on the empty desk.

"I didn't want you to come to my office, and I didn't want to go to your home, but I felt that I had to see you, Ernestine," he said gently, "do you believe that I am Will's friend?"

Ernestine felt that the occasion was momentous. She felt herself thrust back from the ordinary conventional judgments of her class and generation to something more fundamental. She answered naturally, honestly:

"Yes," she said, "yes, I do."

"Good," he said. "I've not done many unselfish things in my life, although I've done plenty that were dangerous—but for my own gain. But I'm going to do something for you now. I'm going to give you a chance to do something for somebody else. All last night I couldn't sleep, knowing that the plans that are coming forward today would hurt you. I knew that I must work some change if it were possible. I wanted to take into account the existence of little Ernestine, knowing that I must at least give her her chance. . . ."

"What do you mean, Ruby?" she asked, her thoughts turning to Will. How could he be involved with this man? He had never had any contact with Pastano except the free contact of friendship. He had never had a favor from him.

"No," he said, reading her thought, "not Will—but Loring—your sister's husband, Loring Hamilton. Did you know that he is ruined?"

"Loring—ruined? But how?"

"He will tell you, if he is fool enough to talk, that I have ruined him. I tell you that he ruined himself. He's in debt, he's in trouble, and he's under the shadow of an indictment—for bribing witnesses, in federal court—serious business, Ernestine."

"You mean—the grand jury? But how did this happen? Tell me, please."

"I cannot tell you everything. It's a long story, and involved, and, besides, it is unwise and unnecessary. I can give you a few facts. A week ago today your brother-in-law was secure. His security was dependent on his obedience. He had placed himself deliberately in a position where he had to do as he was told, in return for all that he had—and wanted. A week ago he decided to take a step that had been in his mind for some time. I knew that it was there. I was expecting it. Loring decided that he would break faith with me, cash in on his knowledge and cut the ties. He was thirsting for the water that he carried, but could not drink."

He paused, and the red of old anger burned in his cheeks.

Early Horseback Riders Disdained the Saddle

Ancient Greeks rode bareback or used a saddlecloth. Even the saddlecloth does not appear to have been used until the Fifth century. Xenophon says that the saddlecloth had been adopted by the Athenian cavalry, and from his advice as to the seat to be adopted pads or rolls seem to have been added. There were no stirrups until the time of the Emperor Maurice, 602. On a funeral monument of the time of Nero, in the museum at Mainz, is the figure of a horseman on a saddlecloth with something resembling the pommel and cantle of a saddle, but the first saddle proper is found in the so-called column of Theodosius at Constantinople, usually ascribed to the end of the Fourth century A. D., though it may be more than 100 years earlier.

In medieval times the saddle was much like that of the oriental saddle of today. In the military saddle of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth centuries the high front parts were armored. The side-saddle is said to date from the end of the Twelfth century.

"Great Britain"

Britannia Major, meaning Great Britain, was the name formerly given to the whole island to distinguish it from Britannia Minor, which was the name given to Brittany. James I used the title king of Great Britain, but without the sanction of parliament. It was not officially adopted until after the union of England with Scotland in 1707. After the union with Ireland in 1800 the country became known as the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

Lesson for November 23

THE RICH YOUNG RULER, REFUSING A LIFE OF SACRIFICIAL SERVICE

LESSON TEXT—Mark 10:17-27.

GOLDEN TEXT—And he said unto them all, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Failed Jesus.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Man Who Failed Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Choices Which Must Be Made.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—What Following Christ Means.

I. The Young Ruler (v. 17).

For a complete view of the characteristics of this young man see also Matthew 19:16-30 and Luke 18:18-30.

1. His virtues.

(1) He was courageous.

He was a man of high standing—a rich young ruler (Luke 18:18, 23). With manly courage he came to Jesus.

(2) Earnest (Mark 10:17).

He came and knelt before Jesus, thus showing his earnest sincerity.

(3) High aspirations (v. 16).

He wanted eternal life. He felt the need of preparing for a life beyond.

(4) Pious and moral (v. 20).

He professed to have conformed to God's only law from his youth.

(5) He believed that Christ could inform him of the "good thing" to be done to inherit eternal life.

2. His errors.

(1) About Christ (v. 16).

He esteemed Jesus to be good, but did not apprehend him as God.

(2) Concerning himself.

He was self-righteous. He thought he was good and that he could do something good.

(3) Concerning eternal life.

He had a defective theology. He thought that eternal life could be obtained by good works.

II. Jesus Dealing With the Young Ruler (vv. 17-22).

Jesus skillfully led the young man to see his errors and then put his finger on the weak spot in his life.

1. His question: "Why callest thou me good?" (v. 17).

His object in this was to lead the young man to a correct apprehension as to who he was. Before giving him a chance to answer he declared that only God was good, as if to say, "I am good and therefore God."

2. Jesus' answer to the young man's question (vv. 17-20).

"If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." Christ met him here on his own ground; namely, that of the law. He took the young man's level that the young man's real worth might be revealed. If one insists on getting life by doing something, the law declares what must be done. It must be perfectly kept.

3. Christ's command (vv. 21, 22).

Replying to Christ's citation of the commandments of the law, the young man glibly asserted that he had kept them from his youth up. He no doubt was sincere, but deceived. In Christ's command to go and sell his possessions and distribute to the poor, he put his finger upon the weak spot.

4. The young man's fatal decision (v. 22).

His going away sorrowful proved that he was covetous and did not love his neighbor as himself.

III. Jesus Showing the Peril of Riches (vv. 23-27).

This teaching concerning the peril of riches was most timely. Covetousness was fast taking hold of the people. Even one of his disciples, Judas, was well under its sway.

1. It is difficult for the rich to enter into the kingdom (vv. 23, 24).

This difficulty lies not in the possession of riches, for a man may possess great riches and be an heir of the kingdom. The difficulty lies in trusting in riches.

2. Entrance into the Kingdom is possible, though difficult (vv. 25, 26).

(1) It is possible for the grace of God to sanctify riches.

The very thing which hinders may become a great influence for good in the hand of a regenerated soul.

(2) It is possible for the grace of God to open man's eyes that he see his downward course and repent.

(3) It is possible for the grace of God to change a man from self-seeking to self-sacrifice.

(4) It is possible for the grace of God to make men humble.

IV. Rewards for Following Christ (vv. 27-30).

Those who turn their backs upon their kindred and possessions for the sake of Christ shall receive an hundredfold in this life, and eternal life in the world to come.

Wheelbarrow Conscience

Most people follow their conscience as a man follows a wheelbarrow, pushing it before him the way he wants to go.—King's Business.

The Carnal Mind

"The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be."

Seed Thoughts

Nothing can make a man truly great but being truly good, and partaking of God's holiness.—M. Henry.

To be a Healthy Woman watch your Bowels!

What should women do to keep their bowels moving freely? A doctor should know the answer. That is why pure Syrup Pepsin is so good for women. It just suits their delicate organism. It is the prescription of an old family doctor who has treated thousands of women patients, and who made a special study of bowel troubles.

Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is made from fresh, laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other harmless ingredients. It doesn't sicken or weaken you. No restrictions of habit or diet are necessary while taking it. But its action is thorough. It carries off the sour bile and poisonous waste. It does everything you want it to do. It is fine for children, too. They love its taste. Let them have it every time their tongues are coated or their skin is sallow.

When you've a sick headache, can't eat, are bilious or sluggish; and at the times when you are most apt to be constipated, take a little of this famous prescription (all druggists keep it ready in big bottles), and you'll know why Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is the favorite laxative of over a million women!

Control Temper

Do you lose your temper easily? When you do, are you usually ashamed later that you allowed another person or some untoward incident to so arouse you? That is the experience of most of us, says Dr. Alfred Adler, the psychiatrist, who is quoted in the Golden Book Magazine. "We can only interpret a bad temper as a sign of an inferiority complex," he says.

FARM BOARD MEMBER TO ADDRESS STATE CONVENTION

Carl Williams, member of the Federal Farm Board, Washington, D. C., will be a headliner at the annual convention of the Indiana Farm Bureau November 24 and 25 at the Claypool Hotel in Indianapolis. Mr. Williams is a former editor of an Oklahoma farm paper. He will discuss the progress of the activities of the Federal Farm Board during the past year and a half in carrying out the provisions of the Agricultural Marketing Act. The state farm organization and affiliated units are a part of the Federal Farm Board program through which cooperative marketing in Indiana is progressing on a very satisfactory basis, according to farm bureau officials.

Other nationally known speakers on the program are, J. P. Warbasse, president, Cooperative League of America, New York City; C. R. White, former president New York Farm Bureau and vice president of the New York state tax commission; C. E. Huff, Chicago, president, Farmers National Grain Corporation; P. O. Wilson, Chicago, secretary-manager, National Live Stock Marketing Asaociation, and Mrs. Chas. W. Sewell, Otterbein, director Home and Community Department, American Farm Bureau Federation and chairman of the Indiana women's committee.

The Indiana Wool Growers Association will meet during the convention on Monday at 3:30 P. M. when C. M. Allen, representing the National Wool Growers Association of Boston, will discuss the Federal Farm Board cooperative marketing plan.

A PLACE WITHOUT CHRISTMAS JOYS

C. P. O. Box No. 1234,
Shanghai, China, Oct. 11, 1930.

Dear Editor,

I wonder if you have any boys and girls among your readers. If so can they imagine a place in all the world without Christmas and its joys? One such place is down here on the "bottom-side of the world." The slant-eyed "yaller" kiddies here do not have Christmas trees. They do not "hang up baby's stockings the biggest you can get." Santa Claus with his sleigh and reindeer and bags of toys seldom finds his way to China. It may be because the roads are too narrow and the reindeer fear getting their feet wet in the rice-fields, or because there is so little snow and ice, or it may be because Chinese houses have so few chimneys, or perhaps Santa Claus is afraid of falling off the "bottom-side" of the earth, or may be even because nobody has shown him the way here.

Chinese children do not wait up at night to get a sly peep at him. Nor do they run down stairs very early on Christmas morning to see what Santa has put on the Christmas tree or with what wonderful things he has filled their stockings. Just think of it! A land with no Christmas! I say "No Christmas;" but it is not quite "No," for once in a while some English or American store will have a Santa Claus or a Christmas tree in the window for the sake of English boys and girls. Then lots of wee Chinese noses interestedly press against the window glass.

Then, too, I and my American friends, friends of little children are trying to be Santa Claus to at least nine hundred little kiddies in my ragged Sunday Schools in Shanghai. The happiest little Brownies you ever saw are my little "Chinks" as on Christmas Day I and my helpers tell them the glad Christmas Story and distribute among them apples, oranges, and peanuts; dolls and balls; toys and candy. How the eyes of my little people sparkle. How happily they smile and how gratefully they say, "Zia-zia-noong" (Thank, thank you,) as they receive the gifts of American friends. I wish all your boy and girl readers could be with us and see how happy my boys and girls are with the simplest gifts. They would be glad not only for the delight of my little ones; but they would better appreciate their own Christmas gifts. They would also realize how much boys and girls in China are like American boys and girls with their likes and dislikes, their joys and sorrows, their tears and smiles and would feel that they are indeed their own brothers and sisters.

Some say there is no Santa Claus. I think of him as that great big heart of love that tries to make other people happy. Don't you think that true, Mr. Editor?

Now may I ask you to carry to all your good readers, children and grown-ups, my best wishes for a Merry Christmas. Keep lots also for yourself.

Yours from the land of the "China Chinks."
(Rev.) H. G. C. Hallock.

Famous Frenchwoman

Anne Louise Germaine Necker, Baronne de Stael-Holstein, was born at Paris, April 22, 1766. Her father was the famous financier, Necker. Her mother was Suzanne Curchod. She was a plain child, but a coquette and desirous of prominence and attention. Excessive study and intellectual excitement injured her health, which was improved by the family's removal to Coppet, her father's estate on the lake of Geneva. In 1786 Mlle. Necker published a novel, "Sophie," and in 1790, a tragedy, "Jeanne Gray." Her first marriage was to Eric Magnus, baron of Stael-Holstein, first an attache of the Swedish legation and later minister. She was twenty at the time and her husband thirty-seven.

Bible in Hopi Language

The American Bible society recently completed the first publication of the four Gospels into the language of the Hopi Indians. For many months the proofs of the Gospels passed back and forth between the translator and the headquarters of the society in New York city in order to perfect the typesetting. The difficulty of the task may be gathered from the text of the first Beatitude, which follows: "Pas Hikwsit an ookiwyaquam hahlaypit epya, pi oveqatsit anqw monwatunatya hapi pumuy himuamniq'to."—Washington Star.

Luray Caverns

The caverns of Luray, at Luray, in the famous Shenandoah valley of Virginia, are perhaps the most wonderful in their beauty among the subterranean apartments of the world. Luray is a popular midway stopping point between North and South. The Smithsonian institution says of Luray: "Comparing this great natural curiosity with others of the same class, it is safe to say there is probably no other cave in the world completely and profusely decorated with stalactitic and stalagmitic ornamentation than that of Luray."

Four Canals in Scotland

Scotland has four canals, with a combined length of about 185 miles. The Caledonian canal connects the nearby continuous line of locks in Glenmore, and is devoted principally to tourist travel. The same is true of the Crinan canal across the peninsula of Kintyre. The Forth and Clyde canal, between Bowling and Grangemouth dates from 1790. The Union canal, a branch of the Forth and Clyde extends from near Falkirk to Edinburgh.—Rocky Mountain News.

Max is taking flying lessons and is also taking instructions in aero mechanics.

In a report filed by Charles E. Miser, county assessor, in the DeKalb circuit court it is revealed that the late Warren A. Mason of Butler, left an estate of $247,778.50, which establishes a record for this court. Mr. Mason, who was a business man at Butler for many years, died last December. The only heir is the widow, Mrs. Nettie L. Mason. Judge Endicott appointed the county assessor to appraise the estate for inheritance tax purposes and the assessment is expected to be the largest in the history of the county. The inventory shows $215,018.50 in personal property and $32,760 in real estate.

PREVENT ANEMIA IN PIGS

By Prof. W. B. Krueck

According to the Wisconsin Experiment Station, Anemia in suckling pigs is due to a lack of sufficient blood-forming elements, such as iron and copper in the milk of the brood sow.

The signs of Anemia are low Haemoglobin (red coloring matter) content of the blood, loss of appetite, depressed growth, lack of vigor and activity, quickened breathing and often sudden death.

As the disease develops the mucous membranes become pale. Examination of pig after death shows a spotted liver, large amounts of fluid in the abdomen, an enlarged heart, pale internal organs and muscles and an increased amount of fluid in the thorax. Probably the coating of the air cells of the lungs with mucous and excessive fluid plus an enlarged heart leads to the labored breathing which is commonly described as "thumps."

Although many pigs may develop thumps or an anemic condition sufficient to cause death, there is no question but what a great many hogs would do considerably better if they were furnished with sufficient material to build and maintain the haemoglobin content of the blood of the little pig during that period when it is sucking the brood sow.

Where corn alone is fed to the little pigs during this period we do not solve this problem and neither do we furnish the amount of protein that is essential to give this pig the necessary growth which is required to put him on the market at an early date. Therefore, the use of a good mixture, containing about 18% of protein and provided with a reasonable amount of minerals of the right type will hasten the development of the pig and prevent the anemic condition which may exist in a great many of our farm porkers and thereby limit their speed to the market.

For this reason it will pay hog feeders to place this type of feed before the pigs by the time they are a week old and give them an opportunity to help themselves.

RAISE BETTER CALVES

(By Dr. John M. Evvard)

There are a number of essentials which one must keep in mind in the raising of calves, otherwise disappointment is the rule.

Good feeding, of course, is first in order for without feed of desirable quality rightly allowed progress cannot be made even though all other essential requirements are taken care of. One can save considerable whole as well as skimmed milk by the intelligent use of a superiorly blended calf meal, but what we are most interested in now is some of the other factors which have to do with the health and well being of the calves.

Both sunshine and feed should be available so that the calf may have a choice as regards the meeting of his needs. The calf that has access to an outside run whereby sunshine and fresh air is gained, practically always shows good judgment in regard to the needs for each. Sometimes the calves should be prevented from going out into the sunshine particularly if the days are too cold but one must use his judgment in these regards.

To promote exercise which gives the calf a chance to unbend his limbs and thus promote growth, a reasonable size paddock is in order. The feeding and sleeping quarters should be kept scrupulously clean so that they may always be comfortable and sanitary.

In providing ventilation, one needs to be careful to fix things so that cold draughts are not experienced; this needs to be watched much more carefully in the late fall, winter and spring months than during the summer time.

Many folks make a mistake in not keeping clean, fresh water before the calves at all times. Since most of the growth of the young calf is water and since he needs so much if it to promote his digestive and other functions, it should be available at all hours of the day or night.

The feeding utensils must be kept very clean and a good sunning of the equipment every day helps out wonderfully. The utensils should be placed when in sunning in such manner that the sun gets to the inside so as to promote proper sanitation through sunshine disinfection.

One needs to watch carefully for vermin such as lice and get rid of them when they are first observed, otherwise they multiply rapidly and create much discomfort and much disturbance.

Then too the wise herdsman sees to it that when the calves are in the barns they are not confined to dark, dingy, sultry quarters but are kept in stalls that are well lighted, pleasant and well aired.

Finally one of the greatest cautions to observe is not to over feed for more calves are lost from over feeding than under feeding when the feeds are right.

Bee May Give Up Lease, but She's Good Tenant

About 8,000,000 colonies of bees acknowledge human protection in the United States and return for it more than 140,000,000 pounds of honey a year. It is a curious relationship that exists between men and bees. For no matter how long domesticated, the bee remains a true barbarian. Though she may trace her ancestry through hundreds of generations of hive-dwellers, she, without a moment's notice, may take to the woods, make her home in a hollow tree and revert completely to the primitive.

The compact between man and bee is that of landlord and tenant. The beekeeper tricks his bees into staying with him by furnishing apartments to their liking. But the bee never surrenders her liberty nor her complete right of choice. If she is not pleased with the condition of the new house offered her at swarming time, she promptly moves out and takes to tall timber.

But the beekeepers have learned to humor the fickle whims of their winged tenants. That 140,000,000 pounds of honey was worth about $23,000,000, a pretty good rental for the type of houses and service the bees required.

Historic Old Pepys House Part of College System

Impington hall, historic home of the Pepys family, was presented to the Cambridgeshire education committee as a memorial to John Chivers, founder of the jam firm, says a London dispatch to the New York Times.

Impington hall forms the nucleus of a village college for the area of Histon and Cottenham, from which village the head of the Pepys family, Lord Cottenham, takes his title.

The house was begun about the middle of the Sixteenth century by John Pepys. It includes a central hall and gallery and is still substantially what it has been for the last 300 years, though there were additions in 1862 and 1909.

Allusions to Impington in Samuel Pepys' diary begin on July 15, 1661, with, "Rode to Impington, where I found my old uncle sitting all alone like a man out of the world."

The educational authorities have not altered the old buildings, which are in a good state of preservation and include many beautiful paneled rooms with Seventeenth century ceilings.

Color in the Sea

The most beautiful of tropical seafolk is the moonfish, often called the ghostfish because of its paper-thin form of a silvery color. The angelfish is as gaily colored as the rainbow with long trailing fins of contrasting tints. The squirrel fish flaunts a deep coral shade and great dark eyes. The parrot fish attracts attention as much by its gorgeous colorings of turquoise blue, plum purple, or bright green as by the peculiar bony beak.

Viking History

In a little island in the middle of the Irish sea there is held every year on July 5 (representing midsummer day, old style), the promulgation of the Manx laws. The scene of the ceremony is Tynwald hill, in the Isle of Man.

It is a living relic of the important part played in the history of England by the Vikings, who from the close of the Eighth century made plundering excursions to the British Isles, and then settled first in the Orkneys and Shetlands, later in the Hebrides, and thence gradually in the western isles of Scotland; in Ireland, where they were met by their brethren coming round by the south, and in Man, whence they spread eastward till they joined forces with their kinsfolk in York.

DEBUTANTE FINDS VELVET FROCK IS SUITABLE FOR ALL OCCASIONS

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Wearing a swanky velvet bolero suit in the morning to go shopping, and at midday in the smart restaurants a trim and trig little velvet frock sans trimming, and at fashionable tea in the afternoon a flattering lace-embellished dressy velvet gown, not yet does the debutante busy in the social swirl "call it a day" and quit, but on into the night does this style-wise sophisticate continue to wear velvet.

What's more, her vanity and her love of the beautiful is not satisfied with velvet for the frock to wear to the "formal" and the dance, but she who has made her bow to society must needs have a "scrumptuous" ermine-trimmed velvet wrap to wear with it. And just to show you how charming a velvet-clad young woman can look, here's her picture in two poses, as she appears with and without her adorable wrap.

Being fully aware that the smartest thing of the season is black velvet trimmed in white ermine for the evening wrap, she chooses a girlish cape-model as illustrated. When it comes to her gown she indulges in nile green transparent velvet, does the "coming out" daughter. Of course there is not a particle of trimming on the frock of her choice, for the better styles rely solely on the beauty and luster of their material for effect. And here's where fabric manipulation comes to the rescue, its artful intricacies being sufficiently decorative, such as, for instance, the softly draped Vionnet neckline which graces the semi-fitted bodice and the deftly paneled skirt which is, as it should be, of dancing length as the standing pose of the pretty debutante so clearly shows.

Had this young fashionable selected light turquoise blue for her frock instead of pale green the color scheme would likewise have qualified as 100 per cent perfect, for the mode is all enthusiasm concerning costumes for both daytime and evening which have gone "black-and-blue."

A touch of blue enlivens many a black velvet chapeau this season and as for the myriads of dresses made of black velvet with splotches of flattering blue, the list is infinite. The latest note is the costume jewelry set to wear with black velvet. This same includes, in addition to necklace, bracelet and earrings, a clever ornament set with turquoise to be clipped on the hat at just that point which will make it most becoming.

Varnish Linoleum and Obviate Much Scrubbing

Any suggestion that means less scrubbing of floors is always welcomed by the farmer's wife. How many times she has cleaned the kitchen linoleum, only to have it tracked up the next moment with muddy footprints. What it really needs, however, is not more scrubbing, but more protection. A coat of varnish on printed linoleum will give it a smooth finish which resists dirt and requires nothing more than an occasional going over with a damp cloth to keep it in spotless condition. Varnish will also lengthen the life of the linoleum and preserve the colors. When the surface has been waxed, the wax should be removed with turpentine or benzine before the varnish is applied.

Unexplored Wilds

There are still large tracts of unexplored country in various parts of the world, notably the Amazon basin in Brazil, in the Antarctic, in Central Africa, and among the islands of the Southern Pacific ocean.

Hints for Housekeepers

Eggs that are stored in water glass need not be put down all at one time; they may be added as convenient.

• • •

Glass supports under the legs of the stove or kitchen cabinet will keep them from cutting the linoleum.

• • •

If the color of a garment is likely to run, wash and rinse it rapidly in cool water and dry it quickly.

• • •

When asparagus is canned, the large tough ends may be used for canned soup instead of being wasted.

• • •

Silk and rayon garments should be washed in lukewarm water and dried away from direct heat and sunlight.

• • •

Keep egg custards, flavored with coconut, coffee or chocolate, in the refrigerator, for luncheons or late suppers for the children.

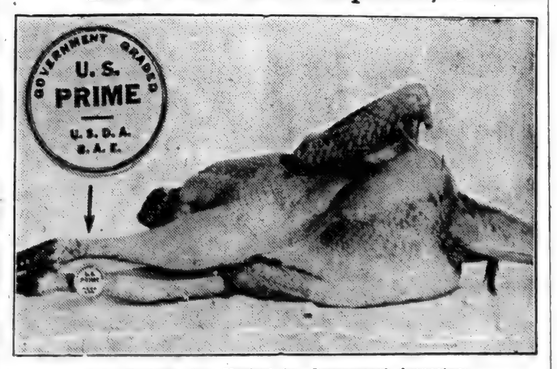
• • •

Slip covers for upholstered furniture of unbleached linen or similar materials help to make the living room look fresh and cool in summer.

• • •

Buttermilk is an excellent summer drink. It has the same food value as skim milk but is more easily digested by some people because the casein is clotted by the acid.

Tags Attached to Turkeys Indicate Birds Have Been Inspected, Graded



How Turkeys Are Marked by Government Inspectors.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When grandmothers lived chiefly in the country and raised their own turkeys it was a widespread tradition for all the branches of a family to gather at the old farm home to share the Thanksgiving feast, praise the cook, and exchange news.

Modern conditions make it more convenient at times for both the younger and the older generation to discontinue these very large old-fashioned Thanksgiving gatherings. The various younger branches of the family often decide to celebrate Thanksgiving individually, or to take their turn entertaining the old folks. One reason for the change is the fact that fine turkeys are now available in almost every market throughout the winter, as well as at the holiday season. So they are less of a novelty in themselves, and other conditions lead the modern young housewife to try her hand at cooking them rather than to look for an invitation to the old home.

The less experienced housekeeper however is apt to hesitate before the problem of selecting the royal bird. The United States Department of Agriculture suggests that when she goes to market she should look for tags attached to the legs of the turkeys displayed for sale, indicating that the birds have been inspected and graded by the bureau of agricultural economics. The turkeys on the retail market generally fall under one of three groups: "Prime," "choice," and "medium." The principal difference is in the amount of fleshing and the occurrence of defects due to dressing. Prime turkeys are full-fleshed; choice are well-fleshed, and medium are fairly well fleshed. A turkey that bears one of these grades carries its own assurance of tenderness and palatability if properly cooked.

These graded turkeys are widely distributed. A single group of chain stores may absorb as many as 150 carloads of 2,000 turkeys each. Of course the housewife must go to market with some idea of the weight bird she will need. If only four people are to enjoy the dinner, an eight-pound turkey will be ample; in fact, it would serve six or even eight if necessary. Perhaps a ten-pound bird would be a better choice for eight persons, and so on, correspondingly, with an increased number.

One must know, too, whether she wants to cook a young or an older turkey, the latter requiring longer, slower cooking. Age is distinguished, as with other poultry, by the flexibility of the tip of the breast bone, which bends easily in young birds.

As the government grades indicate, fleshing is the principal consideration in selecting a turkey. An exceptionally fine bird will have a broad full-fleshed breast, and the back, hips, and pin bones will be fully covered with fat. Young birds are softer meated than older ones, which have coarser flesh and require longer cooking.

A good turkey should also be well bled, well dressed, and free from pin feathers. The crop should contain no feed. There should be no flesh bruises and very few skin abrasions. A dry-picked turkey is to be preferred.

Lima Beans in Tomato Sauce Fine Winter Dish

In colder weather the dried legumes, such as peas, beans of different kinds, lentils and so on, come into the menus more often. This tasty recipe for limas is from the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture:

2 cups dried lima beans	1 large onion, sliced
2 quarts water	2 tbs. flour
2 cups canned tomatoes	Salt
8 whole cloves	Pepper
¼ lb. sliced bacon	Tabasco

Wash the beans and soak them overnight in water to cover. In the morning pour off this water, cook in two quarts of lightly salted water for about one-half hour, or until tender but not broken, and drain. Simmer the tomatoes with the cloves for ten minutes and strain off the juice. Cook the bacon in a skillet until crisp, remove from the fat, drain on absorbent paper, and keep warm. Brown the onion in the bacon fat, stir in the flour until well blended, add the tomato juice and beans, and cook until the sauce thickens. Season to taste with salt, pepper, and tabasco, and serve with the strips of bacon over the top.

THE EVENING STORY FOR CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

Rose had been invited to visit her cousins. She was so excited. She thought the trip would be wonderful. She had never been so far away from home before—a two hours' trip on the train was the longest she had ever taken and this was to be much more of a trip.

"Then I shall accept for you?" her mother asked.

"Oh, please, please, I'd adore going," Rose said.

Her mother went to her desk, took a pen in her hand and began to write the letter.

The letter was finished. Just at that moment Rose's little fox terrier dog, Bennie, came in.

He saw the letter and wagged his tail as he barked.

Bennie used to take letters in his mouth and carry them out to the postman when he would hear his whistle.

"Bennie wants to take this letter," Rose's mother said.

Bennie barked that was what he wanted to do.

"Oh Mother," said Rose.

"Yes, dear," answered her mother, as she handed the letter to Bennie.

"Wait a moment, Bennie," said Rose. Bennie turned half around and waited.

"I had forgotten all about him for a moment," said Rose, feeling unhappy and ashamed. She knew that Bennie never forgot about her.

"Mother," continued Rose, "is Bennie going too?"

Bennie's ears bristled. He wondered where they were going! Perhaps a walk over the hills! Maybe a visit to the nearest pond and a game with sticks.

But no, it didn't seem as though he were going to be taken anywhere.

He looked sad and his ears drooped.

"No, they don't like dogs there," said Rose's mother. "When they come here it is different.

Bennie Was Sent Off With the Letter.

"If Bennie scratches our furniture a little or gets on a cushion we won't mind.

"But they think a dog is a trouble and are always afraid he will do some harm to something."

Rose decided she would go on the trip, but she was sad she could not take Bennie.

Bennie was off with the letter, and Rose's mother promised to take the best of care of him while her little girl was away.

But Rose was sad at the thought of leaving Bennie. Still it would not be for long and she knew she would have a good time.

When Rose's trunk—or father her daddy's trunk which she was borrowing—was brought down from the attic next day, Bennie sat by the trunk and cried.

He didn't want to move away all day long. He didn't want to play or scamper.

Rose kissed his little black-spotted ears and she cried, too, but she felt it would be all right in a little while.

The next day she started to leave. But how far do you suppose she got?

Only to the gate of the front yard. She simply couldn't leave her little dog!

FOOD HINTS THAT WILL INTEREST ALL MEMBERS OF THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

"There must be no stint of labor where labor will tell for our neighbor's happiness: but no wasteful extravagance of it where it will not profit."

The personality in food is supplied in various ways, first its appearance, next its taste, then, of course, its food value, which appeals to the calorie counter. When food is dull, lacking in color, tastiness, is insipid, look to the little spanish pepper to give zest to your dishes.

The flavor of the pimiento is not its only attraction; the color adds brilliance to an otherwise dull dish. The little pepper comes packed in several sizes so that if one serves two, a small bottle is provided, and when it is to be the chief ingredient there is the seven-ounce can. For stuffing, one may use any desired mixture. The peppers should be drained, placed in muffin pans, and they are ready to be filled.

Pimientoes Stuffed, With Mushroom Sauce. — Cook one small onion (chopped), one stalk of celery also chopped in two tablespoonfuls of fat until tender. Add one-half pound of round steak (ground), salt, pepper, and a dash of cayenne to season, and cook five minutes; remove from the heat, add three-fourths of a cupful of cooked rice, one slightly beaten egg; mix well and fill the peppers. Bake until brown.

Savory Sandwiches.—Take a small can of pimientoes, three and one-half ounce size, chop after draining, add one-fourth cupful of peanut butter, one-fourth cupful of sweet pickle, and one-fourth cupful of mayonnaise. Chop the pickle and mix all together, adding salt to taste. Spread on lightly buttered bread and cut into any desired form.

Pimiento Canapes.—Split the six pimientoes after draining, using a seven-ounce can. Sprinkle the inner surface with salt and cayenne. Place a rectangular slice of cheese lengthwise of the pepper and roll up. Skewer with toothpicks securely. Roll in flour, cook in a small amount of fat three minutes or until the cheese melts and the flour browns. Serve on oval slices of toast well buttered and hot.

Baked Spinach.—Pick over and wash three pounds of spinach, wash thoroughly and cook in only the water which clings to the leaves. When tender, chop and add salt, pepper, onion juice, butter and bread crumbs, using two tablespoonfuls of butter, one of onion juice, one-half cupful of fine crumbs. Now add three well-beaten eggs and beat in well. Put into a well-greased baking dish, sprinkle with more crumbs well buttered and bake in a hot oven.

Lyonnaise String Beans.—Cut four slices of bacon into small pieces and fry until crisp. Remove the bacon and add one onion sliced thin to the bacon fat, cook slightly until light brown. Add four cupfuls of canned string beans, bacon, salt and pepper to season. Serve with a dash of tarragon vinegar.

Liver Loaf.—Take one pound of calf liver and cook in boiling water with a small onion until tender. Cool, put through a food chopper, onion and all. Mix with one teaspoonful of salt, one beaten egg, one cupful of soft bread crumbs, one-half cupful of milk and form into a loaf. Bake in a well-greased baking dish covered with three slices of bacon. Bake for an hour.

Women Take Lessons in Adjusting Their Sewing Machines

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Ten women of Phelps county, Nebraska, recently took their sewing machines to a clinic. The machines had various minor but disturbing ailments, such as stitch skipping, thread breaking, or a general showing up in their operation. The average age of the machines was a little over seventeen years. The oldest had been in service thirty-nine years.

An engineer from the agricultural extension service of the state university, Paul B Hoff, presided at the clinic. Under his direction the owners cleaned, oiled and adjusted their machines until they worked satisfactorily. After returning home, the women of the clinic, as part of their responsibility, gave their neighbors the benefit of their training, sometimes assisting in the adjustment of machines and in other cases showing the owners how to clean, oil, and adjust them themselves. Altogether 77 machine owners learned how to care for this item in their home-making equipment.

The clinic was one of the features of the home management program on which farm women of Phelps county are working with the assistance of Ilha Anderson, country home demonstration agent, according to reports to the United States Department of Agriculture.

An Interesting Way to Prepare Sweet Potatoes

Boil six medium-sized sweet potatoes with the skins on until tender. Remove the skin, add one tablespoonful of butter, three tablespoonfuls of sweet milk, sugar to suit the taste and mash well together. Add one cupful of raisins that have been soaked overnight. Put into a baking dish and place marshmallows around the top. Brown in the oven. This make a delicious dish to serve with meat at dinner

FOR COLDS— ALKALINIZE YOUR SYSTEM

Doctors everywhere are prescribing this new treatment for colds:

Begin when you feel a cold coming. Take a tablespoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, morning, noon and night, the first day. Do the same second day. Then only at night.

Colds reduce the alkalinity of your system. That's what makes you feel achy, feverish, weak, half-sick. Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is alkali in harmless, palatable form. It checks the symptoms of colds by restoring the alkalinity of your system.

Relieves sour stomach, indigestion, gas, over-acidity. All drugstores.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY

ABOUT ten million women in America are engaged in industry. The past decade has witnessed a very large increase, so that at present one-fourth of the total number of persons employed are women. Women have entered business offices as secretaries, typists, bookkeepers. An opportunity has also been open to them through the introduction of labor-saving machinery, most of which is now operated by women.

L. A. Barrett.

The professions are also welcoming women to their ranks—physicians, lawyers, judges, public accountants, etc. The feminine touch is also clearly discernible in modern architecture, advertising, decorative art, journalism, buyers for large merchandising firms. The motion picture business, like the theater, could not function without the services of women.

In the recent report of the director of the census bureau, the question is seriously raised whether women "will compete by imitating man's way in business and professions, or will she introduce methods of her own, which are different? Will she revolutionize business and politics?" This is a very interesting speculation.

Another reason why women are welcomed in industry is that her wage is in many cases much lower than her brother's. Just why this is so remains a question of justice. If she does the same work with the same degree of satisfaction to her employer, why should she receive less pay? Why discriminate? When a sufficiently large number of women are employed to make organization possible, perhaps such discrimination will no longer be possible.

Some interesting problems have arisen as the result of the employment of women in industry? What effect will it have upon society? Will it tend to destroy the home? Will it result in fewer marriages or more divorces? Will the condition ever arise in our country as it did in France, which caused Napoleon to exclaim, "What France needs is mothers."

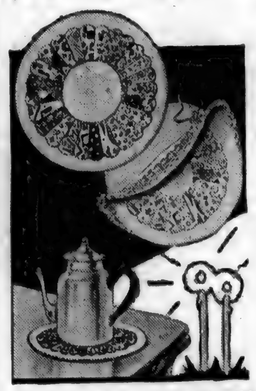
Dainty Presents for Friends at Christmas

Patchwork Hot-Dish Mats



The source of inspiration for this attractive hot-dish mat is none other than grandma's calico patchwork quilt blocks. The pattern speaks for itself. This circular motif made of bits of bright calico patched together as for any quilt block, is appliqued on a circle of unbleached muslin cut an inch larger all around than the asbestos mat which it is to cover. An openwork edge is crocheted around this and a drawstring is run through and tied at the back. These mats are not only useful, being removable and washable, but they are decorative.

Seek Holy Relics in Turkish Capital City

A Twentieth-century quest of the Holy Grail and the Cross of Calvary is under way in Constantinople. This quest is bound up with the efforts of a Danish archeologist, Carl Vett, of Copenhagen, to preserve what is probably the oldest monument in the world to symbolize religious tolerance. The monument, dating from 326 A. D., is the column of Constantine, founder of Constantinople, which still stands at the corner of a busy thoroughfare. The cross on which Christ was crucified, brought from Golgotha by Constantine's mother, St. Helena of York, was placed, according to ancient authorities, within the base of this column, side by side with the Palladium of old Rome. More shadowy tradition holds that the relics placed within the column included the Holy Grail as well as twelve baskets containing crumbs from the 5,000 loaves of the Biblican miracle and the adze with which Noah built the ark. The statue, the inscriptions and the three topmost drums of the column were knocked down by an earthquake almost 1,000 years ago. Seven drums of prophyry still stand erect, but the lower drums and the marble base were buttressed with sandstone 200 years ago by the Turks to prevent the falling of the column.

Elections in Germany

Article 22 of the constitution of the German republic states that all national elections must be held on Sundays or public holidays. This provision enables the largest number of voters to take part in the elections and causes the least interruption of business. This practice is not new. National elections in Germany were held on Sundays and holidays under the imperial regime.

One-half of the taxes assessed for state, county and school purposes are due and payable on or before the first Monday in May, 1931.
The second installment is due and payable on the first Monday in November, 1931.
In case the first installment is not paid by the first Monday in May, 1931, then the whole amount becomes delinquent and is subject to a penalty of ten per cent.
Administrators, guardians, agents, and others, who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as undivided estates, etc., are requested to settle such taxes before the last few weeks, as it takes time to make divisions and make separate receipts therefor.
All persons should be careful to examine their receipts and see that all property they wish to pay taxes on is included in their receipts.

THE TREASURER WILL NOT BE RESPONSIBLE

For the penalty and charges and delinquent taxes resulting by reason of any omission of the person paying such taxes to state definitely on what property, in whose name, and in what township or corporation it was assessed. Persons are liable for taxes on all property owned by them on the first day of March, 1930. Property will appear in the same name for the payment of the second installment as for the first installment of each year. Call on the auditor for errors or reductions claimed in taxes. The treasurer cannot make such reductions. No extension will be given after the FIRST MONDAY IN MAY, 1931.
County orders will not be paid to anyone owing delinquent taxes; all persons are warned against purchasing such orders.
The annual sale of delinquent lands and lots will take place on the Second Monday in February, 1931.

Said proposals will be for material used, all labor performed and employed for the full completion of such improvement in accordance with the report of the engineer and viewers and the said plans, specifications and profile on file in the Auditor's office. No additional or extra compensation will be allowed for additional work or for additional material furnished or claimed to have been done or furnished. The length of the highway to be improved is not more than three miles. Each bidder must submit with his proposal his bond with sufficient surety, payable to the State of Indiana in a penal sum equal to double the amount of his proposal conditioned for the faithful performance of the work on which he bids. If personal sureties are given they shall be resident freeholders of the State of Indiana, at least one of whom shall be a resident of said DeKalb County.

Each bidder shall also file with his porposal, his affidavit to the effect that he has not entered into any combination, collusion or agreement with any person relative to the price to be paid by any one; that he has done nothing to prevent any person from bidding and that his bid is made without reference to any other person or to his bid. Said improvement will be let as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder, qualifying as such.

The Board of Commissioners reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

The work shall be completed within a time to be fixed by agreement between the Board and the successful bidder.

Marriage in Old Rome

There were three different modes by which marriage could be contracted among the ancient Romans. The marriages of the patricians were celebrated in the presence of ten witnesses, and with a variety of religious ceremonies peculiar to their order. The plebians married after two different forms: one was a species of sale, "emptio vendito;" and the other simply by the cohabitation of the parties for a year, which by law constituted a marriage.—Detroit News.

The American Red Cross in Action

A class in Life-Saving at one of the 1930 Red Cross institutes. Here are learned all the rules of water safety—protection for self and others.

Wreckage at Frost, Texas, from a 1930-model tornado. Almost as soon as the twister had roared over the horizon the Red Cross was on the job with food, clothing, medicine and organized relief.

A recent Red Cross demonstration of artificial respiration. The prone pressure method has proved its efficacy in thousands of cases of drowning, electrocution, and suffocation.

All happy at the most recent of the annual parties for disabled war veterans on the White House lawn in Washington! Veterans and enlisted men of Army and Navy, whether sound or otherwise, are grateful for Red Cross service.

AMERICAN RED CROSS AFIELD

What does the Red Cross do? What makes its call—in the words of President Hoover—so "mandatory upon the heart of the Nation?"

The Red Cross job is big. In a single year the expenditure, community, national and international, runs to nearly $10,000,000. Often it is higher. Every day the call upon the Red Cross grows more urgent.

What do the figures show—those mute, cold statistics that tell but half the story of Service? They show:

More than 450,000 First Aid certificates have been issued; more than 300,000 individuals instructed in Life Saving.

Assistance extended in a single year to the victims of 71 disasters in 40 states.

10,000 nurses on the roll of the Red Cross; 800 nurses in public health work, 88 in itinerant activities, 1500 teaching home hygiene and care of the sick.

120,000 children and adults taught nutrition each month.

Service of the kind that is beyond the scope of Government to 30,000 disabled World War veterans and the 241,000 men of the regular Army and Navy.

10,000 families being assisted by Civilian Home Service.

7,000,000 members of the Junior Red Cross corresponding with Juniors in foreign lands, thus furthering the cause of international understanding; cheering the sick, brightening school rooms, learning ideals of service for others.

Half a million volunteer workers—exemplifying the very heart and spirit of the Red Cross—making 3,000,000 surgical dressings, 210,000 garments, 190,000 Braille pages for the fingers of the blind in twelve months.

16,200 Chapters and Branches engaged in this service program made possible by the annually-tendered support of more than 4,000,000 adult members.

Look at the pictures on this page. Multiply the incidents according to the above figures. Watch each precious membership dollar as it stretches to meet the increasing demands. Then ask yourself, "What shall MY PART be?"

These school girls enjoy the periodical checking of height, weight and teeth by the Red Cross public health nurse.

This little fellow is getting a running start in life, for the mother has been taught in a Red Cross class of Home Hygiene and Care of the Sick.

An Easter basket brings to a little patient in Children's Hospital, Detroit, courage to face an operation for mastoiditis. Smiles like these brighten the faces of 7,000,000 Juniors and untold thousands who are remembered by the children of the Red Cross.

SHARING OUR CHILDREN'S JOYS

Mrs. Nestor Noel

"Are you going to the school entertainment?" I asked a mother one day.

"Oh, no, I haven't time," she answered.

"I believe your daughter is to take an important part," I continued.

"Yes, I believe Myrtle's role is rather important," she assented.

She seemed quite indifferent. I do not suppose she really was so, in her heart. When Myrtle was ill, I remember she nursed that child, night and day, and hardly left the sick room more than a few minutes at a time.

I wonder why some mothers show such unselfishness during sickness whereas at other times, they appear wholly indifferent. Is it because their love only awakens when danger threatens the child?

These mothers do not seem to realize that they may lose their children in more ways than one. Sickness is not the only enemy that steals our boys and girls from us. If we show our love for our children only when they are hurt, we may quickly lose their confidence. We must learn to share their joys as well as their sorrows if we want to hold their affection forever. We should play with them when they are little, rejoice in their childish successes and share their later triumphs. I love the sight of a child rushing to Mother with each new-found treasure, perhaps a flower or seashell. One can forecast the mother's future influence at once by the way she receives her child. When she enters into the child's interest wholeheartedly, you can see that she is the sort of mother who will always be a real "chum."

You have heard women say, "Oh, yes, it is very pretty. Run along now." If that represents the mother's habitual attitude she is lacking in sympathy, and will not realize that the child is repelled by the coldness back of the words.

I remember when I was at boarding school, I used to notice the mothers who came to take their children home for the holidays or sometimes merely to visit them. No mother came to visit me or share my joys, and so, as lonely children must often do, I used to watch the other mothers hungrily, longingly. I used to wonder in my childish way, which mother I would like to be mine if I were allowed to choose a mother. It was not the over-dressed woman that I chose. It was the one who seemed to be all in all to her children. It was not the one who held them at arm's length and said, "Do not be so rough; you will crush my dress." Oh, no! It was not these I wanted! It was the one whose children rushed into her arms, the one to whom all wanted to talk at the same time; it was the mother who made herself a "chum" that I chose.

I love to see a mother playing with her children, I like to see her link her arm familiarly with theirs as they walk in the woods together. I like to hear her just as eager as they are about the things that give them pleasure. The "play" mother who has shared her children's joys from the first instant of their birth, has a greater chance of keeping their love in later years than the mother who has given them only food and clothing. We may often learn much more about our children by playing ball with them than by watching them through a long illness. The mother who plays with her children is the mother who is dearly loved.

OBITUARY

Henry Beery was born in Portage County, Ohio, January 12, 1849. Departed this life November 20, 1930, aged 81 years, 10 months, and 8 days. On February 24, 1876 he was united in marriage to Samantha J. Friedt, to this union four children were born. Mrs. Daisy Markle of Spencerville, Ind., Martin, of Grabill, Ind., Clarence, of St. Paul, Minn., Harlay, of Fort Wayne, Ind. Nearly fifty years ago he united with East Springfield M. P. Church. His membership was transferred to Harlan, Ind., M. P. Church, after Springfield was abandoned. When nine years old he moved with his parents to Springfield Township, where he spent the remainder of his life. Three weeks ago he was taken seriously ill, and was taken to the Lutheran Hospital at Fort Wayne. After a few days of treatment there, he was brought home to await the end.

He seemed to know from the first that the summons would soon come. Often calling upon Jesus, and praising Him for being so good to him, and that He had spared hs life so long. His last words were "I want to see Jesus." Those by his side told him "he soon would," which rested him so much.

He has been a loving husband to his invalid wife, who has not walked for twenty-four years, doing all he could to help her. A kind father and good neighbor. Besides the widow and four children, he leaves one brother, Ely Beery of Clarkston, Mich., six grandchildren and four great grandchildren to mourn his departure, (one grandson, Henry Beery, departed this life nearly eleven years ago.) Also a host of friends and neighbors.

Funeral services were held Saturday afternoon at the home with burial at Scipio. Rev. B. W. Mayfield officiating.

STUDENTS TO ENJOY VACATION

More than 4200 Indiana University students at Bloomington and Indianapolis will be on Thanksgiving vacation this week, mainly in their homes scattered throughout every county of Hoosierdom. DeKalb county, is represented at the state university this fall with 24 students.

Approximately 92 percent of the university's student body this fall is from the Hoosier state, which indicates that Indiana university has the largest all-Hoosier enrollment of any institution of higher learning in the state. Total enrollment this fall of 4224 students shows a decrease from last year of only 54 students, in spite of the economic depression. Many departments of the university, however, are filled to capacity as in past years and the school of medicine was forced to turn away this fall a group of 501 seeking admission. Six hundred and thirty-five students applied for admission but laboratory space was sufficient to accomodate only 134.

Every county in Indiana, 31 other states, and six different countries are represented in this year's enrollment at the university. The registrar's records show that 3529 students are registered on the campus at Bloomington, 2207 men and 1322 women. On the Indianapolis campus, 659 students are enrolled in the medical, dental, nursing, and social service units of the university. Of the Indianapolis enrollment, 448 are men and 247 women.

The following DeKalb county students are registered at Indiana University this semester:

For what have we to give thee thanks, O God?
Not Life. Millions of others 'neath a favored sky
Sip of its fullness, revel in its joys,
Eat, and are merry, 'ere their turn to die.
Not Happiness. Exuberance of youth
Has swayed their wills, and passions, in control
Have done their part; contrasting light and shade
Have left their lasting impress on the soul.
Nor yet for Health we thank thee, Lord, today,
With all it brings to make of us a man!
Billions will claim its treasures, and rejoice
As every one must do, so many can.
For Heritage we give thee thanks, sincere;
Higher than Life, or Happiness, or Health
We prize the courage that our fathers had,
And reckon large, its footed totals, wealth!
For what have we to give thee thanks, O God?
For every sorrow that has wrought for good,
For every bead of man's perspiring blood
Spilled, which has proved our human brotherhood!

EVANGELISTIC SERVICES AT M. P. CHURCH

Sunday night marked the beginning of the special series of services at the M. P. Church, when a splendid audience turned out, besides the splendid choir of fifteen voices, under the direction of Rev. and Mrs. C. S. Thompson, all together made a very fine opening service.

Rev. B. W. Mayfield, pastor, expects to do the preaching with possibly the introduction of some help as the meeting progresses.

Special object lessons for children are given each evening and the children will be taught songs for their part of the program. They meet twice a week at the church for practice following school.

Rev. Hollopeter of Ashley filled the pulpit Monday evening, representing the DeKalb County Ministerial Association, which was to have met at the Lutheran Church. Following the supper the church folks, pastors present including, Rev. Keller, Auburn Christian Church; Rev. Johnson, Auburn Mission; Rev. Cravens, Auburn Presbyterian; Rev. Wickersham, Auburn M. E. and Rev. Stoll, St. Joe Luteran Church, joined in the evening services.

Mrs. Thompson plays the Harp and Vibraphone at each service and special music in vocal duets and solos and congregational singing and choir numbers are features of these services. The people of this community are cordially invited to attend these services which convene each night at 7:30.

Mrs. Wm. Randall left Wednesday for Chicago to visit in the home of her son, Harry Randall and wife over Thanksgiving.

A RARE MUSICAL TREAT COMING TO ST. JOE

On Thursday, December 4, St. Joe is to be honored by the appearance here in concert of one of the very best bands in the state. Director John L. Ver Weire will bring his News-Sentinel Boys' Band from Fort Wayne to the High School Gymnasium on that night.

Complete instrumentation is assured, for there are sixty members in the organization. Mr. Ver-Weire, himself, is a graduate of the Royal Conservatory of Music at Ghent, Belgium. In addition to the prestige he has earned as a director, all band players know him as a composer. His marches have been played by the band of the world-famous John Philip Sousa. The great Marine, Army, and Navy bands use these compositions. As soloist, besides Mr. Ver-Weire, is featured Mr. George O. Thain, Fort Wayne, playing a cornet.

The very fact that all persons living so near Fort Wayne have heard about the excellence of their music and many have heard them play, will encourage all St. Joe people to come out for this musical treat.

This courtesy from the News-Sentinel, the band and its director is being obtained through the intercession of Mr. George O. Thain, the cornet soloist, who is a personal acquaintance of Mr. Woodcox, our own band leader. As a result, these players are coming from Fort Wayne because there is already in this community such a wide-spread interest in good music and appreciation of it. Undoubtedly, after this phenomenal musical event the interest will be much greater and Mr. Woodcox will have plenty of interested material for a real High School Band. And what greater asset can a high school have than a peppy band?

The concert is heartily endorsed by the Parents-Teachers' Association.

Tell your friends about it. Have them come with you. Get the whole community back of this project. There is no admission charged. Therefore everyone can come; moreover, they are not only welcome, but are sincerely urged to be there—High School Gym—December 4 at night.

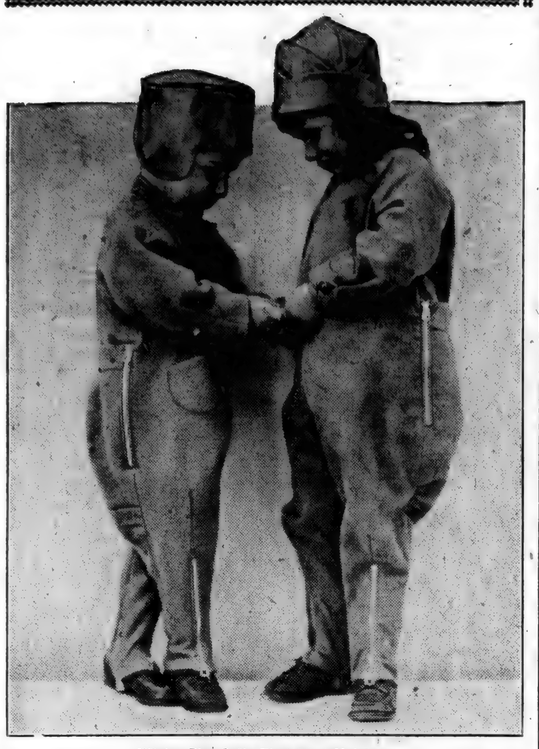
Sliding Metal Fasteners Protection From Wind, Rain or Snow



Winter Play Suits That Shed Moisture.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Sliding metal fasteners that insure complete protection from wind, rain, or snow, are an important feature of both these play suits for children designed by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The suits are somewhat similar, but one is made of a woolen fabric, the other of a close-woven, warm, cotton material. In slight details the suits also differ. The one on the left has patch pockets, the one on the right, tailored welt pockets; the former has a buttoned front opening, the latter closes with metal fasteners. On the first the extra elbow room in the sleeve is held in at the wrist by a stitched pleat; on the second this fullness is confined by means of a loop and button.

Fundamentally, however, the suits have many points in common and can be made from a good coverall or night-drawers pattern with certain adaptations. We know that children need comfortable, nonrestricting garments for play, that will at the same time keep them warm and dry. In very cold weather these suits, like an overcoat, can be worn over the clothing ordinarily used in the house.

The locking type of metal fastener is used at the side plackets. To give roominess in the seat without bulk the back leg section is made longer on the seam than the front. This extra fullness is shrunk into the seam, so that 4 inches are reduced to 2½. Fullness for the seat is also taken up at the waistline.

Bulk around the feet is taken out by a gore from the knee to the instep. The openings thus made are closed by sliding metal fasteners. Notice how they are placed around in front, not at the side where they are hard for a child to reach.

Fairy Tale for the Children When the Sandman Comes

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

FLYING FOLDS

There are some creatures known as the phalangers—the flying phalangers they are usually called.

They are something like squirrels, and they have loose folds of skin that they use for flying.

In fact these folds of skin are used by the phalangers just as though they had private airships of their very own.

And they can always be ready for a flying trip, too!

Now two little phalangers had curled up in the corner of a tree far away from here.

They had some straw beds which they thought were especially fine and they were talking.

Their names were Betty Phalanger and Freddy Phalanger.

"Do you know," said Freddy Phalanger, "that people have always thought airships were very wonderful!

"They still like to look up at them. They often get stiff necks looking at them, and they think they are marvelous sights."

"Who told you all this?" asked Betty.

"Never mind," said Freddy, "I know what I am saying."

"Do the people jump into the airships and fly?" asked a little baby phalanger.

"No," chuckled Freddy, "they don't get a chance. People can only watch or else climb in properly, and there are other people who don't like to leave the ground."

"Are there, really?" asked Betty in great surprise.

"You don't mean to say so?" asked one of the neighbors who had come to join in the conversation.

"Oh," said Freddy, "they have to get into airships but they can't get airships right out of themselves as we can.

"Our airships are attached to us.

"Yes, we're like the flying squirrels.

"We do not go too high with our airships—we do not like to fly high.

"But still we can fly, and we carry our airships with us wherever we go—our folds which we can use for flying."

The phalanger families talked for a long time of people and their airships and of birds who were clever indeed, for they could fly very, very high, and they always carried their airships with them.

They Are Something Like Squirrels.

Yes, the phalangers did not think so much of people as they did of birds.

The birds didn't have to step into planes in order to fly.

They merely had to spread their very own wings and they were off, up in the air.

And they could catch insects when flying and do their marketing in this way.

But the phalangers thought they were quite bright, too, with their folds which helped them to fly little, low distances.

And don't you think so, too?

Fruit Gelatin an Attractive and Delicious Dessert

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Peaches, pineapples, oranges and lemons are the main fruit flavors in the recipe below for a most attractive molded fruit gelatin. It is one of those desserts that are exceptionally good to plan for a company dinner for several reasons. Fruit is always good for dessert after a hearty meal; the dish looks pretty when it is turned out; and—what probably appeals greatly to the homemaker—the whole thing is prepared hours before it is wanted, leaving the cook free to attend to last minute details. The proportions are from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture.

3 tbs. gelatin
½ cup cold water
1 cup boiling water
¾ cup sugar
¼ tsp. salt
1 cup peach juice
1 cup pineapple juice
¾ cup lemon juice
1 cup orange juice and pulp
2 cups sliced canned peaches
4 slices canned pineapple
2 bananas, scraped and sliced

Soak the gelatin in the cold water for five minutes, add the boiling water, sugar and salt, and stir until dissolved. When cool add the fruit juices, place this mixture in a bowl surrounded by ice water, and stir now and then. As it begins to congeal, wet and chill a mold in an attractive design. Cut the remaining fruit into small pieces, combine with the rest of the gelatin mixture, fill into the mold, and chill for five or six hours. When ready to serve, invert a plate over the mold, and turn it upside down. Insert a knife along one edge of the gelatin, and the molded mixture will slip out easily. Serve with plain or whipped cream.

Braised Celery Adds to the Variety for Winter

As a cooked vegetable, celery offers a pleasant change when the winter variety dwindles to a few standbys. Here is a good way to cook it, described by the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture:

1½ quarts celery cut into pieces
3 tbs. drippings and juice from roast meat or fowl
2 tbs. flour
1½ cups cold water
Salt and pepper

Put the cut celery into a shallow baking dish. Melt the meat drippings in a skillet, add the flour, stir until well blended, and then gradually add the water and continue to stir until smooth. Add salt and pepper to taste and pour this hot gravy over the celery, or use an equal quantity of left-over slightly thickened gravy or meat broth. Cover the dish and bake in a moderate oven for 45 minutes, or until the celery is tender. During the last 15 minutes remove the cover from the dish, so that the gravy cooks down and browns slightly.

This is an excellent way to use the outer stalks of celery less attractive for serving raw and also to make use of left-over gravy or meat drippings.

Tea Should Be Kept in Air-Tight Packages

Tea is sociable to a fault, according to the United States Department of Agriculture, for it cannot maintain its individuality when it openly associates with odorous foods.

The dried tea leaves have such great absorptive powers that they readily take up flavors of other foods, such as nutmeg, pepper and flavoring extracts, when exposed on the pantry shelves.

C. F. Hutchinson, federal tea examiner, stationed at New York city, says tea must be kept in an air-tight package if it is to retain its individual flavor. A glass jar is an excellent container.

Artichokes Variation for the Winter Menu

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Increased interest is being shown in the Jerusalem artichoke, both as a human food and as a forage crop. As a human food it gives a pleasant variation to potatoes and garden roots. It has long been known that the Jerusalem artichoke stores its carbohydrates as insulin instead of starch, and it is claimed that it may be used by diabetic persons to a much greater extent than foods containing an equivalent amount of starch.

It has promise also as a source of levulose, or fruit sugar, which is derived from insulin as dextrose or corn sugar is derived from cornstarch. Levulose, which is a very sweet sugar, with many potential practical uses in cookery, has heretofore been found very difficult to crystallize and is still made only in small quantities.

Probably the widest use of Jerusalem artichokes for human food at present is in the form of pickles. But they may be boiled, baked in the casserole, fried as chips, or served raw in thin slices with other vegetables in salads. In this form they make a very good substitute for the "water chestnuts" used by the Chinese in chop suey, and may be used when the Chinese ingredients cannot be obtained. The tubers are irregular in shape and somewhat tedious to scrape or pare for table use.

Fruit Cup

Cut grapefruit in halves and remove inner fiber. Sweeten and fill with slices of orange and banana. Top with a cherry and serve either as a cocktail or a dessert.

Interesting Indian Relic

While digging in a sand pit at Hermon Point, Maine, Orrin Brooker of Bangor discovered an Indian gouger. The implement is about a foot long and is two inches across at its widest part. Its blunt end is approximately three-quarters of an inch wide while its sharp end is an inch and a half wide and of graduated thickness. From the blunt to the sharp end is a wide groove which turned the crude tool into a handy thing with which Indians could gouge out trees for the purpose of boat making.

DON'T let a Cold Settle in your Bowels!

Keep your bowels open during a cold. Only a doctor knows the importance of this. Trust a doctor to know best how it can be done.

That's why Syrup Pepsin is such a marvelous help during colds. It is the prescription of a family doctor who specialized in bowel troubles. The discomfort of colds is always lessened when it is used; your system is kept free from phlegm, mucus and acid wastes. The cold is "broken-up" more easily.

Whenever the bowels need help, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is sure to do the work. It does not gripe or sicken; but its action is thorough. It carries off all the souring waste and poison; helps your bowels to help themselves.

Take a spoonful of this family doctor's laxative as soon as a cold starts, or the next time coated tongue, bad breath, or a bilious, headachy, gassy condition warns of constipation. Give it to the children during colds or whenever they're feverish, cross or upset. Nothing in it to hurt anyone; it contains only laxative herbs, pure pepsin and other mild ingredients. The way it tastes and the way it acts have made it the fastest selling laxative the drugstore carries!

FELT HATS ARE AS POPULAR AS THEY EVER WERE

By JULIA BOTTOMLEY

Notwithstanding the lure of velvet and all the other interesting and beautiful materials which are serving as voguish media for milady's hat, the fact remains that the faithful felt is as popular as ever.

It is not without reason, milliners declare, that their clientele continues susceptible to the wiles of felt, for felts never staged a more fascinating program—a program versatile not only from the standpoint of ingenious styling, but the qualities and types which register in the name of "felt" were never so versatile. So exquisite are the new felts, some of satiny sheen, others of lusterless chamois suede type, others one color on one side contrasting another color on the reverse side and so smartly manipulated are they that many of the better felts have succeeded in working their way out of the sports class into the realm of the "dressy" hat.

Trimming with fur is one of the interesting phases approached by designers who interpret their art in terms of felt. The hat with a brim to the left in the picture is a superfine black french felt. Its embellishment of white fat fur is an unmistakable expression of chic.

Speaking of the present felt-trimmed-with-fur vogue, the latest gesture in this direction is the white felt hat which carries a touch of thin black fur such as galyak, caracul, or Persian lamb.

The hat at the top is noteworthy in that its upturned brim suggests the new tricorne, variations of which are among the smartest millinery trends of the present season. The quaint model pictured is a fur felt with felt bow and fancy ornament on top.

A beret of cricket green felt with self-trim is centered in the group. The charmingly youthful mode which you see to the right above in the picture is a fine vis-a-vis type draped off-the-face in effective "lines." The group concludes with a Lewis model of hunter's green felt with trim of self-colored wide belting ribbon.

The style importance of these hats is emphasized in that before being released for publication, they were submitted to a group of American millinery fashion authorities whose purpose it is to promote and maintain a high standard of design in this country.

Interesting Recipes That Will Be Enjoyed by the Family

By NELLIE MAXWELL

"How can any man start the day properly if he wakes in a room where the paint and wall paper are constantly making faces at the furniture?"

All cooks enjoy using the common things in such a manner that an unusual dish or combination is the result.

Pepper Relish.—Take two cupfuls of finely chopped peppers (green and red may be used) and pack the cup solidly full in measuring. Use a food chopper and put the peppers through the finest knife twice. Measure into the kettle, using just enough of the juice to flood the cup level. Add six and one-half cupfuls of sugar, one and one-half cupfuls of vinegar, mix well and bring to a boil, set aside uncovered for 20 minutes. Bring again to a boil and stir constantly, boiling hard for two minutes. Remove from the fire and stir in one bottle of pectin, stir and skim for just eight minutes to cool slightly and prevent floating. Pour quickly, cover the hot relish with a good cover of paraffin. This makes about nine glasses.

Rolled Orange Wafers.—Cream one-half cupful of butter, add gradually one cupful of sugar and the grated rind of an orange, beat until light. Dissolve one teaspoonful of soda in one tablespoonful of cold water, add to one-half cupful of orange juice alternately with two cupfuls of flour. Beat well and spread on buttered baking sheet in the thinnest possible layer. Bake in a moderate oven. When baked cut into squares and roll each square while hot over the handle of a wooden spoon. Sprinkle with powdered sugar and arrange on a doily-covered plate.

Banana Butter.—This makes a delicious cake filling. Use ripe, mellow fruit and take three cupfuls of the crushed pulp, add six and one-half cupfuls of sugar, the juice of a lemon and one-fourth teaspoonful of butter. Mix and bring quickly to a boil, boil one minute, stirring constantly over the entire bottom, adding one bottle of pectin. Remove from the heat and stir frequently for eight minutes to cool slightly and prevent floating. Pour quickly into cups and cover with hot paraffin. It sets slowly. Makes nine to ten glasses.

Stuffed Squash.—Cut one squash into half and remove the seeds. Soak one tablespoonful of dried mushrooms in three tablespoonfuls of warm water. Chop one-half cupful of water chestnuts and mix one and one-half cupfuls of chopped beef with the mushrooms and chestnuts, and two tablespoonfuls of soy sauce. Fill the squash with the mixture and steam over hot water for three-fourths of an hour or until the squash is tender. Add two teaspoonfuls of soy sauce to the water in which the squash is steamed, as it adds flavor.

A salad dressing is in daily use in all homes, or should be. To vary the mayonnaise add a teaspoonful or two of chowchow, catsup, chopped pickles, anchovies, chutney or horseradish sauce. Keep a jar of mayonnaise or boiled dressing and a bottle of french dressing. A tablespoonful or two, according to taste, of french dressing added to such salads as potato, which needs long seasoning to be palatable, adds much to the flavor. By adding any of the above accessories the salad dressing is given variety.

The SANDMAN STORY

THE OFFICER'S HORSE

"TODAY," said the policeman's horse to some of the other horses, "we had a picnic—master and I."

"A picnic!" the horses exclaimed in their own fashion. "Neigh, neigh! Weren't you on duty today?"

"Yes, we were on duty, but we had a picnic, too," the horse answered.

"I'll have to tell you about it," he said.

"An automobile came along and in it were some people. That's the usual way, of course.

"An automobile doesn't come along by itself.

"But no matter, you understand me. The people in the automobile asked my master how to get to a place where they wanted to have their picnic.

"There were a number of children and they had a fine dog with them, too.

"They told my master that when they stopped at their picnic grounds

"Oh, Yes, We Had Our Picnic, the Master and I."

the dog sat on the step along the side of the automobile so that people passing by would know that he was not a stray dog looking for food but that he was really a part of the picnic party.

"They said he always did this, except for a few moments now and then when he went for a run or a swim or chasing sticks.

"My master and the people chatted for quite a few moments and then my master told them how to get to the place they wanted to reach.

"Before they left they offered my master some candy and my master said: 'Thank you, my horse will have one if you don't mind. He loves sweet things. He has what is known as a "sweet tooth."'

"Well, they fixed up a little box and in it were some pieces of cake and some candy and some sugar as a special treat for me.

"Of course I get sugar very often but it is always a 'special treat' for me.

"Then they hurried on.

"But my master and I had a picnic between busy times. Oh, it was such fun!

"My master told the people that I was brave but that I was enough of a 'child' to care for sweets.

"And he said he was a 'child' that way, too. But he didn't say anything about his bravery, and, of course, they couldn't understand me.

"I think, perhaps, they knew by the way I looked that I was pretty devoted to my master and I think, perhaps, they had an idea he was brave.

"For he looks so splendid and he has such a fine face. But then you all know what I think of my wonderful master.

"After they had gone on we nibbled at something good every once in awhile.

"Oh, yes, we had our picnic, the master and I.

"And the master stroked me and patted me as he does so often, and I thought, just as I think so often, how splendid it was to have such a master.

"They say I do my work well and that I'm filled with courage and wisdom, but kindness and good treatment have helped me more than anyone knows.

"I should have liked to have told the people these things and I should have liked to have told them of the little girl my master saved the other day—she would have been run over if it hadn't been for my master, and he risked his life, too.

"Oh, I should have liked to have told them so many, many things he has done.

"For sometimes it seems to me that the brave things my master has done are so particularly, unusually, beautifully brave!

"Yes, I wished today I could speak. I don't need to speak to the master. He understands. He knows what I want and how I feel and how much I love him.

"But he doesn't seem to know how magnificently brave he is. It comes to him so naturally, I suppose."

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"HIP! HIP! HURRAH"

IF THERE is any expression that one would bet almost anything was characteristic or typical college Americanese, it is "Hip! Hip! Hurrah!" Yet if we did stake anything we had on this origin for this exclamation of joy or satisfaction we would surely lose. For, astonishing as it may seem, "Hip! Hip! Hurrah," comes to us from the Latin and was first used centuries ago.

Delving into the archives of history for our story we find that the word "Hip" is composed of the three initial letters of a Latin phrase meaning "Jerusalem is lost!" The word "Hurrah" is of Slavonic origin, meaning "Paradise."

The entire expression "Hip! Hip! Hurrah!" was commonly used during the so-called "Dark ages" at which time there were periodic incursions and raids against the Jews. The battle-cry of these hordes was "Hip! Hip! Hurrah!" indicating "Jerusalem is lost to the infidel and we are on the road to Paradise!" Quite a far cry from its present sense and usage; but that is how it started.

DO NOT STIR UP DUST

SOME people seem to think that the more dust they raise in housecleaning the more proof they are cleaning thoroughly. But this is a foolish attitude to take. The fact is, the more dust you raise the more pointless your work, for if you raise dust it merely means that you are chasing it out of the carpet or furniture in which it has accumulated and are sending it to rest somewhere else or to be scattered through the air.

It is only within the last few years that we are realizing the real folly of feather dusters and other dust scatterers that undoubtedly scare up dust and dirt containing disease germs and spread them broadcast. Moreover, dust dislodged in this way is irritating to the throat, eyes and skin of the worker.

When you plan to do your housecleaning, if you do not own a vacuum cleaner, rent one. It will not cost as much as it would to hire a man to do rug beating. If you have no attachments for your cleaner, rent a set of them for the housecleaning. With them you will be able to clean mouldings and inaccessible places in your home without scaring up the dust.

If you have no electricity in your house you will not be able to have a cleaner. Then you should have all rugs and carpets taken a good distance from the house to be cleaned. Do all dusting with damp cloths and dusters. If there are carpets that you do not take up sprinkle them with moistened sawdust before you sweep them.

Making Him Useful

Smithson was about to retire to his room for the night.

"By the way," the manager stopped him on the stairs, "what time would you like the porter to call you in the morning?"

"There's no need," returned Smithson. "I make it a practice always to wake up without being called."

"In that case," said the manager, "I wonder if you would mind calling the porter?"—London Tit-Bits.

ZACCHAEUS THE PUBLICAN, A BUSINESS MAN CONVERTED

LESSON TEXT—Luke 19:1-10.

GOLDEN TEXT—For the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Man Who Thought Jesus Would Not Care.

JUNIOR TOPIC—A Man Who Righted His Wrongs.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How Religion Changes One's Life.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Making Business Christian.

I. Jesus Passing Through Jericho (v. 1).

Jericho is noted as the stronghold of the Canaanites, which was miraculously delivered into the hands of Israel in response to their faith (Josh. 6), and also for the faith of Rahab which saved her from destruction with the city (Heb. 11:30, 31). It was thus noted as a city where faith and unbelief played against each other. It was fitting that Jesus should pass through Jericho. Faith and unbelief again were manifested. Two notorious sinners, Rahab and Zacchaeus, were saved at Jericho.

II. Zacchaeus Seeking Jesus (vv. 2-4).

1. His object (v. 3).

He sought to see who Jesus was. Though perhaps prompted by curiosity, he eagerly sought Jesus.

2. His difficulties (vv. 2, 3).

(1) His infamous business (v. 2).

He was a tax collector for the Roman government. The very fact that a Jew held such an office under the hated Romans would make him extremely unpopular. Then, since he was rich, it was evident that he had practiced extortion in collecting the taxes. Many men and women have a hard time in coming to Christ because of their questionable business relations.

(2) His shortness of stature (v. 3).

He was too small to crowd his way through to Jesus, and being hated by the people they had thrust him aside.

3. His persistence (v. 4).

He ran before the multitude and climbed up into a tree. What he lacked in stature he was determined should be made up by the height of the tree. Though Zacchaeus' legs were too short to enable him to see Jesus they were long enough to run past the crowd and enable him to climb the tree.

III. Jesus Finding Zacchaeus (vv. 5, 6).

While Zacchaeus was trying to see Jesus, Jesus was looking for him. This is always the case. When desire is stirred up in a heart to see Jesus, Jesus is seeking that one. When Jesus saw him he commanded him to come down from the tree and declared his intention to go home with him. Zaccheus got more than he expected. Jesus called him by name. He did not utter a word which would humiliate Zacchaeus. Jesus knew his heart's desire and dealt accordingly with him. All souls who earnestly seek Jesus shall be found of him. How wonderful his grace, that regardless of one's past life, Jesus will receive him as a friend and enter into fellowship with him! Zacchaeus quickly responded. He came down and with joy received Jesus.

IV. Zacchaeus' Conversion (vv. 7-10).

His conversion was sudden and thorough. He was converted before he had reached the ground.

1. What the crowd said (v. 7).

They said just what they say today when sinners come to Christ. They call to mind the man's former sins. They also reproached Christ, saying that he had gone to be a guest of this notorious extortioner, the tax collector. That for which they reproached Jesus was his glory. His supreme mission was to save sinners (v. 10).

2. What Zacchaeus said (v. 8).

His conversion was thorough. It took hold upon his heart. His new life began with resolution and restitution. He dedicated half of his goods to the poor. The man who a little while ago was a grafter was now a generous giver. His conversion got hold of his pocketbook. His determination to make restitution wherein he had wrongly exacted taxes shows the genuineness of his conversion. While God forgets the past of a sinner when he comes to Christ, the sinner who is converted will seek to right all wrongs, be they unkind words or unrighteous deeds. Sorrow for sin is not enough when restitution is possible.

3. What Jesus said (vv. 9, 10).

"Today is salvation come to thy house." The publican was now a child of God, a son of Abraham. Salvation is a present reality when one receives Christ.

...and it's going to be an Atwater Kent. What we want is performance, and so far as we're concerned there's only one choice.

We want the Golden Voice of the new Atwater Kent—good, clear, consistent reception, without a lot of noise. We want power enough to bring in distant stations. We want a dial we can read easily from any position, without straining our eyes—that new Atwater Kent Quick-Vision Dial. We want the new Atwater Kent Tone Control, so that we can bring out the low notes or the high notes as we please.

We want a radio that's always ready to go when we come to the end of a day's work. We want the kind of dependability that Atwater Kent is famous for. We want a radio from the maker who insists that farm people shall have just as good performance as city people.

We want an up-to-date radio, with all the newest worth-while improvements—plus Screen-Grid, from the manufacturer with longest Screen-Grid experience. We want a really good-looking radio—one we can show with pride when friends come in.

We're going to put our money where our faith is, and that means one of the new Atwater Kents. When we go into town tomorrow, we're going to stop at a dealer's and order an Atwater Kent. We know what we want and we're going to get it—NOW.

Appeal That Won Even Hardened New Yorkers

A girl from the South, who had been in New York two days, was experiencing her first encounter with the late afternoon jam on the Bronx subway express. After trying vainly to battle her way into one of the trains, she went to a guard and said: "Listen here, mister, I've been trying for fifteen minutes to get on one of these trains, and it's almost six o'clock . . . and we've got company coming for dinner, so of course I've got to cook biscuits and the company will be there at six-thirty; so, honest, you've got to do something about it." The astonished guard turned and addressed the packed mob waiting for the next train to pull in. "Now, listen here, folks," he said, "this little lady's got company coming at six-thirty, and she's gotta cook biscuits, and here it is almost six o'clock, so she's gotta get on this next train, see?" The equally astonished mob opened up an aisle in open-mouthed amazement and the little gal from the South paraded into the car without brushing a shoulder.—Life.

Our Washington Letter

By National Editorial Association
Special to St. Joe News

Washington, November 26—Visitors to the Nation's Capital would have considerable difficulty culling the tales of the town. Congress meets within a fortnight. The text of the President's annual message is awaited with unabated interest by business leaders and politicians. What effect will the November elections have on Hoover policies? Will the President rush proposals that he intended to hold in reserve? The question uppermost at this time is what strength he can muster for his legislative program at the short session.

Many legislators have returned early to obtain the "lay of the land." Unfortunately no one can safely predict what Congress, in its wisdom, will do. Hoover is not the only troubled leader. The Democrats have to meet a test before March 4, when their gains of the recent election are effective. The cards indicate that the Democrats in the Senate may be obliged to bargain with the Progressive Republicans as an advance deposit on other deals when the question of control is raised at the next Congress. There is some question as to how far the present leaders are permitted to go and how binding will be the chieftains pledges on the new Democratic Senators in March. No matter what may be said of the so-called "radical" group in the Senate they are high-grade opportunists and strategists. A few of these chaps are taking maliciuos pleasure in the situation.

History shows that every victor is assured of parasites in his wake. The camp followers of politics are busy in an endeavor to play sycophant and obtain patronage. This patronage subject, by the way, is provoking some concern among the newcomers. The word has been passed that Federal appropriations will be trimmed as a measure of economy. This means nothing less than a slump in political-pie appointments. The real worth-while jobs within the gift of the President will probably be allotted to the party members known under the inelegane but descrintive title of "lame ducks." The killing frost will soon fall on the hopes of thousands of aspirants for political "soft-snaps."

Over the coffee and cigars at dinners, the inquiry turns to the effect of political upheavals on society. The ladies ponder over the future of Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth in event her husband is displaced by a Democratic Speaker of the House of Representatives. Considering the feud between Mrs. Longworth and Mrs. Gann, it is an absorbing subject for the teacups. Mrs. Longworth's insistence on being acknowledged as a former President's daughter and a White House belle of other days makes the situation accute from a social viewpoint.

It appears that "Princess Alice" has never attempted to endear herself to the wives of members of the House. Naturally, anticipations are running high. The Vice President's standing is not impaired socially, at least, by partisan affairs. For instance, as Speaker's wife, Mrs. Longworth can entertain the President of the United States, the other 434 House members. Comment among the ladies is that Mrs. Longworth would prefer to retire to her Cincinnati home rather than turn a d eaf ear to whispers that would inevitably herald her presence at a function when shorn of her rank.

Though the Constitution requires the reappointment of the House on the basis of population every ten years, the idea is not welcomed here. The 1930 census shows that many states would lose and others gain heavily. Congress has dodged the isues for a decade and will stall again. Here is another case of "what is the Constitution among friends?" If the House membership could be changed immediately on the census returns it would upset political parties and causes. Like the "lame duck" bill for the retirement of legislators two months after the election, this proposal is shunned as borrowing trouble.

The long list of Presidential appointments to high office is being scanned by Senators. The appointees to chairmenships of the Federal Reserve Board and the Tariff Comission are due for a grilling, not so much as to their qualifications, but as to their views on matters in which Senators have more than a passing interest. Only the strongest appeals from the White House keep men in line for jobs which must be confirmed by the Senate. Men of affairs and means feel that no onor is worth the Senate inquisitorial sessions. This accounts for the shortage of high-calibre executives in the Federal Government.

AVERAGE OF ONE VOTE MAJORITY IN EACH PRECINCT FOR KAIN FOR SURVEYOR

Chas. T. Miser, county surveyor, gained 17 votes as a result of the recount of the votes cast for that office at the recent election, but was unable to overcome the lead of 68 votes for Calvin C. Kain by the original returns.

Mr. Miser, a republican, ran for re-election and according to the original count he received 5,168 votes and Mr. Kain 5,236. Mr. Miser thought there was a possibility of error on the part of the precinct election boards because of the name of his uncle, Charles E. Miser, being on the ballot as a candidate for county assessor.

The recount, however, did not show that any serious mistakes of the kind took place. The recount commissioners, C. E. McClintock, Frank Provines and Miles Baxter, who were appointed by the court and who completed their task Saturday morning, examined the ballots that had been rejected by the precinct boards and approved some of them. However, they also rejected some ballots that had been counted by the precinct boards.

As the recount progresses, Mr. Kain's majority ranged from 48 to 65. Mr. Miser gained 7 in Wilmington No. 2, but he lost 5 in Union 7 and 4 in Union 8. Mr. Kain gained 3 in Union 8. In some other precincts there were losses or gains for one or the other of one or two votes. When the recount was finished, it was found that Mr. Kain had a total of 5,222 and Mr. Miser 5,171. The majority of 51 for Mr. Kain is an average of exactly one to a precinct.

Mr. Kain will succeed Mr. Miser on January 1. He has served two terms previously.

Greatest of All Homecoming Days

For the strictly proper observance of Thanksgiving day there should be a real grandmother, as old-fashioned as the century will permit. At her home, however unpretentious it may be, all the children should come together to renew for her the memories of younger days when she had them all under her own roof tree; when she could go to each bedside before her own weary body sought rest and see for herself that they were cozily tucked in; when she thought it sweet to make the nightly rounds, when all childish faults lay hidden in sleep and the naughtiness had faded away with the setting sun, leaving only the angelic loveliness of childhood. Yes, the grandmother is undoubtedly the connecting link that holds families together.

Grandmother's Day.

Can't you see your own grandmother in her kitchen, where she likes to think she is still mistress, even if she is not allowed to do as much as she did in days gone by? Perhaps she is one of the fortunate ones whom her children have not killed with kindness, but have allowed to live the work-a day life as much as she desires and her strength will permit. How happy she bustles about making pies and puddings, baking ham equal in flavor to Charles Lamb's roast pig, preparing the turkey for the oven, "with his drumsticks meekly folded over a well stuffed breast!" How briskly she walks about, her thoughts flying here and there, gathering up lost threads in a tapestry of memory which she is joyously weaving! And how the children love the day, the delights of anticipation far exceeding those of realization; how they watch the pantry shelves groaning with the weight of good things; how penetrating are the pungent odors floating on the breeze, how trying to their patience the endless waiting! If the dear grandmother has gone on to a higher Thanksgiving, the next best is the loving mother.

Thanksgiving Spirit.

It must be a loving mother with a heart big enough to take in all the lonely ones who have no homes. Around her the Spirit of Thanksgiving may safely hover and be glad of the opportunity, for there is less room for that spirit today and the original significance of the day is passing. For the athletic devotee, it is the grand windup of the football season. If mother contemplates a noon dinner, it must be early so the boys and girls may eat and run, not realizing that to her it is a day long anticipated for the homecoming of the children and the renewal of memories dear to her heart.

General Holiday

Thanksgiving is a holiday in every state, territory and possession, by Presidential proclamation.

Turkey Traced to Aztecs

Wild turkeys like those the Puritans found in New England were not domesticated to any extent. They are extinct in many of their former haunts and are restricted to some of the wilder sections of the southern states.

The present-day domesticated turkey is like the magnificent wild birds now found in eastern Mexico and raised by the Aztecs when that race was conquered by the Spaniards in 1517. The Spaniards are credited with taking the domestic Aztec birds back to Europe, and doubtless some of the same breed were brought over here by the Colonists.

Thankfulness an Art

Thankfulness is an art that must be acquired. It is a conscientious balance of the ledger between blessings bestowed and favors accounted for which were properly received. The appreciative personality seeks with microscopic scrutiny the recognition of such blessings to serve humanity.

Giving Thanks

Thanksgiving is much like alms-giving. The benefit to the giver is determined largely by the spirit which prompted the deed. If it is just a habit, you gain nothing; if it is an urge of the heart, yours is the greater blessing.—Grit.

GIVE THANKS

Scarcely had the Pilgrims settled in the Bay Colony three hundred and ten years ago when the terrible New England winter descended upon them.

Only half of the party survived the hardships and suffering of that first year. Those who were spared carried on like the dauntless pioneers they were, and lived and prospered.

Give thanks for the example set us so many years ago. The homely virtues of self-discipline and perseverance are still the unfailing source of abundant prosperity.

PHILIP GINDER LEFT WILL DISPOSING OF HIS ESTATE

The late Philip D. Ginder of Wilmington Township, by his will admitted to probate in the DeKalb circuit court, left most of his property to his nine children in equal shares.

The children are Inez Snyder, Zantha Snyder, Florence Reinhart, Frank I. Ginder, Zora Praul, Harry M. Ginder, Clyde D. Ginder, Grace Keller and Jacob L. Ginder. However, the share of the latter is to be turned over to Wm. Oberholtzer of Wilmington Township, as trustee. The income, of the principal, if necessary, is to be used for the support of Jacob Ginder at his death the remainder is to be turned to his daughters, Helen Farnsworth and Ruth Ginder, or their heirs.

Mr. Ginder also bequeathed to the trustees of Mt. Pleasant Church in Wilmington Township all of the unsold lots in the cemetery adjoining the church, to be held, sold or disposed of as the trustees may see fit and the proceeds used for church purposes.

Charles A. Keller of Butler, is nominated in the will for the executor and he is directed to reduce all of the other property of the estate to cash or negotiable securities for distribution in accordance with the will.

The will was signed October 10, 1927, with Charles M. Imhoff and Attorney H. C. Springer as witnesses.

LOOK FOR A HANDSOME MAN

Readers will be treated to a new and delightful type of romance and adventure fiction in the story, "The Handsome Man," by Margaret Turnbull. It is taken for granted that the hero of the novel will be handsome, but it is unusual for the incidents of a thrilling plot to be based almost entirely upon the good looks of the chief character. Such is the case in this merry and exciting tale, which will appear serially in The News commencing December 18. Don't fail to get the opening installment.

Upon an application filed by Pluma Hamilton, Will L. Hamilton of St. Joe, has been appointed in the DeKalb circuit court as administrator of the estate of the late Wm. H. Northrup, who died at St. Joe Nov. 8, leaving $500 in personal property and $5,000 in real estate. The heirs are a daughter, Pluma Hamilton, and a grandson, Curtis Northrup, 12. The administrator filed $1,000 bond, with Pluma Hamilton and Abner W. Trostel as sureties. The notice of appointment appears on the legal page of this issue.

Lillie Johnson has secured a judgment of $2,297.31 in the DeKalb circuit court against Stanton and Mae T. Osburn and a mortgage on lot 9 in Leighty's addition to St. Joe was ordered foreclosed. The court found that Oscar E. Driver holds a mortgge in the sum of $500 against the property that is a prior lien to that of the plaintiff. Attorney H. C. Springer represented the plaintiff and Walter W. Ferris appeared for Driver. The defendants Osburn defaulted.

PRIZE WINNERS, BOTH OF THEM

Charming "farmer girl" of the silver screen endeavors to cheer up the selected Thanksgiving gobbler.

Feasts of Other Days Recalled

In that earlier day which the mist of time half hides and half reveals, the selection of a Thanksgiving bird became a matter for profound family consideration. Not that the actual picking out of the turkey was affected thereby. No, the head of the household went forth as did the Pilgrim daddies, but armed only with his fascinating wallet, around which a strap was stretched, and held up the white-aproned Indians or the checkered-shirted grocery braves, and brought home his yellow-legged loot. In this he had the advantage of the stern-faced Puritans, because they were given little choice in this important matter of selection, but were likely to bring home a hardened old gobbler of the early Pequot period, which would give the Puritan teeth a dangerous test at a time when dentistry was unknown.

Well, after dad brought home his personally conducted bird the family severally and jointly inspected it. This was done by extending its legs and bending its wings and jabbing it in the region of the breast bone. Whether it passed muster or not was of no consequence. It was the consecrated bird of the day of thanks and as such was offered up on the family altar and duly immolated in spite of any dubious criticisms regarding its tenderness of flavor. Moreover, it invariably weighed very close to five-and-twenty pounds.

When the Bird Escaped.

On one occasion father brought home a live turkey, feathers an' squawk an' everything, and left it overnight in the summer kitchen. Something was said about a raffle, but raffles were not fit subjects for innocent Sunday school children to know about, and our only definite knowledge concerning the noisy visitor's origin was that it had cost father a darn sight more than if he had bought a featherless one at John Frauenfelder's or Arnold's or Southworth's.

Well somebody left the door open and the bird streaked it for freedom. Of course we were hot after it, and it is recalled that father showed amazing evidences of agility in leading the chase. Once the fugitive flew into a tree and had to be bombarded out of it, and finally it ran up old Theresa street and right through the fortunately open door of one of the poorest cottages, and as father, who was well in advance, reached the doorway he heard a trembling voice from within say "Sure, the saints have sent it!"

That ended the chase, and we tramped back and father went over to Frauenfelder's and bought a turkey of the old-fashioned sort without fuss or feathers.

Of course the Thanksgiving dinner was a feast to be remembered with both joy and remorse. There were no favors, no special decorations, nothing but food and appetites, both served at noon. Everything on the unwritten menu was placed on the table at the beginning of the feast, and the service thereafter consisted merely in carving and passing.

What the Poet Sang.

In this process of dismantling and conversion it is recalled that soup was involved, hash took a prominent part, and bones were denuded. The stuffing was another interesting survival, and the seemingly inexhaustible gravy supply served many purposes.

A yellow clipping from the Cleveland Herald recalls how the Herald poet, identity unknown, regarded this continuity:

There's turkey for breakfast and dinner and tea,
I fear it is playing the mischief with me;
For over my coverlid turkeys do walk—
I scream out in terror and wake with a squawk.

My feathers are sprouting,
I'm stretching my neck;
I talk with a gobble and at my food peck.
If it should last longer each boarder agrees,
He'll wreck the darn larder and take to the trees!

So the extinction of the bird went on until only a bunch of shining bones remained. It had been a five day struggle and a hard one, but not a morsel had been wasted. Nobody craved any more turkey for another year, and the meat market business began to look up.

The last seen of the noble fowl was its disappearing bones as they departed in the jaws of a neighbor's dog, who was said to have caches of bones all over the neighborhood.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HIS LAST PETTING

Soothing the doomed gobbler on the eve of that fatal Thursday that has claimed so many good turkeys.

The people of former romantic days who used to inquire, "When shall we meet again?" are probably asking in these prosaic times, "When do we eat?"

IT'S HERE!

When the odors from the kitchen,
Tantalizin' an' bewitchin',
Set a mortal's palate itchin'—
Tempt the appetites o' men;
When you smell the mince-pie bakin'
Sniff the cake the cook is makin',
Covered thick with icy flakin'—
Then Thanksgivin's here again!
—James Edward Hungerford, in the Prairie Farmer.

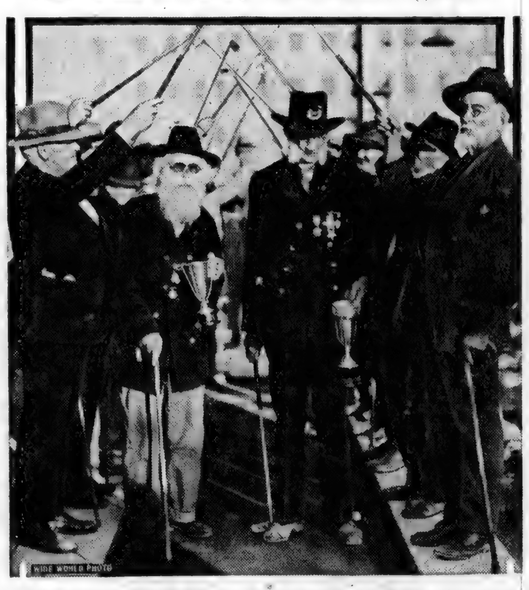
Sherman's Army Defeated Grant's



Using miniature golf links as a battlefield, and putters and golf balls instead of cannon and shrapnel, Civil war veterans of the National Military home at West Los Angeles, Calif., settled the "war" which has raged since '65 concerning the question: Who had the better army, Grant or Sherman? The 27-hole battle ended in victory for General Sherman's forces. Coming through the arch of "golf course swords" is George L. Grimston, ninety-three, who defeated the Grant representative, Capt. Andrew J. Kimball, at the right.

Buildings Sway in Wind

Tall office buildings that are built of steel are flexible, since the steel has high elasticity. Therefore, in a heavy wind where the total side pressure may amount to hundreds of tons the steel framework will bend over before it. Wind pressure is not constant, and the building will be bent over in proportion to the strength of the different gusts. Occasionally this swaying is perceptible to the senses, but as a rule in most modern buildings the movement is so very slight as to be unnoticeable, except by instrumental measurement.

HEAD THROB?

The woman who knows, would as soon start out without her purse! She always carries Bayer Aspirin.

When your head fairly throbs from the stores and crowds, reach for that little box. Take two or three tablets, a swallow of water, and resume your shopping—in comfort. Relief is immediate.

Most people use these wonderful tablets for something! But do you know how many, many ways they can spare you needless suffering? From the discomfort—and danger—of a neglected cold. From serious consequences of a sore throat. From those pains peculiar to women. From the misery of neuralgia and neuritis.

Every drugstore has genuine Bayer Aspirin. The box says Bayer, and every tablet bears the Bayer cross. Tablets thus marked do not depress the heart.

Facts of Interest in Report of German Bank

Do you know that the world's annual income is $107,500,000,000? This astonishing fact is revealed by the report of a German bank, which has been studying world statistics for six years. Other interesting points from this report are: The world is drinking more milk and more tea, more coffee but less cocoa. We eat less bread, and fruit and vegetables are taking its place. We are smoking less tobacco, in spite of the large increase in women smokers. In England there are 35 people to every motor car. In America one person in five is the proud possessor of a car. One hundred and seventy-three thousand tons of artificial silk are used annually for the manufacture of ladies' stockings. If the wealth of Great Britain were distributed equally among the population, every person would receive $2,500.—Montreal Herald.

SWEETEN ACID STOMACH THIS PLEASANT WAY

When there's distress two hours after eating—heartburn, indigestion, gas—suspect excess acid.

The best way to correct this is with an alkali. Physicians prescribe Phillips' Milk of Magnesia.

A spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water neutralizes many times its volume in excess acid; and does it at once. To try it is to be through with crude methods forever.

Be sure to get genuine Phillips' Milk of Magnesia. All drugstores have the generous 25c and 50c bottles. Full directions in package.

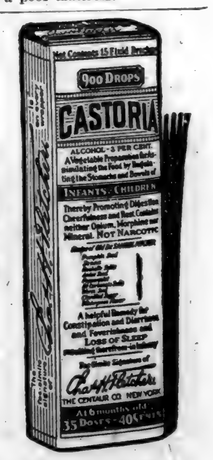
Fretful DAYS Restless NIGHTS ...give child Castoria



FUSSY, fretful, can't sleep, won't eat.... It isn't always easy to find just where the trouble is with a young child. It may be a stomach upset; it may be sluggish bowels.

But when little tongues are coated and there is even a slight suspicion of bad breath—it's time for Castoria!

Castoria, you know, is a pure vegetable preparation especially made for babies and children. When Baby cries with colic or is fretful because of constipation, Castoria brings quick comfort, and, with relief from pain, soothes him to restful sleep. For older children—up through all the school years, Castoria is equally effective in helping to right irregularities. Just give it in larger doses. What a comfort Castoria is to mothers!

Get the genuine, with Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on wrapper and the name Castoria that always appears like this:

"I held notes on him as security for business that he transacted through his office—properties I could not afford to have in my name. He thought I would not dare to sell his notes, he having so much information about me. No use going into the ugly details. He woke up too late to find out that his transactions were with me—the company he was dealing with was mine—he sold my property to me. It was I who bought from him what he had no right to sell. I stopped payment on the checks he held, I had his notes, and he was holding—the bag."

"But how could you? That's not right. You couldn't do that."

"Why not?" asked Pastano. "I was cleverer than he. What could he do? What could he say? I called in his notes. Either he had to pay me, or I would sell them to his bank for discount. He put in his stone stock—sound property—and recovered his notes. Then he found all his debts due on the same day. He lost seventeen accounts in one afternoon—business taken right out of his office. He sold his car and yesterday he mortgaged his house. And today—unless it's stopped—he's going to be indicted."

Ernestine got to her feet.

"But, Ruby—how can you do this to Loring? He does know things about you—"

"Very little," answered Pastano evenly. "Fragments—nothing whole. Part of this deal—part of that. His own activities will shine much worse in court than his connections with me. Do you think I am fool enough to put myself in jeopardy with a man like Loring?"

Ernestine made a little moan, and he began to speak quickly, vehemently, with a strange sternness and justice in his face.

"He came to me—he sought the connection—he was eager for any work. He offered to do things for me that I wouldn't let him do. He was well paid, and he didn't play the game. His fees were big—business was thrown to him from a dozen directions inaccessible to him five years ago. He sat where he wanted to sit—in the lap of city politics, and he grew weary of his mistress. He wished to exploit her—desert her. So he schemed and planned. But you cannot get into the whirlpool and then out again—"

Ernestine, looking at him, felt the sucking breath of the vortex. "But what have I to do with this?" she asked. "What can I do for Loring? You haven't told me this without some purpose."

"First let me show you why I can do nothing for him myself—it is easier to start a landslide than to stop it. It was my intention—no, my determination—to ruin him, to have him debarred, disgraced, sent to the penitentiary, if I could. It seemed necessary. Here, all about me, are these young men—lieutenants—gangsters, if you like the newspaper word better. They are my army. We must have loyalty in any army. We must have obedience. Loyalty and obedience, first, because they have confidence in me, that I am wise, that I will take care of them while they stay with me, that I am competent to meet all situations. But if a man is disloyal, all the rest must see what becomes of him. Loyalty, first, because of confidence; second, because of fear. When admiration fails, fear remains."

"But you are not going to ruin Loring now?" she said eagerly. "You have changed your mind—you have some plan?"

"No," he said slowly, "no, not I. I have no plan to save Loring Hamilton. I have no desire to save him. I would not lift my little finger for Loring Hamilton. It is inevitable that he should fail, should be punished. Even if I wanted to do something for him now, I could not. His treachery is known to others as well as to myself. Money is needed. If I should withdraw money from my own private sources, or if I should withdraw money from funds that are available for gifts, when it is necessary, it would be instantly known. No—in the first place, I don't want to help Loring. If he were my own brother, I would feel that he must follow his course alone. Nor could I help him, even if I liked, but"—he looked at her intently so that for a moment it seemed that she was lost, hypnotized by his great dark eyes—"you can help him, if you like, Ernestine."

"Tell me," she whispered. "What can I do?"

He put his hand in his pocket and took out his big silver watch. Laying the flat of his palm upon it, he twisted it, unscrewed the back of the watch and took from between the outer and inner cases a small piece of paper, folded once across. He sat, his dismembered watch in one hand, and the piece of paper in the other, and said to her:

"I know that you have your own standards of honor—I have exposed myself, in this talk, knowing your code. But now, I must ask you if you are capable of secrecy. No one but Will must know of this. He must know."

"I promise," she said at once.

He put the folded paper in her hand, and kept his finger upon it, so that it remained closed.

"There is a name here. This afternoon, within an hour after this bank is closed—before four o'clock, to be exact, twenty thousand dollars, in cash, must be placed in the hands of this person, and the indictment against Loring will be dropped."

Ernestine was very pale. "A bribe?" she said, her throat dry. "But that's—wrong."

He was very gentle.

"Wrong, yes—no doubt. But we are at a place now—where it is the lesser evil, which must be chosen—not right or wrong. A bribe—ugly word. Yes, there is a regular scale of prices for indictments. This money must be spread. It will take twenty thousand dollars to do it. You have the money. I take a great risk upon myself—this talk, this name, this opportunity, but I wished you to have it."

He beamed upon her now—pleased as a child who has been good and waits for praise. Ernestine was very agitated.

"How do you know I have this money?"

"I am a director in this bank—you have it—here."

"But that money is for Will. I've been saving it for nearly two years.

"He Was Well Paid, and He Didn't Play the Game."

I can't give that money for Loring. It's Will's."

"I'll not pay for Loring," said Pastano sternly, and he shrugged, his face altered, hard. "Why should I? You can—if you won't, he's sunk—that's all."

"No, no," cried Ernestine, "not that—not Will's money. I won't do it, Ruby. I can't. Loring will have to go down in his own wreckage. Why should I pay a bribe for him? Why should I rob Will of his very chance, for Loring? This isn't just money—this is Will's future—his peace, his happiness—this is my marriage—this money."

He was silent. He stared at her. She could feel in him disappointment. He was disappointed in her! He, monster that he was, dared to judge her!

"You see," she said desperately, "Will isn't always going to be a cartoonist. He's going to do something else. He hasn't any sense about money. I learned about money, when we were poor, but Will has never learned. He's extravagant, foolish. I found out long ago that if he had fifty cents in his pocket, or fifty dollars, it was all the same to him. And then—I discovered that Will wanted to be an artist, that he wanted to work in colors, that he hated the cats. And I began to save. I've kept up a front on a small amount of money. I spent less than twelve thousand dollars last year, and Will earned thirty thousand. But it's been for Will. I'm not naturally economical, or close, but I did it for Will."

"Perhaps Will would want you to do this—ask him."

"Perhaps he would. It would be like him to throw away his chance for Loring. But Will doesn't know I've got this money. Nobody knows, except the bank clerks. I thought a savings account was a private matter. Will has a studio down near here—if he could study—if he could go to Paris."

"I know," said Pastano. "He rents his workroom from me. I've seen some of his stuff. Well—Loring can go to jail then, for all of me, and if you are subpenaed into court, to testify about things that happened at Langley lake three summers ago, don't say I didn't warn you."

He sighed. His eyes were sad and tired. The tears sprang down Ernestine's cheeks.

"Don't think I don't appreciate this—I know that you endanger yourself—your very life—by talking to me. I know enough about all this to know what you are doing—it's generous, but, oh, Ruby, it is Will I love—Will, all the time."

"Your sister—" he objected.

"Why should I sacrifice Will for Loring and Lillian?" she said passionately. "It will take me a long time to accumulate this money again. And simply to give it away—to send it out blindly, and not even know where it goes! Loring has always hated Will—has tried to harm him. And now you ask me to give up Will's chance. He can't wait forever. His gift will die, he'll go stale."

"Loring has loved you, Ernestine."

She stopped her incoherent speech. She looked at him with dark eyes, and her face grew very pale.

"That time," Pastano said, "when you were ill—when Elaine was born, we would not have found you, if it had not been for Loring."

"But Will found me," she quavered.

"Yes—after Loring had torn the town up—had organized a search—had warned me. Will would still be wandering about Sheridan Park. And after Will found you, what did he do? You might have died there, without proper care. It was Loring's practical energy and ability—his decision and his efficiency which saved you."

He got up and moved about restlessly. He seemed almost to plead with her.

"That's why I couldn't sleep last night. It came to me all the time—he loves our Ernestine, fool and traitor that he is. He would give everything he has—for her. It is her sister, her family, her family name. She is mixed in it—she will be hurt by it. So this morning, I came to town. I have seen the bank ledger from time to time. I have watched your private fortune growing with much interest, and known, or thought, that Will was ignorant of it. So this morning I came to town, and carefully I have made this possible. And now, you do not see it."

He was putting his watch together as he spoke, but he left the slip of paper in Ernestine's hand.

"It's one o'clock," he said. "The bank closes at three. Suppose you go and talk to Will. A woman ought not take a step like this, anyhow, without talking to her husband."

"I'm not going to give Will's money to Loring," Ernestine said despairingly.

Mr. Pastano opened the door for her, but did not answer her low "good-by."

Ernestine went swiftly down the stairs and out into the brightness of the street.

"I'm not going to ask Will," she thought stubbornly. "He'll just tell me to do what Pastano wants. I'm not going to do it."

She ran for a car going north and boarded it. She rode as far as Belmont avenue, jumped up suddenly and got out of the street car. A taxi stood before a drug store across the street. Ernestine ran across through the traffic and got into the taxi.

"Please hurry," she said, and gave him the address of the old office building near the river, where Will led his secret life.

She felt that she could not get to Will soon enough, now she was started. She paid the taxi driver at the door and went quickly into the dim and dusty doorway.

Chinese Leaders Split on Educational Plans

China, unlike most nations, has nothing that can really be called a national sport. Japan, in much the same circumstances, adopted baseball; but baseball in China has never caught on to any great extent. Mission schools and Y. M. C. A.'s, however, have done much to teach forms of sport to elementary and middle school students, with the result that basketball, tennis and football are beginning to prove fairly popular, but only among an extremely small percentage of the nation's many millions of youths. As far as the revival of folklore (which is being considered by the social education department of the ministry of education) is concerned, it is expected that the ministry will encounter difficulties. China is rich in folklore, but while with one hand the government is trying to encourage its revival, with the other hand the government is launching a bitter campaign against superstition. Much of China's ancient folklore deals with supernatural beings, and with historical and mythical characters endowed with supernatural powers. What is needed, according to educational leaders, is the development of a critical faculty among students and the populace which will enable them to disassociate themselves entirely from the million and one popular myths which form the basis of their mental texture, if not of their religious beliefs.

Unfounded Popular Belief

That a fire caused by lightning can not be extinguished with water is an old popular belief which still survives in many parts of the country, says an article in Pathfinder Magazine. Fire is fire no matter how started, whether by a match, spontaneous combustion, or a flash of lightning. A fire produced by lightning has the same physical properties as other fire and can be extinguished in the same manner.

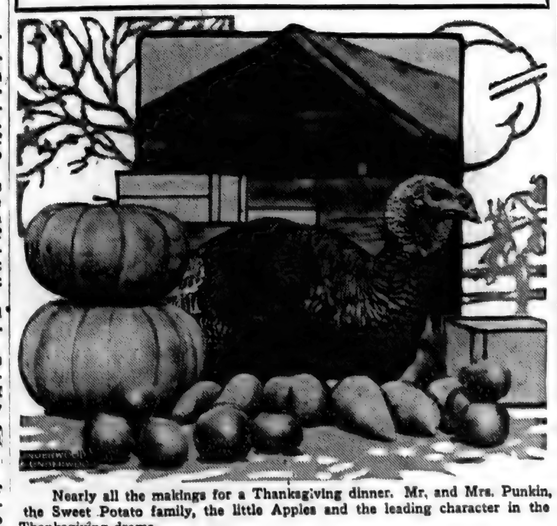
THANKSGIVING ASSEMBLY



Nearly all the makings for a Thanksgiving dinner. Mr. and Mrs. Punkin, the Sweet Potato family, the little Apples and the leading character in the Thanksgiving drama.

King Turkey on Path to "Glory"

To the martial music of brass bands 10,000 Thanksgiving turkeys march down the broad street between the gaily decorated buildings as the cheering multitude applauds the strutting battalions. For Turkeyville—any one of the half-dozen Texas towns which help supply us with rare meat for the festival holiday board—is celebrating the one red-letter holiday of the year.

Row upon row until their lines stretch into the far distance in shimmering colors of red, white and bronze come the multitude of turkeys. Fluffy white privates, bronze corporals, coal-black lieutenants, dull red sergeants and gold-bedecked majors and colonels push out their wishbones a little farther as they pass the mayor's review stand and add a bit of swagger to their gait.

On and on they march, until a mile or more of the trotting turkeys have passed up the main street, ever getting closer and closer to that ignoble fate that makes this truly the "march of death" and reach the end of that long and treacherous maneuvering which insures to the American consumer his Thanksgiving turkey. While admiring throngs to the right, applauding people to the left, cheer the turkeys on, the leaders are marching through the gates of the large dressing plant into the very jaws of death, Earle W. Page writes in the New York Evening Post.

All Hail King Turkey.

Among the harvest festivals of America, "Turkey day" stands out unique, linking the Pilgrim Fathers' love of the tender, juicy breast of wild turkeys with the modern popularity of this piece de resistance of the annual holiday table. On this day, the turkeys are hailed as the absolute monarchs they will later become formally upon the throne of the American Thanksgiving dinner table. For this is Turkeyville, in the heart of Turkeyland—a land of magnificent distances, vast grain ranches and a wealth of climate, which makes the empire a natural ranging country for the most beautiful and profitable of our farmyard fowls.

Each town in Turkeyland has its turkey dressing plant, to which all turkeys intended for the holiday table, for many miles about, head early in November. While a few are brought in motor trucks, most of the thousands each plant prepares for market are driven in great flocks, after the fashion of trailing western cattle to market.

A dozen men are required to handle these large flocks, and shelled corn is scattered to the leaders to keep them moving. When night comes a stop is made under a grove of trees, where the fowls may rest. Early the next morning the journey is continued, a man driving ahead in a cart and scattering handfuls of corn now and then, to keep the leaders headed in the right direction.

Thus it is that, during the two or three days prior to the big "turkey day" celebration great flocks of turkeys are being driven over many roads toward the town. Sunrise of the morning of the big event finds a host of turks ready for the final dash down the main street to the dressing plant. It also finds the multitude of King Turkey's hinterland gathered along the street to participate in the celebration.

After the flock has paraded into the large corral of the dressing plant, and the army of killers, pickers and packers have started in dead earnest to wind up the season's work, that the refrigerator cars of dressed turkey may start on their long journey across the continent, the milling multitude enjoys all manner of pastime, from real "turkey trot" dancing to gay ceremonies characteristic of the Southwest.

In the days of the Pilgrims, flocks of wild turkeys strutted in unrestricted pride and splendor through the forests of New England. Doubtless the red man introduced the early settlers to the creamy taste of the white and the succulence of the dark meat of the fowl. From that good day to the present the turkey, either wild or tame, has continued to occupy the place of honor at the American Thanksgiving dinner.

Its Name a Mystery.

Just why this fowl should have been named "turkey" in the English language no one seems to know. The realm of his sultanic majesty had no more to do with the introduction of the bird into polite society than did Greenland. The real turkey is a bird indigenous to North America and was from here introduced to the rest of the world.

The name possibly may be explained by the peculiar call of the mother to her chicks, which sounds very much like "tur-r-k, tur-r-k, tur-r-k." At any rate, there is no relation between the bird and the country of the same name.

The turkey was a favorite fowl among the aboriginal inhabitants of America. It had its habitat all over that vast area, where grew its favorite food—Indian corn. When Cortes, in 1519, reached the realm of the Aztecs, Montezuma entertained him with royal splendor, and among the delicious viands set before the Spanish invaders was roasted turkey.

North of the Rio Grande the turkey was well known and the adventurous Coronado found it among the cliff dwellers and other tribes he met on his expedition through what is today Texas, Arizona and New Mexico.

The wild turkey is credited with being the progenitor of all kinds of turkeys the world over. Ornithologists accept the view that all turkeys have descended from the three forms known today as the North American, the Mexican and the Honduras varieties. The fowl found in certain jungles of South America and known as the curassow, although sometimes called the South American turkey, really belongs to a different family.

The North American turkey—father and mother of the whole tribe—is the original species of the eastern United States, according to experts of the Department of Agriculture at Washington. Its colors are black, beautifully shaded with a rich bronze, illuminated with a lustrous finish of coppery gold. All this emblazons the plumage with a distinctive brightness, and in the rays of the sun the burnished appearance comes out with striking brilliancy.

Wild Birds Still Thrive.

To this day wild turkeys may be found in some of the most unsettled sections of their former range, especially in the wooded and mountainous regions of Arizona, Mexico, Texas, the large swamps of the Gulf, in Tennessee and the Carolinas. The Great Smoky National park boasts large flocks of wild turkeys. Their nests are discovered occasionally and the eggs given to farm hens or turkey hens to hatch, but the chicks, although mothered in a strictly modern way, revert to their wild habits when but a few weeks old.

The present demand for Thanksgiving and Christmas turkeys is so enormous as to make the business of raising, transporting and selling this giant fowl a large enterprise. Carloads of turkeys start reaching market about the middle of November and continue well into December. Should there be a surplus at Thanksgiving, those unsold are held under refrigeration for Christmas.

Out of Bounds

Count Maxence de Polignac, who has been charged with bootlegging, discussed at a tea the traffic regulations of America.

"They are excellent," he said, "but a foreigner at first finds them rather complicated and hard to understand.

"One foreigner said to another:

"'In some American towns the streets are marked off in white squares. What does that mean?'

"The other foreigner, who was a joker, shrugged and answered:

"'I guess maybe it means that if you get hit outside the lines it doesn't count.'"—Detroit Free Press.

How Old Are You?

This Is The Date I'm 48

My Mind Is Keen—My Skin Is Clear—Of Petty Ills I Have No Fear

No doubt about it—I am 48 and never felt better in my life—I feel like 30 and you can take my word for it—It's the little Daily Dose of Kruschen That Does It.

Once I was fat and forty—had headaches a-plenty—Was tired out most of the time—My liver was sluggish and my bowels inactive—I searched for a real remedy and by good fortune I found it in Kruschen Salts.

Fat isn't healthy—so Physicians state, and I want to say to this world full of fat people—that the Kruschen Method of losing fat is safe, sure and sensible—just cut out sweets—pies, pastries and ice cream for a month—go light on potatoes, rice, butter, cream and sugar—and don't forget to take one-half a teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

I wish I could induce every overweight person on earth to try this splendid method—It surely doesn't cost but a trifle—for an 85 cent bottle lasts 4 weeks and can be bought at any drug store in the world—Get it—Grow Thin—Feel younger.—Adv.

After Nervous Breakdown

"I had a nervous breakdown and could not do the work I have to do around the house. Through one of your booklets I found how Lydia E. One-half of the taxes assessed for state, county and school purposes are due and payable on or before the first Monday in May, 1931.
The second installment is due and payable on the first Monday in November, 1931.
In case the first installment is not paid by the first Monday in May, 1931, then the whole amount becomes delinquent and is subject to a penalty of ten per cent.
Administrators, guardians, agents, and others, who pay taxes on property in trust, and persons whose taxes are complicated, such as undivided estates, etc., are requested to settle such taxes before the last few weeks, as it takes time to make divisions and make separate receipts therefor.
All persons should be careful to examine their receipts and see that all property they wish to pay taxes on is included in their receipts.

THE TREASURER WILL NOT BE RESPONSIBLE

For the penalty and charges and delinquent taxes resulting by reason of any omission of the person paying such taxes to state definitely on what property, in whose name, and in what township or corporation it was assessed. Persons are liable for taxes on all property owned by them on the first day of March, 1930. Property will appear in the same name for the payment of the second installment as for the first installment of each year. Call on the auditor for errors or reductions claimed in taxes. The treasurer cannot make such reductions. No extension will be given after the FIRST MONDAY IN MAY, 1931.
County orders will not be paid to anyone owing delinquent taxes; all persons are warned against purchasing such orders.
The annual sale of delinquent lands and lots will take place on the Second Monday in February, 1931.

Auburn, Ind., November 7, 1930.

SPORTING NEWS

The St. Joe Independents opened their season last Wednesday evening against the strongest amateur team in this part of the state. They were defeated 38 to 17 but the fans that saw the game witnessed some real basket ball.

The Auburn team went through high school together and have continued to play together since that time developing one of the best teams in Northeastern Indiana.

VERDICT FINDS WATCHMAN NOT NEGLIGENT

John R. Clark, DeKalb county coroner, Friday completed his inquest into the deaths November 12 of Charles Rohrbaugh and LeRoy Smith of north of Butler, killed in a crash at the Broadway crossing of the New York Central railroad at Butler. The coroner found that the two men were killed by reason of negligence on the part of the railroad company.

Coroner Clark found that the two men were riding in Mr. Rohrbaugh's car about 10 to 15 miles an hour as they approached the crossing; that a train on the New York Central tracks was running late and going east at a speed of about 70 miles an hour and that J. E. Firestone, a crossing watchman, was in the crossing tower on duty, having one hand on the gate lever and the other on the bell rope as the train approached.

The coroner in his final paragraph of findings reported that "I render my verdict that said J. E. Firestone was not negligent in the performance of duty, but that the New York Central Railroad company is guilty of negligence due to the fact that it did not have any signal whatever in said crossing tower in order that the watchman might be informed at all times of approaching trains and that said Charles Rohrbaugh and LeRoy Smith came to their death as a result of gross negligence of the New York Central Railroad company."

Byron Widney attended the funeral of his cousin, Mrs. Dorothy Dill, held at Reading, Mich., last Thursday.

VOL. XLIV — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, DEC. 4, 1930 — NUMBER 49

POPULAR YOUNG COUPLE WEDS

Mr. Dewitt Volket, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Volket, of near Hicksvile, was married to Miss Pearl Guiff, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Emmet Guiff, in a quiet ceremony at the Methodist Parsonage, Spencerville, Ind., Saturday, Nov. 29th at eight P. M. The single ring ceremony was used.

Rev. Homer Studabaker officiated. The couple was attended by Miss Ione Volket and Charles Volket, sister and uncle of the groom.

The bride wore an exquisite head band of white wax flowers and buds. A fluttery little frock of white silk with rows of shirring combined with a cleverly cut panel completed the bodice of her gown, the hemline was uneven. Her slippers were of black satin.

Those present were Mr. and Mrs. Roy Volket, Mr. and Mrs. Emmet Guiff and family, and Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Meek.

The wedding dinner was given by the groom's parents and many friends were present

INSPECTING SPRAYING EQUIPMENT

Mr. and Mrs. Ray Reasoner made a trip this week to the Starke Nurseries at Louisiana, Mo., to make an inspection of their spraying system. The spray is prepared, and under pressure is forced through the under ground pipes that have been laid into their orchards, and all that is needed to connect their spraying equipment at the spickets and proceed with their work. No driving about the orchard is required. They will also inspect the Coffin Nursery in Indiana on their return trip.

At the Leighty orchards it is becoming necesaary to simplify their labors, and with modern equipment better care can be given their fruit trees.

MRS. P. W. PARISH OF SHELBY EXPIRES

Mrs. Piletus W. Parish, a resident of Shelby, Mich., for only six weeks, died at her home on Thanksgiving Day after a three weeks illness. She was 77 years old.

Mrs. Parish was born in Ohio on April 15, 1853. Her parents moved to Indiana when she was a girl, but later moved to Newaygo by wagon, where they settled on a farm. Mrs. Parish was 10 years old at the time.

In later years she was married to E. O. Thomas and lived on a farm northweat of Fremont for about 30 years. Following her husband's death in 1898 she lived with her daughter, Mrs. Geo. Milliman, in St. Joe, Indiana for 17 years. In 1915 she married Piletus W. Parish in Grand Rapids, and the couple went to Ferry to live. Only six weeks ago they moved to Shelby.

Surviving Mrs. Parish are three children by the first marriage, Mrs. George Milliman of St. Joe, Ind., Charles Thomas, of Grand Rapids, and Fred Thomas of Muskegon. Two grandchildren and three great grandchildren also survive.

Funeral services were held at 2 P. M. Saturday at the Methodist Church with Rev. Lamrence officiating. Interment took place in Shelby cemetery.

Mrs. Milliman spent two weeks with her mother, being called home by her illness, and returned home Sunday. Lysle Milliman and wife were there at the time of Mrs. Parish's death, enroute to Ferry, Mich., to be with her parents over Thanksgiving.

MAYR WLL REPLACE 118 IN AUTO LICENSE OFFICES

A complete change of personnel in the automobile license distributing system will be placed in effect by Frank Mayr, Jr., the secretary of state-elect, he announced from his home in South Bend.

Managers of the 118 license bureaus maintained throughout the state will be appointed on the recommendations of county chairmen, subject to the approval of the district chairmen, Mr. Mayr said. At present thirty-eight of the depots are under control of the Hoosier State Automobile Association, seven are controlled by the Chicago Motor Club and the remainder have been managed by appointees made by Otto G. Fifield, the retiring secretary of state.

Although no salary is connected with the depot managerships, the managers receive the 25-cent notary fee for attesting license aplications, and a similar fee for acknowledging applications for automobile driver's licenses.

"As a matter of policy I have asked the county chairmen and county organizations in each county to make recommendations for the places," Mayr said. "The names must also bear the approval of the district chairman in the district where the depot is situated."

With more than 2,000 applications for the places and for 203 other positions in the secretary of state's office, Mayr has placed a crew of girls at work distributing and indexing the aplications.

GERTRUDE BORTHWICK RE-ELECTED PRESIDENT

(Intended for last week)

The Home Bureau met at the country home of Mrs. Leona Mason. Club opened by singing America which was led by Mrs. Beulah Coburn. Followed by the business session in charge of the president, Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick.

Secretary's report was read and approved and the roll was called with thirty-two members responding with quotations from the Psalms. The president then announced that the club would take up nutrition for their project work for the coming year. Following was the election of officers:

President ...Gertrude Borthwick.
Vice President .....Cora Curie.
Secretary .....Millie Shull.
Assistant Secretary ..Mary Krise.
Treasurer .....Clara Foltz.
Assistant Treasurer .Arline Koch.

The project work was then given by the leader, Mrs. Laura Washler, this was a demonstration on making a waste paper basket. Mrs. Diadem Bone also gave a demonstration on an old fashioned quilt, both were very interesting to all.

A playlet entitled "Wanted A Wife" was given by Mrs. Hattie Draggoo, Mrs. Hattie Johnson, Mrs. Maud Jenkins, Mrs. Mary Krise and Mrs. Clara Foltz, this was well given and created much laughter. A harmonica solo was given by Mrs. Mayola Kinsey and Mrs. Mary Krise. Five guests and four children were present at the meeting. Delicious refreshments were then served by the committee in charge, Mrs. Katy Storer, Mrs. Ross Watt, Mrs. Nichols and Mrs. Leona Mason.

CHICAGO GOSPEL TABERNACLE STAFF COMING AT THE SPENCERVILLE M. E. CHURCH DECEMBER 4, AT 7:30 O'CLOCK

Mr. Ralph Rader and his staff will arrive at Spencerville Thursday, December 4, for a series of meetings, continuing over Sunday, December 7th. There will be a great afternoon service at the Community building at 2:30 Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Ziemer, who are on their way to India will be with the staff. Pictures will be given of Mr Paul Rader and his trip around the world.

The staff is from the Chicago Gospel Tabernacle. This will be a great opportunity for you to hear and see the wonderful work this staff of Gospel workers are doing. Tours have been made in other states and we consider it a great privilege to have them with us. Invite everybody to attend.

Rev. C. L. Eicher, secretary of the Missionary Department of the Chicago Gospel Tabernacle will be with the party.

UNIVERSAL BIBLE SUNDAY NEXT SUNDAY

Indianapolis, December 3. Governor Harry G. Leslie urges the observance next Sunday, December 7, of Universal Bible Sunday in the churches throughout Indiana. The American Bible Society, an organization which issues annually over eleven million copies of Bibles, Testaments, and Portions in close to two hundred languages, has been sponsoring Universal Bible Sunday over a period of years. Thousands of churches throughout the United States as well as many Christian churches abroad join in this movement which was conceived and is promoted to emphasize the essential position which the Bible occupies in the spiritual life of men and women.

In endorsing Universal Bible Sunday Governor Leslie says: "The Bible is the keynote to the religious faith of humanity. It is the formation upon which religious faith must rest if it is to be of any value in the formation of character. Only as the Bible is used does it become a potent influence in the development of character. I am glad to commend its reading to those who aspire to be of service to humanity, and especially those who are prone to lose confidence in their fellow men and the world's betterment."

REVIVAL IS UNDER WAY AT M. P. CHURCH

The evangelistic services at the St. Joe M. P. Church are steadily growing in interest and attendance. Despite the severe cold weather of last week people from Spencerivile and other points in the surrounding communities have been in attendance at these services.

Rev. and Mrs. C. S. Thompson, singing evangelists, have won the hearts of the people by their splendid type of gospel singing. Their special numbers in song prove a blessing and inspiration to the services. Mrs. Thompson furnishes some splendid music on the vibraphone each evening.

Services have been announced up till December 7th but no date for closing has been set.

The people of the community and of the other churches are invited to attend and help in these services. A real revival of religion would be of help to this community in more ways than one.

Rev. Mayfield is doing his own preaching and is handing out some searching messages. In a recent address the pastor made some statements as follows: "I am not preaching for church membership, but what I am doing, is asking that men and women accept Jesus Christ, turn from their old sinful paths, and then join the church of their choice."

WM. MAXWELL DIES AFTER SHORT ILLNESS

Cancer of the liver claimed Wm. Maxwell Tuesday forenoon, after but three weeks illness, while he had been ailing for years but was able to work up until that short space of time.

For years he has resided in the Cheesetown community and had reached the age of 61 years.

As we go to press we learn that the funeral will be held Thursday at 1 o'clock from the Coburntown Church, Rev. Fred Thomas officiating. Burial will be made in the Alton cemetery and will be in charge of E. R. Kinsey.

SUPER-QUALITY CREPES FOR SOFTER TYPE OF COSTUME

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

This season fashion whimsically returns to periods in history for inspiration and rediscovers the charm of the molded bodice, the elaborate sleeve, and the stiffly flaring skirt. Rich fabrics are the logical choice for costumes in this vein, wherefore witness the revival of lyons velvets, likewise satin de lyon and other sumptuous fabrics of similar type.

Suppleness must not be overlooked, however, in this enthusiasm for elegance, for materials must respond to intricate draping such as is featured throughout present-day costume design. So it is that the current fabric showing is a continuous program of handsome weaves which exploit not only the heavier type velvets and satins, for "stiff silks" are "in" again, but for the softer types of costume a series of firm quality-kind crepes are welcomed with enthusiasm by those who demand good materials.

In the Paris couture collections for tailored, afternoon and evening wear, such types as frost crepe and krisalkrope, also canton faille weaves are outstanding favorites. Heavy sheer crepes such as cantata (a triple georgette), and crepes andante (a triple flat chiffon) are designed for the softer styled costumes. Other important fabrics for this winter are satins both the crepey and smooth, flat crepes, designed to be worn at semi-formal gatherings. The new fashion demand that one be ladylike in dress as well as deportment is admirably exemplified in the charming import pictured to the right, which combines quiet dignity with a winsome youthfulness of silhouette. The tunic, a favorite line since it is flattering both to tall and short figures, achieves a sophisticated effect, being cut in one with a skirt on the left side. The fabric is frost-crepe, which is a canton faille of the popular crepe marocain type. All the edges are cut in triple scallops.

For the classic evening gown Lucian Lelong chooses turquoise crepe luminaury, a heavy sheer weave. Very Grecian in effect are the soft straight folds of fabric shirred at the center front and back, with looped drapery at the sides to make a slender column of the figure. The cowl decolletage front and back carries out the draped movement of the skirt.

Green, Yellow Vegetables Richer in Vitamin A

Milk and dairy products, eggs, liver, and leafy vegetables are among the richest sources of vitamin A. Green or yellow vegetables are much richer in it than the corresponding white varieties. Thus green lettuce is much richer than white, green asparagus than bleached, and yellow than white corn. The bureau of home economics gives these foods as good sources of vitamin A: Avocados, bananas, string beans, butter, carrots, cheese, cod liver oil, dried cowpeas, cream, dandelion and other greens, eggs, lentils, lettuce, liver, milk, peas, sweet-potatoes, spinach, squash, tomatoes.

Canned Apple Juice Will Be Found Useful

Canned apple juice is a reliable source of pectin, necessary for making jelly, and a supply of it put up while apples are in season will be found useful and convenient throughout the year, says the New York State College of Home Economics. It may be added to non-jellying fruits such as peaches, pineapples and rhubarb when in season; it is also useful for making jams, marmalade, conserves and sauces for winter desserts.

Cranberry Salad

Cook cranberries in heavy sirup, so that they stay whole. Drain and chill them, mix with other fruits and serve on lettuce with dressing.

Scalloped Onions With Peanuts an Addition to Winter Menu

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Here are two methods of serving onions to give variety to the winter menus. The scalloped onions are particularly good with coarsely ground peanuts scattered between the layers. Large mild onions are needed for stuffing. Allow as many as you have persons at the meal, unless the onions are so very large it is quite evident that half of one will be a satisfactory portion. Both recipes are from the bureau of home economics.

Scalloped Onions and Peanuts.

6 medium-sized onions
1 cup peanuts, ground
1 tbs. melted butter or other fat
1 tbs. flour
1 cup milk
½ tsp. salt
1 cup buttered bread crumbs

Skin the onions, cook in boiling water until tender, drain, and slice. Make a sauce of the fat, flour, milk, and salt. In a greased baking dish place a layer of the onions, cover with the peanuts and sauce, and continue until all are used. Cover the top with buttered crumbs and bake in a moderate oven for about 20 minutes, or until the crumbs are golden brown. Serve from the baking dish.

Stuffed Onions.

6 large mild onions
2 tbs. butter or other fat
½ cup chopped celery
2 tbs. chopped parsley
2 cups dry bread crumbs
1 tsp. salt
Pepper

Skin the onions, cut in half crosswise, simmer in salted water until almost tender, and drain. Remove the centers without disturbing the outer layers and chop fine. Melt two tablespoonfuls of the fat in a skillet, add the chopped onion, celery, parsley, and cook for a few minutes. Push the vegetables to one side, melt the remaining fat and add to it the bread crumbs, salt and pepper, then combine with the vegetables. Fill the onion shells with the stuffing, cover, and bake in a moderate oven for about 30 minutes, or until the onions are tender. Remove the cover from the baking dish during the last of the cooking so the onions will brown on top.

Various Different Ways of Preparing Parsnips

After boiling parsnips until tender there are several ways of preparing them for serving. Probably there is no more popular method of finishing them than browning them in butter or other sweet fat. They may be halved, or mashed and fried in little cakes. Dip the pieces in flour before frying. The following recipe for scalloped parsnips gives directions for the preliminary boiling. This is a very good way of fixing parsnips for children, suggests the bureau of home economics, United States Department of Agriculture, which furnishes the recipe.

Scalloped Parsnips.

6 or 7 medium-sized parsnips
2 tbs. butter or other fat
2 tbs. flour
1 cup rich milk or cream
¼ tsp. salt
1 cup buttered bread crumbs

Scrub the parsnips clean, cook for 20 to 30 minutes, or until tender, in lightly salted water, and drain. Scrape off the outer skin, split the parsnips lengthwise, and pull out the stringy cores. Place the parsnips in a shallow baking dish, and cover with a sauce made with the fat, flour, and milk or cream, and salt. Cover the top with the bread crumbs and bake in a moderate oven for about 20 minutes, or until the parsnips are thoroughly heated and the buttered crumbs are golden brown. Serve in the baking dish.

Butterscotch Pudding Supplies Good Dessert

Those who like a rich, sweet dessert once in a while will enjoy this butterscotch cream pudding. The recipe is from the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. The same mixture can be used as filling for cream puffs or eclairs, or for butterscotch pie or the filling for tarts or boston cream pie, which is made with two layers of plain cake or sponge cake.

¾ cup flour
2 cups milk
1½ cups brown sugar
2 tbs. butter
½ tsp. salt
2 or 3 eggs
½ tsp. vanilla

Blend the flour and one cupful of the cold milk until smooth. Heat the remaining milk in a double boiler, pour some of the hot milk into the flour and milk, return the mixture to the double boiler, stir until thickened, and cook for 15 minutes. Meantime, cook the brown sugar, butter, and salt for five minutes, over direct heat and stir. Add while hot to the mixture in the double boiler, heat well, gradually stir this mixture into the beaten eggs, return to the double boiler, cook for a few minutes, remove from the fire, add the vanilla, and chill. Serve with plain or whipped cream.

Black Silk

To renew the sheen of black silk, sponge with hot coffee on the right side, turn over and press damp.

SOME RECIPES THAT WILL BE LIKED BY THE ENTIRE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

What can an individual do but just distribute such little gifts as he has to give, which increases the chances for happiness by increasing the appetite for the things of the spirit.—Edward Yeomans.

A simple dessert well made and daintily served gives just the finishing touch to a plain dinner. Here are a few desserts that may be helpful in planning a luncheon and the dinner menus:

On baking day when the oven is not too well occupied, prepare and bake a pastry shell or two, or bake the shells on patty tins for individual pies. These will keep well for a few days and it will be found most helpful to put in a filling of lemon, cover with a meringue and have a dessert in a very few minutes. These shells may be filled with crushed fruit, topped with whipped cream, or they may be filled with a butterscotch filling or chocolate, thus having any kind that seems desirable or is well liked.

The following will be another filling that takes but a few moments to prepare:

Marshmallow and Fruit Pudding.—Soak one-fourth of a cupful of candied cherries and pineapple cut into pieces either in the pineapple juice or any fruit juice either canned or fresh, for an hour or more. Use maraschino cherries and their own sirup if preferred. Cut one-half pound of marshmallows into six pieces each. Beat one cupful of whipping cream until stiff, add three tablespoonfuls of confectioner's sugar gradually, then a half teaspoonful of almond with a few drops of vanilla. Mix the marshmallows with one-half cupful of pecan meats broken into pieces and fold all together. Chill and serve in the pastry cups.

A Dainty Luncheon Dessert.—Spread the round butter crackers with marshmallow cream and in the center of each place a teaspoonful of pineapple or orange marmalade. Beat the whites of two eggs until stiff and dry, add one-fourth cupful of powdered sugar and with a pastry tube pipe this meringue around the edge of the cracker, then set a rose of meringue in the center. Sprinkle with granulated sugar and brown delicately in the oven.

Apple Stuffed With Dates.—Wash and core six to eight apples. Fill the cavities with stoned dates. Cover with boiling water to soften and separate the dates, then drain and dry before stoning. Bake the apples until tender, basting with a plain sirup of sugar and water boiled together ten minutes. Serve hot with rich cream.

Welsh Rarebit on Anchovy Toast.—Melt three tablespoonfuls of butter, blend with three teaspoonfuls of cornstarch, then add one cupful of milk slowly; cook, stirring until the starch is well cooked. Cut one pound of soft cheese fine, add one-half teaspoonful each of salt and mustard, a dash of cayenne, stir and cook until creamy. Have toast well buttered and spread with anchovy paste. Serve the rarebit hot over the toast and garnish with sliced tomatoes, marinated in french dressing.

Cheese and Sardine Rolls.—Butter bread and spread with grated cheese or place a skinned and boned sardine on the buttered bread, roll up and secure with a toothpick. Brown in a hot oven or sute in a chafing dish. Remove skewers and serve. Nice with soup or salad.

Shrimps in Aspic.—Prepare an aspic as follows: Break an egg white into one and one-half cupfuls of lemon juice and one-half cupful of water. Let come to a boil and strain. Add one tablespoonful of gelatin soaked in one-fourth cupful of cold water; stir and strain again. Set a mold into ice water and pour in some of the aspic; when firm, cover with shrimps, then when firm cover with more of the jelly until the mold is full. Let the jelly set at each addition before adding more shrimps. Chill and serve with mayonnaise on lettuce.

EVENING STORY FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

There were some late goldenrods nodding their heads and talking.

It was late in the season for many of them to be around.

"Some folks don't care about you," said some weeds in the field nearby.

"There are some folks," said the goldenrods, shaking their heads quite hard, "who don't like anything unless it costs money, hard, cold money.

"Just as though money would make us grow.

"They could pour those things they call pennies, and nickels and dimes—and even quarters—all over us and do you suppose we'd grow for them?

"Indeed we wouldn't. They could plant dollars all around our roots and it wouldn't make a scrap of difference.

"That shows how much we care for money, and the people who only like flowers that cost a great deal."

"You have almost as much sense as though you were weeds," said the weeds.

"Oh," smiled the goldenrods, "that is because we are near to weeds in a way.

"We are called flowers, but we are wild flowers. We do not grow in gardens or in hot houses; no, we grow all over the fields and the meadows.

"We grow out in the open under the sky."

"And pray tell us why you talk so harshly about money?" asked the weeds. "They say that money is a fine thing. They all like it. We've heard the children asking for it, too."

"Oh, Look at the Lovely Goldenrods."

"It's funny," said the goldenrods. "Of course it is needed to help people live, but when they talk about flowers and how much they cost—well, we really can't stand that."

The goldenrods looked very sad, and drooped a little.

"Oh, pick up your heads," said the weeds. "You mustn't be unhappy because people talk about flowers that cost a lot.

"Most of them don't do that. Most of them love wild flowers and love to see them and gather them."

Just then some children came along.

"Oh, look at the lovely goldenrods," said one.

"I thought they were all gone," said another.

"Isn't this wonderful—finding so many here," said a third child.

The weeds whispered to the goldenrods.

"Now are you happy?"

The goldenrods whispered back to the weeds and said to them:

"Indeed we are."

And as the children gathered some of the late goldenrods and said how much they loved them the goldenrods were sad no longer.

They are so bright and so love to give joy and pleasure.

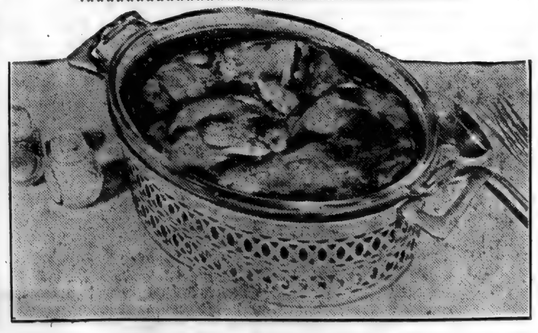
Domestic Rabbit Meat Is White and Delicately Flavored



Domestic Rabbit Is Delicately Flavored.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

The meat of a domestic rabbit is so superior in color and flavor to that of wild rabbit as to make it seem an entirely different article of food. All the meat on a domestic rabbit is white and delicately flavored throughout. In food value, rabbit falls in the class with poultry and other meats as a source of efficient protein. Domestic rabbit may be eaten at any season.

While a great many of the domestic rabbits are marketed at eight to ten weeks of age and are termed "fryers," the more mature animals are also good. They need longer, slower cooking, as in fricassees, casserole dishes, and rabbit pie, and may be used in croquettes, salads, chop suey and other dishes made of previously cooked meat. The bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture suggests the following way of cooking a mature rabbit en casserole:

Wipe the rabbit meat with a damp cloth, cut into pieces for serving, sprinkle with salt and pepper, and roll in flour. Brown lightly in hot fat in a skillet, transfer to a casserole, add some of the fat from the skillet and one-half cupful of hot water. Cover and cook in a moderate oven (350 degrees Fahrenheit) for one and one-half to two hours, or until the meat is tender. Remove the meat, and thicken the gravy slightly. To each cup of liquid allow one tablespoonful of flour, mix with a few tablespoonfuls of cold water, add to the meat drippings, return to the oven, and stir occasionally until thickened. Season with salt and pepper and finely chopped parsley, replace the meat, and when thoroughly hot serve in the casserole.

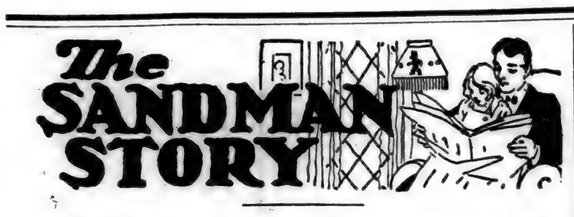
The SANDMAN STORY



PETER GNOME'S DAY

"I'VE always wanted to tell of a beautiful day I had in the late summer," said Peter Gnome.

"There were many times when I meant to tell of this day and then something came up, as they say, and I didn't get around to it—another speech which you hear made.

"I've talked enough since then but it has just happened I have never told of this beautiful day, and I should so like to have you hear of my adventures on that occasion."

All the little gnomes gathered around Peter and he began:

"It was a beautiful sunny day and the first creature I met was a lovely big spangled butterfly.

"The butterfly was very big and wore a brown suit with brown spots and silver trimmings and silver touches in the lining or underneath part of the suit.

"The Butterfly Was Very Big and Wore a Brown Suit."

"'I am going to visit a little city girl,' the butterfly told me. 'She is not able to get out as she has been ill and I am going to show her a bit of the summer time, for I think I'm quite correct in speaking of myself as a bit of the summer time.

"'I went to see her yesterday and went right in the open window into her bedroom. There was a big vase there filled with goldenrods and while she ate her lunch I had mine, too.

"'She seemed to be so happy seeing me that I'm going again, for as soon as she is much better she is going to make a visit to the country and she is looking forward to it so much.'

"I've always meant to tell you about this butterfly and the happiness he gave the little girl," Peter Gnome said.

"I went with him that day and saw the little girl greet him.

"I had on my invisible robe, of course—the one I wear so that no one can see me—and I saw the butterfly flitting about among the goldenrods and I saw her smiling and talking about her own beautiful butterfly.

"When the butterfly left she called out a cheery thank you and good-by and just a little later, when the doctor came in he said she was so much better that she could go on her country visit in two more days.

"I heard her say, just as I was leaving:

"'I know my beautiful butterfly made me well—and the goldenrods which my sister brought me.'

"Then I wandered away from the city and just as I was leaving I saw a little girl named Ada.

"She had chopped up some of the meat which she had not felt like finishing and was taking it around in a paper bag to the poor cats in the neighborhood. She used to take them all sorts of scraps.

"And whenever people saw her they looked at her as though she were quite strange, but all the cats came rushing up to greet her, sniffing at the paper bag.

"Then, when I got out into the country I met the dearest little lamb you have ever seen!

"He was white but his nose was black and his feet were black and he had black stripes around his legs.

"He came to me when I called him and he let me pet him. Later I saw him kissing a little girl's hand. She was patting him and calling him her 'dear lamb.'

"But I was so happy that the lamb had been friendly with me. Sometimes gnomes are thought to be dreadful creatures, but anyone who really knows us, knows that we aren't dreadful at all.

"We love children and we do what we can to help them—never to harm them.

"And I was glad the little lamb seemed to feel at once that I was a friend.

"Oh, it was a beautiful day with the butterfly making a little girl well and Ada feeding the half-starved left-alone summer cats, and the little lamb who paid me such a compliment.

"Yes, it was one of my nicest days. There was no great excitement, no single thing that stood out above all the others; it was just a whole beautiful day that made one so happy just being alive.

"I love days like that," Peter Gnome ended.

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

LIFE'S MOTIVES

ONE of the interesting observations is the great power which certain motives hold over people. One of the explanations for this is that these motives are prompted by certain fundamental emotions of human nature. The oldest and in some respects the most primitive of these emotions is fear. Nearly every person is afraid of something. As a child is afraid of the dark, so are we at times afraid of the unknown, of the uncertainties of tomorrow. The fear of pain is quite common, and it is the exception to find a person who is not afraid of death. Fear, however, is of great value as a motive power because fear of hunger impells us to provide for the day of want. Fear of the results of ignorance compells us to give to our children the best education we can afford. Fear of failures urges us on to success. Fear, however, as a motive force in right living fails to elevate character to the highest point of achievement. Fear of having to pay the penalty may keep us, for a time, from doing wrong; or fear of discovery may save us, for the time being, from a wrong act; but the restraining power of fear is not very great in moments of intense crisis. As a constructive force in character development it is of little value. The child is afraid to do wrong in the presence of its parents. When discovery is thought to be impossible, fear no longer acts as a restraining force.

L. A. Barrett

Another motive which has been the cause of a large number of failures in life is selfishness. Personal aggrandizement, as a motivating influence in one's career is destined to land one on the rocks. It never has succeeded and never will. A person whose life is dominated by the spirit of selfishness is like a parasite, living off of others, receiving nourishment from the efforts of some one else. Selfishness takes its toll in the lack of confidence and trust on the part of others, without which no person can succeed in building up a business career or in developing his own character.

The most important motive in life is love and service. Every successful career was built up on the spirit of service. As love for the right impells us to do the right thing at the right time, so service assures to us the greatest profits, not only in the economic world, but in the daily experiences with our fellow men. "I came not to be ministered to, but to minister," said The Great Teacher.

STEPHEN, AN EARLY INTERPRETER OF CHRISTIANITY

LESSON TEXT—Acts 6:1-7:60.

GOLDEN TEXT—And the saying pleased the whole multitude: and they chose Stephen, a man full of faith and of the Holy Ghost, and Philip, and Prochorus, and Nicanor, and Timon, and Parmenas, and Nicolas a proselyte of Antioch.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Stephen, Jesus' Helper and Friend.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Standing Up for Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Standing Up for Christ.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Stephen's Contribution to Christianity.

I. Stephen Chosen as Deacon (Acts 6:1-8).

The early church was threatened with disruption over suspected partiality in the distribution of alms. As soon as the church had relief from external troubles, difficulties arose from within. A congregational meeting was called, the case placed before the church with instructions to select seven men of good reputation, and Spirit-filled, to administer the temporalities of the church, thus giving the apostles the necessary time for prayer and the ministry of God's word. Among the seven deacons chosen, Stephen occupied first place.

The essential qualifications for the deacon's office are:

1. Integrity. They were instructed to look for men of good report, of unquestioned integrity.

2. Sagacity. They were to look for men full of wisdom, men of common sense and good judgment.

3. Spirituality. They were to be men full of the Holy Ghost.

II. Stephen Before the Council (Acts 6:9-15).

1. Disputing with Stephen (vv. 9, 10). Certain foreign speaking Jews took the lead in this controversy. Perhaps the fact that Stephen was a Grecian-Jew provoked them to this action. He was more than a match for them while the debate was carried along the lines of reason and Scripture. Beaten along these lines, they had him arrested and brought before the Council.

2. Charged with blasphemy (vv. 11-14). They trumped up this charge against him and endeavored to support it by secretly finding and inducing men to perjure themselves in their testimony. Stephen showed in his preaching that God's purpose was progressive and that the policy instituted by Moses would be superseded by the new faith, since it was but the culmination of what Moses began. Christianity did not destroy Judaism but caused it to blossom forth into the glory of the new order.

3. Stephen's face transfigured (v. 15). He was so completely filled with Christ that as he saw the angry mob and realized how soon he would be violently dealt with and thus pass into the presence of the Lord, his face shone as the face of an angel.

III. Stephen's Defense (Acts 7:1-53).

In refuting their charge he showed by the history of God's dealing with the Jews that they had always resisted him. Therefore, their present attitude was because they were unwilling to move forward with the divine purpose. According to Dr. Stifler, four points emerge in this defense:

1. God's dealing with the Jews showed progress. It was not reached by a single leap, but by gradual stages.

2. The temple was not the only holy place. God appeared at different times and in different places.

3. Israel invariably opposed God in his effort to lead them on.

4. He showed his loyalty to Moses by constantly referring to him.

IV. Stephen Stoned (Acts 7:54-60).

His words cut them to the heart so they gnashed upon him with their teeth.

1. Looking steadfastly into heaven (v. 55). Instead of looking upon his murderers he looked up to heaven.

2. He saw the glory of God (v. 55). A vision of God's glory is only possible to those who are loyal unto death.

3. He saw Jesus standing on the right hand of God (vv. 55, 56), showing that he was actively interested in the suffering of his faithful witness.

4. They cast him out of the city and stoned him (vv. 58, 59).

5. His prayer (v. 60). He kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." How like the prayer of Jesus on the cross.

6. He fell asleep (v. 60). The Christian's death is only a sleep. This sublime scene must have vitally affected Saul who was consenting unto his death.

Faith

Faith draws out our stops . . . While the sympathy of our Lord is expressed in the briefest verse in the Bible—"Jesus wept"—that verse requires as a foot-note the many pages which describe his crucifixion.—John Andrew Holmes.

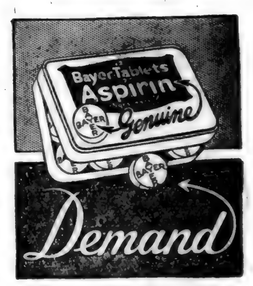
BAYER ASPIRIN is always SAFE

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS

UNLESS you see the name Bayer and the word genuine on the package as pictured here you can never be sure that you are taking genuine Bayer Aspirin tablets which thousands of physicians have always prescribed.

The name Bayer means genuine Aspirin. It is your guarantee of purity—your protection against imitations. Millions of users have proved that it is safe.

BAYER ASPIRIN DOES NOT DEPRESS THE HEART



Genuine Bayer Aspirin promptly relieves:

HEADACHES, SORE THROAT, LUMBAGO, RHEUMATISM, NEURITIS, NEURALGIA, COLDS, ACHES and PAINS

Aspirin is the trade-mark of Bayer manufacture of monoaceticacidester of salicylicacid

Slightly Sardonic

"Your audience cheered you for nearly half an hour," remarked the admiring friend.

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "Audiences are getting pretty wise. They'd rather listen to themselves cheer than to the average speech."

STOMACH UPSET, SOUR? THIS WILL COMFORT

Don't let sour stomach, gas, indigestion make you suffer. And don't use crude methods to get relief.

Just take a spoonful of Phillips' Milk of Magnesia in a glass of water. It instantly neutralizes many times its volume in excess acid. It will probably end your distress in five minutes.

Phillips' Milk of Magnesia is the perfect way to end digestive disorders due to excess acid for men, women, children—and even babies. Endorsed by doctors, used by hospitals.

Your drugstore has the 25c and 50c sizes. Insist on the genuine.

Improvement Suggested

Sonny had played his first game of miniature golf, not too well. His mother asked him how he liked it, and he replied: "It would be just fine if they would only make the holes a little larger!"

Carry Your Medicine In Your Handbag

Our Vegetable Compound is also sold in chocolate coated tablets, just as effective as the liquid form.

Endorsed by half a million women, this medicine is particularly valuable during the three trying periods of maturity, maternity and middle age.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"AFTER US THE DELUGE"

"COME on, we should worry—after us the deluge!"

Every so often we hear, or perhaps give vent to some such sentiment as has just been quoted.

The implication in the phrase "After Us the Deluge" is that things are going from bad to worse; that things cannot go on this way much longer; that the crash is inevitable; so let's get out of it what we can, for ourselves.

That is the significance with which "After Us the Deluge" is so frequently encountered, the reference being to the deluge in the days of Noah.

As everybody knows, the deluge flooded all the land in the world, so that every living thing that was outside of Noah's Ark was drowned or destroyed.

REMEDYING "HATES"

YOUNG girls, some of them, amuse themselves these days in making lists of their "hates." They enumerate everything and everyone from cup custards to ungenerous parents. Of course, there is usually a bit of a pose in the way of young girl enumerates her "hates," and these lists are probably seldom written in perfect seriousness.

The busy housewife may also make her list of "hates," only she would probably choose the soft word "dislikes." She might honestly put down "agents who call you from work in the busiest time of the day." Most women do dislike them heartily even though they end by buying of their wares.

The mother with several young children usually finds the hour between five and six so trying as to be included in this list—the hour when children are tired and hungry, when little ones must be got ready for bed and when the evening meal must be prepared.

Now, honestly, what do you dislike most? It would really do you good to make an enumeration. If you discover what things annoy and try you most, then you may be able to do something to help matters out. Sometimes you know we go on and on from year to year putting up with conditions that are peculiarly trying, particularly fatiguing, that might, if we made a supreme effort, be remedied.

Getting Back at Europe

The United States is beginning to get back at Europe for the hordes of immigrants she has sent here and which she would like to continue. Three Americans have recently settled and become naturalized in Liechtenstein, that independent principality which looks like a dot on the map and which is smaller than any one of the twenty-two states composing Switzerland.—Washington Star.

No more COLIC pains ... give Castoria

A CRY in the night may be the first warning that Baby has colic. No cause for alarm if Castoria is handy! This pure vegetable preparation brings quick comfort, and can never do the slightest harm. Always keep a bottle in the house. It is the safe and sensible thing when children are ailing. Whether it's the stomach, or the little bowels; colic or constipation; or diarrhea. When tiny tongues are coated, or the breath is bad. When there's need of gentle regulation. Every child loves the taste of Castoria, and its mildness makes it suitable for the tiniest infant, and for frequent use.

And a more liberal dose of Castoria is usually all that's needed to right the irregularities of older, growing children. Genuine Castoria has Chas. H. Fletcher's signature on the wrapper. It's prescribed by doctors!

The Shaving Cream that remains moist, softens the beard—and soothes and invigorates the skin!

SPENDING FOR NEEDS PART OF NORMAL BUYING

Manufacturers and retailers spend months in preparation for the buying rush that takes place regularly at this time of year. Factories are kept running and salespeople retained in their jobs on the supposition that business will proceed as usual.

Because the Christmas prospects for a relatively small part of the population cannot this year be very bright is a good reason why the much greater percentage should not lower their Christmas standards. Reduced buying during the next few weeks will slow down business further and throw more people out of work. Normal buying on the other hand, will speed up business, create jobs, and make it possible for many to have a Cristmas who won't have it if spending proceeds at a subnormal rate.

Everybody who is able should resolve now to resume normal spending for normal needs.

GIVE THANKS

Scarcely had the Pilgrims settled in the Bay Colony three hundred and ten years ago when the terrible New England winter descended upon them.

Only half of the party survived the hardships and suffering of that first year. Those who were spared carried on like the dauntless pioneers they were, and lived and prospered.

Give thanks for the example set us so many years ago. The homely virtues of self-discipline and perseverance are still the unfailing source of abundant prosperity.

What Brazil Is Like

Scene at a Coffee Warehouse in Santos, Brazil.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

BRAZIL is so huge—it is a quarter of a million square miles larger than the United States—and is made up of so many diverse regions that the average visitor can do little more than acquaint himself with a limited area. But modern travel methods have at least greatly stretched the area that can be covered by a brief tour. Now many travelers from the United States to South America go by airplane, skimming along over the Atlantic coast of the great republic.

The first familiar feature of Brazil that the air traveler sees is the Amazon. At its mouth the big river, 180 miles wide between its capes, colors the sea and dilutes its salt for 50 miles offshore. Men in small fishing boats, venturing out of sight of land, figure how far out they are by tasting the water.

The rise of the river near Para in flood times is often 50 feet. Then vast areas of forest are completely inundated. Snow in the Andes begins to melt in August, but this delta does not feel the rise till six months later. With a valley covering 2,722,000 square miles, and containing about 45,000 miles of navigable water communications, it is easy to see why it takes the big river six months to rise—and six months to fall. Also, the slope of the vast valley from the foot of the Andes to the Atlantic is only about 250 feet. This is why tides from the sea are felt up the Amazon for 600 miles. Sometimes three or four tides are riding the river at once, like big waves far apart.

Looking at maps, one observes the Amazon delta does not run out to sea on land bridges, as do the Nile, the Ganges and the Mississippi. It carries prodigious loads of mud, and geologists say its delta once extended 300 miles past its present mouths. But now the ocean is rapidly eating into the continent. And from the air you see how this goes on. By an odd freak of nature, the sea is driving inland huge waves of white sand. These big dunes in many places have buried the trees. Elsewhere you can see dead trees, once covered with sand and killed, and then exposed again to the advancing sea waves—washing them out by the roots.

Rush of the Amazon Bore.

And the Para, or south coast, of the delta, you notice, is higher and drier than the coast of Brazilian Guiana, north of the Amazon delta. Around Maraca island and the mouth of the Araguary river the famous Amazon bore is at its best. When it runs in its roar can be heard six miles. Its speed is ten to fifteen knots an hour, and anything in its path is swept away.

Look down on all these mud banks, rip tides and shallows, and you see why skippers dread navigation in these waters. Changes in coast outlines are constant; shoals and flats form only to be washed away. Mud banks which a few years ago barely showed above the sea are now covered with trees. Bad lights and buoys, lack of good charts, ever shifting currents bring many ships to grief.

Even the many small native trading boats, their cabins thatched over and their sails made of blue cotton cloth, have their own troubles here with wind, tide, and mud.

San Luis from the air is a compact, red-roofed town of many patios and narrow streets. It was first a fort built by the French and named after Louis XIII. The town is on an island, and a railway connects it with the mainland. It is a thriving place. You see new buildings going up—alongside wonderful old houses with fronts of fancy glazed tiles, and marble statuary lifted above their patio gates.

Scenes Along the Coast.

At the mouth of the Amazon and north of it Brazil is very damp. But once you quit the Amazon delta, and get well on your way down the sloping coast toward the great shoulder of northeast Brazil, like magic the soaking jungles and mud flats change to a parched and sunburnt land, with mile-long sand dunes bare and forlorn as the shores of Suez. If you placed a few camels under the lonely clumps of coconut trees—which you see being smothered by sand dunes often 60 feet high—you would get as good a desert picture as any from Bagdad to Cairo.

Men killing a big sea turtle on the beach; lonely lighthouses; sandy Araby scenery, with goats prowling sand dunes for stray plant life; odd boats of five spliced logs and a dirty sail, awash from stem to stern so that two fishermen aboard work standing in water; fish-traps like long picket fences in coastal shallows; grass-roofed huts on far apart stretches of coconut-shaded beach, an idyllic Robinson Crusoe setting: these sights the air traveler along Brazil's coast sees, while much empty country and a few busy towns that America never heard of, slip under him.

Take Fortaleza, often called Ceara, in the state of that name. It is one of the many ports scattered down this seaplane path that help consume the ever-growing stream of shop-made things we must export if we are to keep our mills running full time. Walk its noisy, narrow, cobble-stoned streets and see how American machines and methods mark its life. Broadway melodies crooned by Yankee talking machines to soothe a roomful of bob-haired dressmakers; another roomful of girls demonstrating sewing machines; busses, trucks, motor cars, typewriters, cash registers, fountain pens, printing presses, corn poppers, vending machines, cameras, garages with young Brazilian boys using American tools, ferris wheels, merry-go-rounds, gas stoves, electric equipment, movie houses—even movie-fan magazines in the native language but printed in the States; telephones, street cars, wireless—a city of 100,000 whose very name few Americans ever heard. Yet a good customer of ours, paying us for what it buys with skins and vegetable wax, or with cash from cotton sold to Liverpool.

Here, as in all cities which stand along this world transportation route, American capital and management help build up the public utilities. And here the people bless the Rockefeller foundation for killing their old enemy the mosquito.

Natal and Bahia.

Rounding the shoulder of South America one passes Cape San Roque, which aviators say is their nearest point from which to quit this coast for Europe. Below it stands Natal—the well-known western terminus of Africa-Brazil flights. Here, too, converges the air-web of plane paths which collect South American mail for Europe, which mail is sent from here to Dakar, Africa, by speedy French dispatch boats and there put again on planes for Europe. The French hope in time to set up a transatlantic air-mail line between Natal and Dakar. Five air lines now serve this town of 40,000. Natal reveals proof of Brazil's interest in air travel. You see hangars for seaplanes, radio towers, Brazil's first civilian school for aviators, and a fine flying field for land planes.

Well around the northeastern shoulder of Brazil lies Bahia. Between this port city and the United States close ties exist. California owes a big debt to Bahia. In 1871 Richard Edes, then United States consul at Bahia, sent to the Department of Agriculture in Washington some navel orange trees. A letter went back to the consul, saying: "You have placed the department in possession of one of the most desirable varieties of oranges known; and one which it has much desired. . . . You omitted to inclose your bill." From this simple start—for which a pioneer Yankee consul did not even send his bill for expenses—was to arise a horticultural achievement without parallel in the migration of fruit trees.

Bahia is the site of the oldest civilization in South America. Half a century before the first white settlements in the United States it was a Portuguese colony. Named by Amerigo Vespucci and his band, for centuries it led a turbulent life, assailed by pestilence, famine, Indians, and Lisbon's old enemies, the Dutch. Often the Indians devoured large bands of settlers. The military commander and the whole population of the colony at Cayru were butchered while attending church and eaten. Yellow fever was epidemic for three centuries. On one occasion 29 pirates were hanged at the same time and place. For generations all Lisbon trading ships came to Bahia guarded by gunboats against pirates and other enemies.

CHAPTER XIV

—23—

Will and Ernestine Choose

Will was nailing up a wooden box. The shelves and the table were empty. Ankle deep on the floor was a litter of papers.

"Ernestine!" He stopped, a hammer in hand, to stare at her.

"What are you doing?" she exclaimed, and then, with a little cry of horror she stooped and picked up from the rubbish on the floor, a torn picture.

"Oh, Will, how could you tear it up? It was good—it was wonderful. Why did you destroy it?" With trembling hands she tried to put the ragged pieces together on the drafting desk. He looked at her astonished, voiceless. Before her, racked against the wall, was the sketch of herself, with Elaine on her arm.

"I'm glad you didn't throw this away—oh, Will, I like it so! But what are you doing? Are you moving?"

"What do you mean, Ernestine?" he said sharply. "Did you know about this office—when have you been here?"

"Of course I knew," she said impatiently, confused to find the need for explanations, now, at this vital hour. I've known you had this office, since last spring. I knew, long before that, that you were hankering for something—some new work. You remember the night you made this picture?" She picked up the sketch of herself. "You remember? Of course you do. I knew then, that you were working. Lillian had told me she saw you in this neighborhood, and I came here the next day, and looked at all your work. Oh, Will, don't look at me so! I wasn't spying on you! You were so strange, and I was very unhappy—I had to know what you were doing. But aren't you going to work here any more?"

He laughed strangely.

"Rent's due tomorrow," he said. "I decided to let it go. I'm closing this office, and I'll never open another. I suppose, since you knew I was working here, that you were worried about the cats—but you needn't have worried—I'll stay with the job. I've given up my wild ideas. We'll keep the income—that's what counts."

"Why Will," she said swiftly, "you don't think there's any conflict between your desire and mine, do you? That's what I've been saving for—all this time. I knew that you would want to quit the cats, and I've saved a great deal of money—you'll be astonished. I had to know—it was right for me to know. It's made it possible for us to build a reserve. And why should I worry about the cats? Do you think I want you to stick to the cats, if there's something bigger, something more compelling upon you? Why, Will, Will—all I want is just what you want." Suddenly she remembered her errand, with a wail. "Oh, Will, Pastano wants the money for Loring—a bribe. Loring's in terrible trouble. He'll have to go to jail, but, oh, I don't want to give them the money for him. It's your money, Will—don't give it away—don't let them take it from us."

He caught her wrist and held it hard.

"Are you out of your senses?" he asked sternly. "What do you mean—money? What money have you?"

She opened her purse and took her small savings deposit book from it. She opened the book, and put it in his hand, the total across the narrow page. His eyes were wide, incredulous. He rubbed his hand across his face.

"It's yours, Will," she said with sudden gentleness. "I have robbed you of every cent I could get from you, and I've lived as cheaply as I could, and I've banked the difference—for you."

Deep within her she heard a warning bell. She remembered that they had much to tell each other. She laid her hand upon his arm, and said in the same low tone:

"Look at me, Will."

He looked at her—his brilliant black eyes fixed on her brown eyes—he looked at her deeply, with astonishment, and suddenly Ernestine was filled with a strange power and wisdom. She passed out of self-consciousness and was controlled and guided by deep instincts and ancient mother wisdom. She moved toward Will, put her face up to his and kissed his lips.

"Will," she said, smiling up at him, her lovely face alight with feeling, her tender mouth curved in a smile of sweetness, "Will, I love you. You forget it. You ignore it—you make love a burden instead of a support. I've seen it in the deeps of your artist's mind—that love betrayed and entrapped you, instead of letting you free. Haven't you thought that?"

His arm trembled a little under her hand.

"Only once," he said, and his face flushed, "only once—the day after I had made that picture." He motioned to the picture she still held in her free hand. "The next day, I knew that I could not go on with my dreams, I knew I would have to quit it—that day, I felt so—it seemed as though—" He paused, stumbled on, with courage. "It just seemed to me—a woman is so sweet and warm in one's arms—so generous—so lovely; and then, suddenly, there are a house, and a car, and children, and nurse maids, and cooks, and doctors—a thousand things—just suddenly, I shouldn't have felt so—I fought it—but it got me. I'm telling you—you asked me."

Her eyes were full of tears.

"I knew, Will—not just that way, but I knew—that's why I've been saving and been silent—that's why I didn't ask you any questions. But, Will, I love you. It's the biggest thing in the world to me, Will. It means to me what these pictures—what this work means to you. I'm not an artist—I'm not even artistic—but I know what your work means to you, because I love you. And when you shut me out, Will, it was for me just as it was for you when you were shut off from your work. I want you to be happy." She was solemn, young, uplifted, filled with the glory of unselfishness, her face a blurred and lovely picture seen through tears.

"Dear heart, what does the money matter? Why, Will—even more than the children—yes, though I ought not say it—more than the children, than my people, than myself. You've told me how you felt, and I'll tell you, that for a little while, for one dark time, I was jealous of your work—of your love for it. But not any more, Will.

Deep Within Her She Heard a Warning Bell.

I want you to have what's best for you; I want you to have your work. There isn't any conflict between your desire and mine, Will, or your future and mine, because I want what you want."

His face began to shine. He reached up, took her hand and held it.

"Ernestine," he whispered, and stopped as she leaned forward, her head against his shoulder, her face hidden so, while she went on swiftly:

"Will, I knew you were tired of the cats. Will, I spent only about a third of what you earned, last year. But you wouldn't tell me, you didn't want to talk to me, so I just went ahead, planning for the time when you would. I knew that you wouldn't want, probably wouldn't take, the money I'll have from grandmother and from papa, some day. But this is yours—it's savings from your earnings, Will. It's for your stake."

"You understood," he said hoarsely.

"Will," she said again, and now her arm was around his body, the picture up between his shoulders, "I'll tell you again—I—"

"No, no, Ernestine," he said with quick passion, "you can't let me; we can't go back. Do you know what it means? A living—I think I could make that—but it will be precarious—I've been into it all with some thought. It will be years before I can make even half what the cartoons bring me. Even if I get darned good—there's not the money to be found— I've thought it all out. I've been up and down and around this problem. I've tried to save some, too. But it won't work. It's precarious—it's too scanty. I've been through it all, and made up my mind. Don't tempt me with your savings—they wouldn't last us a year."

"If we went back to the West side, back to the old house, I could do my own work, and the children and I could live on the trust fund, until you got started. You could keep this studio, and you could go to Philadelphia and to Paris and study."

"Would you—would you do that—for me? Ernestine, my wife." He kissed her, and she shook the tears from her own lashes and drew him down and pressed her lips against his eyes.

"It wouldn't be necessary for you to do that, darling," he said to her, and he laughed a little. "It wouldn't be that bad. I could make a living—and you've your trust fund, and your grandmother has promised you the house at Langley lake. No, you won't have to go back to the West side—you can keep Molly, I believe. We can manage that much, Ernestine, with good luck and good management."

"Oh, Will," she said to him, "I almost wish it would be hard like that again. I've been so lonely—longing to help you, feeling outside. What does the car and the house and the things mean if I'm cut off from you? I know I can't help you with your painting. I know that travail is yours—that's your work—your life. It must be first with you, Will. And that's right. Gifted people can't choose. But if your work must be first, to you, you can understand what love and marriage mean to me. That's my life. And if I can feel that you can go on—because I understand—"

They were both crying, his arms were around her—tight—tight. As their tears mingled and they stood together in the long embrace, the kiss that was free from passion but fraught with tenderness, the purest and holiest feeling, true married love, welled over them. It seemed to Ernestine, straining so in his arms, that for the first time she was truly wife to Will. Not only bride, bride of his body, star of his imagination, object of romantic adoration, not only the mother of his children and the keeper of his house, but wife—wife—in the deep places, the secret places of love.

"Ernestine," he whispered, after a little, and she wept afresh to hear her name so on his lips as he had whispered it when first they loved, "forgive me—that I didn't understand, that I didn't confide in you. You seemed always to have a child in your arms, a thousand needs. I felt that this other was a foe to you. I was stupid, blind. I thought you wanted the money—needed it. You were hard with me that summer before I made the cats. I didn't want to go back to that bad time again. I didn't know how wonderful you are. You're my good luck—you always were. I'll never forget it again. Oh, Ernestine, I'll do big things for you—I will."

A clock somewhere boomed two, and Ernestine started in his arms. She had remembered Loring—at last. She withdrew herself from her husband's arms and made a gesture of helplessness.

"But here's this business of Loring," she said.

"What is it about Loring?" he asked, watching her.

So with the enchantment, the throb, of love still on her, she told him about Loring—about all that Pastano had said to her that morning.

"But of course," he said at once, "you must let me take the money for you—at once. Give me the slip of paper."

She gave it to him with a reluctant sigh, and he gave a whistle as he looked at it.

"How could you have refused Pastano?" he asked. "Think what it would mean to your family—to your mother. And Lillian—with Loring dragged through the mud—"

"But Will! The money's yours—it's what we've just been talking about. It's your chance."

"I don't need twenty thousand dollars," he said quickly, and then gave a laugh of pure happiness. "Why, Ernestine," he said, "if you understand—if you know what it's all about—if you can live that economically and if you're behind me, I'll take a chance on it. Give the money for Loring—we can wangle it. After all," he added more seriously, "the understanding—the way I feel now—is worth more than the money. Let Loring have the money, we're rich. When we were young and poor we did as we liked. But after we got a little money we weren't free agents any more. The big income restricted us more than the little one. Look how Loring was bound by money! Let's let it go. After all, only beggars can choose!"

"If you'll quit the paper and go ahead with this work, if you will stick to your own dreams, I'll gamble with you," she said.

"It's done," he answered. He reached for his coat and hat, and looked at his watch at the same moment.

"We'll have to go right back to the bank. Thank God, you've got the money and don't begrudge it. Nothing can stop us, now."

And before they went out into the dark and narrow hall, they kissed again, hand in hand, simply, like children pledging a secret.

Ernestine saw Ruby Pastano near the bank entrance and, though he bowed formally and did not speak, he gave her a flashing, radiant glance, like the flash of a mirror held in the sun. She knew that he understood, from the happy countenance and from Will at her side, that they were looking after Loring.

Demand for Dwarfs Met by Inhuman Exploiters

Dwarfs were the lapdogs of mediaeval times. And so popular were they that many merchants specialized in selling them to the nobility.

"Marc Antony owned a dwarf," writes M. R. Werner in Liberty, whom he called, ironically, Sisyphus. In Rome there were dwarf merchants who, when they could not obtain natural specimens for the emperors and nobles, manufactured dwarfs by undernourishing normal babies, or by binding their limbs to prevent full development.

"Tiberius, Domitian and Heliogabulus paid high prices to their dwarf merchants, who experimented constantly to supply the demand. Catherine de Medici, in order to secure a regular supply of dwarfs for her court and as presents for her friends, caused all the dwarfs of her establishment to be married in a large scale effort to produce a race of midgets. The marriages, however, were uniformly barren, and her majesty was sadly disappointed."

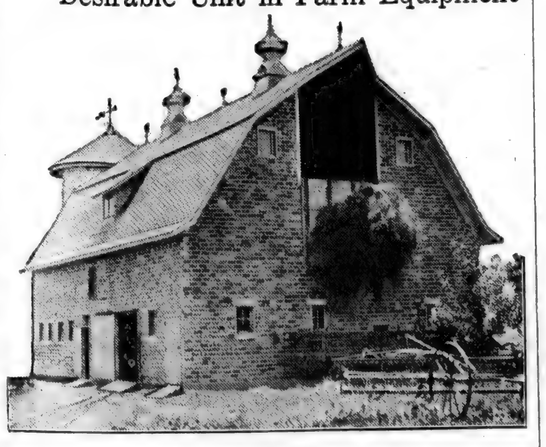
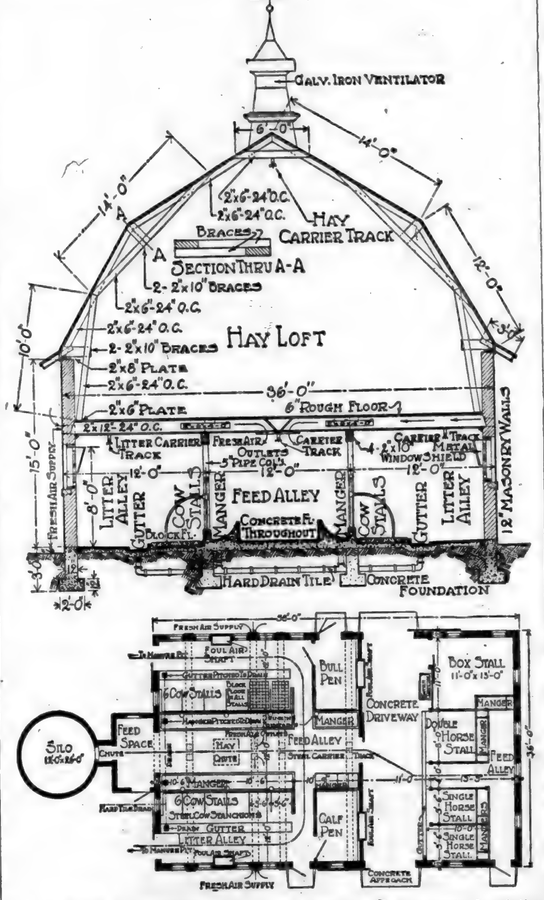
Combination Horse and Cow Barn Desirable Unit in Farm Equipment





By W. A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as editor, author and manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 407 South Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

While horses are constantly growing fewer on American farms, there are still a great many farmers who use this type of power instead of the tractor and mechanical power. Horses, in order to be available for the heavy work a farm requires, must be housed comfortably, fed well, and cared for. Horse barns for horses alone are unusual. Most barns are designed so that the stable floor will house both the dairy herd and horses. But in order to do so the two stables must be divided by a solid wall to conform with the requirements of state health departments which control the conditions under which milk, which is to be sold, must be produced.

Shown in the accompanying illustration is a gambrel type combination horse and cow barn. This is a brick building set on a concrete foundation and is equipped with the modern conveniences which make handling of dairy cows and horses labor saving and economical. The floor plans reproduced herewith show how the stable is divided and the arrangement of the stalls, etc. A silo at one end is connected with the barn by a feed room which in turn is connected with both the dairy and horse stables by an overhead carrier track which makes the transportation of silage to the mangers simple. The dairy stable is equipped with steel stall partitions, water drinking cups, and a system of suction ventilation which constantly changes the air in the stable without drafts on the animals. In the horse section of the stables there are seen stalls for the horses, two singles and a double stall. In one corner is a large box stall. Together with the floor plans of the barn is shown a cross-section of the building showing a great many details of construction and the sizes of the various pieces of lumber used in constructing the building. There is also a cross-section of the concrete floor which shows the dimensions of the footing and also the contour of the floor for the manger stalls.

Comfort Comes First in Planning New Home

Those pleasing personal touches, mulled over and debated by husband and wife for years before the home is built, add much to the joys of planning, building and living in your own home. Nothing warms the heart of the householder more than the things that stamp his home as his own creation, making it more than a place to eat and sleep and hang up his hat.

But home builders should avoid yielding too much to the lure of original ideas because sometimes houses that embody ideas the owners think original and highly valuable may be considered freakish and useless by other people. The possibility that you may some day wish to sell should be kept always in mind.

Thinking of this, you will give first consideration to good materials, sound walls and roof, an adequate heating plant and efficient insulation to insure your family's comfort summer and winter and to keep down fuel bills in years to come. In the long run, comfort comes before beauty. It is the ideal home that achieves both.

Weather Strip Keeps Out Cold; Saves Fuel

Weather stripping installed in a home will more than pay for itself in one or two seasons. In fact, it will effect a decided saving of the coal pile, and will make a noticeable dent in the size of the coal bill.

This protection can be had in a number of different varieties. First there is the felt variety that fits into the window frames. Second there is the felt and wood strip combination that is nailed along a window or door. The latter type can be installed by the home owner himself. The third, and perhaps the most modern, is the metal weather strip. This is much like the wood variety only, the manufacturers say, will last longer.

Physicians point out that most of the colds we contract come either from overheated homes or drafts. Weather stripping properly installed will make a home comfortable and safe from drafts. While it cannot entirely take the place of storm sash, it eliminates the use of these extra windows in less exposed parts of the house.

Would you call this a hint?

BEFORE secret suffering breaks out in open revolt—before the little home is irretrievably shattered by a husband's strong pipe—can't something be done? Certainly. A new pipe will help, or even an old pipe cleaned and filled with Sir Walter Raleigh's favorite smoking mixture. It really is milder, with no sacrifice of richness and fragrance. It really is as popular with the smoked-at as it is with the smoker.

CHRISTMAS CLUB DISTRIBUTION SOON

Six hundred and thirty-two million dollars will be distributed to about eleven million members of the CHRISTMAS CLUB by more than 8000 banking institutions and organizations within the next two weeks according to an estimate given out yesterday by Herbert F. Rawll, president of CHRISTMAS CLUB, a division of National Bancservire Corporation at New York.

While this is a record distribution, the increase over last year is less than the normal annual increase. The average amount received by each member is $54.60—while this same figure stood at $59.50 in 1929. While several institutions in many sections of the country report an actual increase over last year, curtailed payrolls in industrial centers have occasioned a small reduction in the general average for the entire ocuntry.

The lower average accumulation, however, is more than offset, in the total figure, by an increase in the number of members made possible by a larger number of banking institutions offering this form of service.

While regular savings in permanent accounts in American Banks have increased materially during 1930 over 1929, the same contributing factors have not been felt in CHRISTMAS CLUB activities.

The upward movement in savings acounts which started in the early part of the year is a reflection of a movement toward the old fashioned method of thrift as against the orgy of 1928–29 speculation. Large sums, too, have been attracted to permanent savings within the past few months from the funds of individuals and corporations seeking a more attractive yield than is available in the securities market.

Membership in the 1930 CHRISTMAS CLUB closed for enrollment last January before this new cycle got under way and the weekly installment savings plan offered by the CHRISTMAS CLUB reflects current earnings which have suffered a set back in many manufacturing districts.

Eliminating the few special funds, which, in some cases run as high as $25,000.00—checks to individual members range from $25.00 to $1000.00—and represent weekly accumulations over the past fifty weeks.

In a survey just completed, supporting the estimate for this year, bankers uniformly express the opinion that the CHRISTMAS CLUB has made an excellent showing in view of present employment and wage conditions and gives ample proof of the stability of the CHRISTMAS CLUB and its contributions to economic development and to stabilizing business activities in the pre-holiday season.

The survey shows, too, an increased tendency to favor instalment savings to replace instalment buying.

Instalment selling has found a permanent place in the merchandising program of American industry but there is rapidly developing a keener consciousness on the value of instalment savings, offered by the CHRISTMAS CLUB, and the resulting economics made possible by purchases for cash.

Commitments for constructive purchases out of future fixed earnings will always consume an important part of American products but one of the happy results, of this readjustment period of 1930, now being made apparent, is the evidence of a closer scrutiny of the usefulness and necessity of instalment commitments and budgeting these total obligations at a conservative level below total earnings.

In step with this movement, bankers predict a greater field for the CHRISTMAS CLUB in 1931 and following years, as offering a convenient and easy method of accumulating funds for many necessary expenditures other than normal holiday requirements.

The inception of the CHRISTMAS CLUB idea, twenty years ago, anticipated the need of providing an easy, simple and practical method of systematically accumulating funds for the specific purpose of Chirstmas needs. Its sponsors, however, in the creation of the plan, were mindful of the opportunity it would bring to wage earners of regular habits of thrift in encouraging small weekly deposits for permanent investment and constructive uses.

On a basis of a direct-by-mail inquiry to individual CHRISTMAS CLUB members, it is estimated by Mr. Rawll that more than $10,000,000 permanent savings accounts, directly traceable to club membership, have been brought to banking institutions since the inception of the plan twenty years ago, and that 62 per cent of the $632,000,000.00 to be released within the next two weeks is applied to useful purposes.

Using this inquiry as a basis and adjusting the figures to the total membership, the funds of the 1930 CHRISTMAS CLUB will be used as follows:

Christmas purchases, 38%.
Permanent Savings and Investments, 30%.
Year End Commitments, 13%.
Insurance Premiums, 6%.
Mortgage and Mortgage Interest, 5½%.
Taxes, 4½%.
Education, Travel and Charity, 3%.

New York State leads the other States with $138,650,000.00; Massachussetts shows the largest per capita State total with over $70,000,000.00; while Pennsylvania reports about $72,000,000.00. Chicago and Cook County contribute about $26,000,000.00 of the Illinois total of over $60,000,000.00. New York City's metropolitan area, including a radius of 40 miles will receive approximately $95,000,000.00

FINANCIAL STATISTICS OF THE STATE GOVERNMENT OF INDIANA FOR 1929

Washington, D. C., December 4, 1930.—The Department of Commerce announces a summary of the financial statistics of the State of Indiana for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1929. The per capita figures for 1929 are based on an estimated population of 3,198,500. These statistics were compiled by Mrs. Lucy C. Johnson, for State Auditor, Indianapolis.

Expenditures

The payments for operation and maintenance of the general departments of Indiana amounted to $29,445,094, or $9.21 per capita. This includes $5,203,645, apportionments for education to the minor divisions of the State. In 1928 the comparative per capita for operation and maintenance of general departments was $8.76, and in 1917, $4.28. The interest on debt in 1929 amounted to $99,559; and outlays for permanent improvements, $19,641,088. The total payments, therefore, for operation and maintenance of general departments interest, and outlays were $49,185,741. Of this amount $136,534 represents payments by a State department or enterprise to another on account of services. The totals include all payments for the year, whether made from current revenues or from the proceeds of bond issues.

Of the governmental costs reported above, $23,296,538 was for highways, $8,113,553 being for maintenance and $15,182,985 for construction.

Revenues

The total revenue receipts were $48,882,164, or $15.28 per capita. This was $19,337,511 more than the total payments of the year, exclusive of the payments for permanent improvements, but $303,577 less than the total payments including those for permanent improvements. These payments in excess of revenue receipts were met from the proceeds of debt obligations. Of the total revenue receipts $136,534 represents receipts from a State department or enterprise on account of services. Property and special taxes represented 27.6 per cent of the total revenue for 1929, 30.2 per cent for 1928, and 61.1 per cent for 1917. The increase in the amount of property and special taxes collected as 52.1 per cent from 1917 to 1928, but there was a slight decrease from 1928 to 1929. The per capita property and special taxes were $4.22 in 1929, and $4.26 in 1928, and $3.10 in 1917.

Earnings of general departments, or compensations for services rendered by State officials, represented 10.2 per cent of the total revenue for 1929, 10.5 per cent for 1928, and 11.9 per cent for 1917.

Business and nonbusiness licenses constituted 46.8 per cent of the total revenue for 1929, 42.2 for 1928, and 13.7 per cent for 1917.

Receipts from business licenses consist chiefly of taxes exacted from insurance and other incorporated companies, those imposed upon commercial vehicles, and of sales tax on gasoline, while those from nonbusiness licenses comprise chiefly taxes on noncommercial motor vehicles and amounts paid for hunting and fishing privileges. The sales tax on gasoline amounted to $14,033,711 in 1929, and $10,949,805 in 1928, an increase of 28.2 per cent.

Indebtedness

The total funded or fixed debt outstanding September 30, 1929 was $2,411,000.

The net indebtedness (funded or fixed debt less sinking fund assets) was $2,366,730, or $0.74 per capita. In 1928 the per capita net debt was $0.65 and in 1917 $0.06.

Assessed Valuations and Tax Levies

The assessed valuation of property in Indiana subject to ad valorem taxation was $5,166,896,475; the amount of State taxes levied was $14,984,000; and the per capita levy, $4.68. In 1928 the per capita levy was $3.71, and in 1917, $2.63.

Thanksgiving Day guests in the J. C. Hull home were, Mr. and Mrs. M. A. Hull of Helena, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Quance and son, Richard of Ft. Wayne, Fred Quance and Wayne Quance of Auburn and F. B. Leighty and wife.

Mr. and Mrs. Glen Wineland, Mrs. Patrice Koch and children of Holgate, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Derwood Ridgway and children, Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Dorsey and Mr. and Mrs. Glen Freeburn and family were Thanksgiving Day dinner guests in the John Wineland home. Mrs. Koch and children remained until Sunday to visit with relatives.

First honors in the 1930 corn growing contest, sponsored by the Indiana Corn Growers' Association, went to Karl Pankop of Fairfield Township, DeKalb County, whose yield was 129.6 bushels per acre. The yield was considered exceptional in a year when the average for the state was 27 bushels. It was the fourth highest yield reported since 1914. Charles Clem, of Gibson County, won second place with a yield of 123.7 bushels. C. E. Troyer, of Wabash County, twice international corn king, took third place with a yield of 122.9 bushels to the acre.

Facts For Farm Folks Written by AGRICULTURAL AUTHORITIES

PROF. H.D. MUNROE

PROLAPSE OF THE OVIDUCT

A large percentage of poultry mortality can be traced to the trouble commonly called prolapsus, or inverted oviduct. The causes of this poultry trouble, though not definite, may be due to one or more of the following factors:

1. Pick outs.
2. Weakening of the muscles of the oviduct brought on by the strain of heavy production.
3. An overfat condition of pullets just starting to lay.
4. Constipation due to not enough laxative feeds such as green and succulent feeds or a lack of liquids.
5. Lack of lubricating material in the oviduct brought on by an incomplete ration.
6. Difficulty in laying large eggs.

Even if some trouble does not appear, it is a good plan to prevent it as far as possible by using a liberal supply of succulent green feeds. Such feeds as sprouted oats, cabbage and mangles should be used. Some kind of milk in the ration is important. A dose of some laxative such as epsom salts (1 pound of salts per 400 pounds of poultry) may be needed as often as once a month if no succulent food is available.

At a time of abnormally high production, accompanied by prolapse, it is practical to reduce the proportion of mash consumed. This can be most easily done by increasing the amount of grain. If production is checked severely by any change in feeding the loss from lowered egg production is likely to be greater than the loss of birds from prolapse.

A suggestion worth trying is to reduce the amount of corn to 25 percent of the scratch grain mixture. Such grains as wheat, oats, barley and buckwheat can be added to take the place of corn.

As prolapse appears in a flock, cannibalism is likely to cause heavy losses. Birds are likely to start picking at the vents that show a trace of blood.

Some hens have the habit of staying near the nests and picking those in the act of laying. For this reason it is advisable to keep the nest darkened. Whenever a bird is caught picking another, trim her beak. In bad cases of pick outs it is necessary to trim the whole flock. Often picking in a hen flock can be stopped, as with chicks, by feeding a moist mash once a day made up of ⅔ alfalfa meal and ⅓ laying mash.

Unless hens are kept busy they are likely to start some vice such as cannibalism. Provide plenty of hopper space so that mash is kept before the hens at all times. Feeding green and succulent feeds, moist mash, etc., in small quantities as often as three or four times daily is one more means of keeping them busy. In some cases it may be advisable to allow the hens outdoors in order to stop trouble such as cannibalism.

Will Rogers Says: "Robbery statistics from all cities were shown today (they can show you the statistics, but no robbers.) We go to great length to keep track of what a robber did, but none to find out where he went. There was more "white spots" shown in this report than any that the government has issued. We don't want to be accused of braggin' as usual, but Los Angeles was second, right behind Detroit. We will catch 'em next month if we can only dig up some money to be robbed of. Prohibition hasn't caused this wave of robberies, it's business depression. The poor robbers have to rob more people to make their quota than they used to. 1930 CHRISTMAS SEAL

This is the 1930 Christmas seal. Santa Claus has given it his official approval by uplifting his hand to emphasize the holiday greeting "Merry Christmas—Health to All."

Everybody buys Christmas seals which raise the money to fight tuberculosis, but few know that the original seal designed by Howard Pyle in 1907 is now treasured by stamp collectors and has a value of $5.00, 5000 per cent of the original cost of one cent.

This is the twentyfourth seal sale. Practically all the returns are used in the community where the money is raised. Some of it goes for national purposes, such, for example, as the work of the national committee on medical research, which is conducting laboratory experiments on the nature of the disease process known as tuberculosis.

THE BEST BOOSTER FOR YOUR BUSINESS IN DeKALB COUNTY

ST. JOE NEWS.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV | ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, DEC. 11, 1930 | NUMBER 50

DOINGS OF THE COMMISSIONERS COURT

The county commissioners at their December session, ending Wednesday, approved the bonds of six of the county officials-elect who will take their offices Jan. 1.

All furnished surety bonds, as follows: John P. Hoff, for sheriff, John R. Clark, for corner, Charles E. Miser, for assessor, and Calvin C. Kain, for serveyor $5,000 each; Frank E. Lyon for auditor, $10,000; and Merritt M. Maxwell for treasurer, $25,000.

The board ordered legal notice given that bids will be received January 7 for the following additional equipment for the county highway department, one or more trucks with carrying capacity of not less than 17,000 pounds; one or more hydraulic spring blades; one or more V type snow plows and one or more blade plows.

Notice was ordered given that bids for the construction of the Clidie Philips gravel road in Smithfield township will be received February 4.

The board ordered bonds sold as follows: for the Prosser road in Jackson township, $10,000; Hoodelmier road in Union township, $6,000; and the Abel road in Newville township, $4,000.

Samuel Wyatt was appointed superintendent of the Wm. Staman road in Concord township.

No objections were received to petition of Loy S. Brenneman and others for a gravel road in Smithfield township and the petition was ordered spread of record.

SIMPLE CHRISTMAS DECORATIONS CHEER GUESTS AND PASSERSBY

There is a delightful old-fashioned charm in a home which sends forth a Christmas greeting by means of a few simple decorations. The stranger who sees the lights while passing, and the guest who crosses the threshold, are alike influenced by the unspoken message.

Simplicity should be the keynote to the decorated interior. Whatever is done should fit into the plan of the furnishings, and become a part of them rather than interfere with the everyday use of the rooms. Decorations of this kind can be kept in place through the entire holiday week, and be ready to bid the Old Year goodbye, and welcome the New. The ancient tradition is to keep Christmas adornments up till Twelfth-Night, January 5.

Evergreens, oak leaves, holly, or mistletoe may be found in almost every part of our land. Christmas colors of red and green, with a touch of silver, give beautiful effects. The Christmas tree has won a place in the hearts of us all, for which no other decoration can be substituted but added to the conventional tree, these other simple decorations say only the more heartily: "Merry Christmas!"

BE CAREFUL ABOUT THAT CHRISTMAS FIRE

Alfred Hogston, State Fire Marshal, has issued a Christmas warning.

"Of all the time of year when one should feel free from restraint, the Chirstmas season comes first, still Christmas has a terrible record of unnecessary fires," said Mr. Hogston.

By timely warning to observe a few common-sense rules much can be done to insure safety at this time of the year.

Avoid the use of cotton-wool to imitate snow, cut paper and celluloid ornaments, as well as lighted candles. A tree should not be lighted unless this can be done with carefully wired electric lights. It is dangerous to leave the Christmas greens in the house more than two or three days following Christmas, because when dry they become extremely inflammable. From a fire prevention standpoint this cleaning up after Christmas is one of the most important precautions.

Remember when buying electric toys, only standard makes should be purchased because others are likely to constitute a danger as well as a fire hazard.

With Christmas decorations of all kinds an excellent fireproofing can be made from two pounds of sulphate of ammonia, four pounds chloride of ammonia and three gallons of water. Spray this mixture on the articles to be fireproofed and it will not only make the dye fast, but is not harmful to the skin.

Guard all open fires. Grates and fire-places should have screens. Smokers about to enter crowded stores should first throw away their lighted cigars or cigarettes. In using home motion pictures be sure to use only the slow-burning type of film. These are commonly called non-inflammable films, but the term is not correct.

Above all – be careful. Fire will destroy on Christmas as well as at any other time of year.

LEGAL NOTICE

The Advisory Board of Concord Township will meet at their regular meeting place on Friday, December 19, at 7:30 P M. to consider additional appropriations as follows:

1. To fund No. 22, for sash and glass, etc., for school building, $40.00.

2. To fund No. 24, new desks, $50.00.

3. To fund No. 33, additional transportation and repair of bus body, $310.00.

Taxpayers appearing shall have a right to be heard thereon.

OBITUARY

William Franklin Maxwell, son of Benjamin F., and Catharine (Shroyer) Maxwell, was born in Gladwin County. Michigan. June 25, 1869, and died at his home in DeKalb County, near St. Joe, Indiana, December 2, 1930, aged 61 years, 5 months and 7 days.

The deceased was united in marriage with Cora Ethel Oberholtzer February 25, 1890. To this union three sons were born, all of whom are living: Roy E. and Merritt M. of St. Joe, Indiana, and Willard G. living at home with his parents. There are also five grandchildren living in St. Joe, with their parents.

In the original Maxwell family there were twelve children, three of whom survive: Elmer Maxwell, of Bend, Oregon, Harry Maxwell and Mrs. Lennie Miller, of Joliet, Illinois.

Mr. Maxwell's mother died when he was five years old. His father then took him to Shelby County, Ohio, where he lived for a short time with Henry Shroyer, his uncle. He was then brought to DeKalb County, Indiana, and was at home with Thomas Shroyer, another uncle where he grew to manhood. Since coming to Indiana he has lived continuously in DeKalb County except when his trade called him to other places. His home for the past thirty-four years has been on the farm where he died.

Mr. Maxwell has been a member of the Church of Christ for about twenty-four years, having made the confession and received baptism in St. Joe, and shortly afterward placed his membership with the Coburn's Corners Church of Christ where he has continued in full fellowship until his death. He was suprintendent of the Bible School for about two years, and served the church officially for a long period being one of the elders when he died.

The deceased followed carpentry as a vocation, and many buildings throughout the community bear witness of his hard work and handicraft.

Mr. Maxwell was a splendid family man and a good neighbor. His loss to the community is secondary only to that sustained by the family circle, wherein the widow, the three sons and their families survive and bear their sorrows together. Mr. Maxwell's ambition was never tied down alone to his trade. Wherever there was opportunity for profitable employment he embraced it gladly. He was always ready when labor was needed in the community where no compensation could be had. He did a manly part of the heavy burden of toil that fell to the lot of older citizens during the World War. His neighborliness was always highly commendable and never lacking.

Mr. Maxwell's high standard of honor will now be recalled by those who knew him well. He did not boast of honesty, he loved it. You could read it from his every day acts and general business. Integrity of purpose to a very high degree actuated all his dealings and social activities. In this particular his life and conduct was exemplary, and should make his memory a blessing to the community in which he lived and worked.

The funeral was held on last Thursday afternoon at 1 o'clock from the Church at Coburn's Corners. Rev. Fred Thomas officiating assisted by Rev. J. N. Scholes. Burial was made in the Alton cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to take this means of expressing our thanks and deepest gratitude to all who assisted and comforted us during our recent sorrow.

ST. JOE VALLEY BANK DISTRIBUTES CHECKS

Tuesday morning the St. Joe Valley Bank mailed the checks to all those who have been depositing their money on Christmas Savings Accounts during the past year.

Thirty-nine checks were distributed ranging from $12.50 to $200.00 with a total amount distributed of $1,400.00.

Every December, when one looks at the year ahead. it looks as if it will be a hard thing to save a little each week and that it is a long time until next Christmas. The year looks shorter and the labor easier after it is passed and it swiftly passes.

Those who have not taken out a Christmas Saving account should talk to some one who has. He will soon convince you that it is the right thing. See your banker at once and get one of those checks a year from now.

Parents would do well to start their children on the road to thrift by teaching them this splendid plan of saving instead of spending every penny they get.

The fruiting spur of the apple may bear year after year.

The stock market experts agree that if prices don't go up, they will go down, and if they don't go down, they will go up.

Between fifty and sixty members of the News–Sentinel Boys Band of Fort Wayne, were present and rendered a very delightful musical program to a good sized audience at the gymnasium last Thursday evening. It was a demonstration of what can be accompilshed in the way of musical training with boys, and the program reflected due credit to the instructor. Besides the band, the program was made up of a piano solo, cornet duets and solos. The boys were brought to St. Joe by local autos and at the close of the program they were all treated to a lunch in the domestic science room.

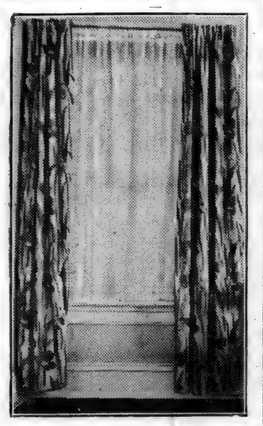
KIND OF CURTAIN FOR BEDROOM WINDOWS

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

How shall one curtain the bedroom with best effect? Shall we use glass curtains only, or glass curtains with side draperies, or colonial tie-back curtains, or draw curtains of heavier fabric? Much depends, of course, on the character of the room and the taste of the occupant in other furnishings. The curtains at the windows must complete the other articles in the room, as it were, by harmonizing or contrasting pleasantly with them, or by centering attention on the windows as decorative features.

A bedroom in an apartment may require glass curtains for the sake of privacy where cross-over colonial curtains could be used in the bedrooms of a house set back from the road. Many people, however, like a uniform appearance of the windows of a detached house from the outside, and so put the same kind of glass curtains in every room, with the possible exception of the kitchen, at the back. They depend on overdraperies within to express the special characteristics or use of each room.



Figured Bedroom Hangings Against a Plain Wall Finish.

Choice of plain or figured overdraperies for any window is regulated by the background furnished by the walls. If the wallpaper is figured, plain-colored drapery is almost obligatory. Patterned side curtains would result in confusion of lines, design, and colors. But if the walls are tinted or papered in a plain background color, definite patterns and vivid shades may be used for side draperies with good effect, provided the colors chosen are right for the room.

The picture shows a bedroom window treatment planned by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture for a room in an apartment having a plain light tan wallpaper. The glass curtains extend only to the sill, but the side hangings reach almost to the floor, giving height and dignity to a rather small window. The length of the side draperies in this case was governed by the desire to make the window seem longer and the room slightly formal in treatment. The patterned material was also chosen to bring out the window as a point of interest, and to make a contrast with the plain walls. Sometimes the choice of longer or shorter side curtains is governed by the prevailing style among decorators, but more often it is decided by the needs of a particular room and the likes of the individual. If there had been a radiator under the window in this case it would have been advisable to use draperies extending to the apron edge only.

There is no valance, as a line crossing the window would have cut off some of the desired height. The glass curtains of natural theatrical gauze, which match the background of the drapery, are shirred on a rod with small heading. The side draperies are of good quality, fast-colored cretonne, unlined, and finished with an invisible handsewn hem. They are laid in french pleats and attached to rings which enable them to be drawn across the window on the outer pole.

Hot House Lambs Are a Tasty Dish

Lamb is in season all the year round, and in most sensons is very reasonable in price, despite the opinion of those who think only of legs and chops.

Of course, "hot house" lambs, supplied through the winter from as early as Christmas, are a luxury, for much care and expense is required in producing them.

"Easter" lambs come next, and in this season the term "genuine" is in use, to differentiate between real lambs and small yearlings which might pass as lambs.

The lamb carcass is entirely made up of tender cuts, so the inexpensive cuts can be made into delicious dishes without difficulty: Saratoga chops, saratoga noisettes, stuffed breast, lamb pie, etc.—The Farm Journal.

Indicates Oven's Heat

To judge of an oven's heat, try the oven every ten minutes with a piece of white paper. If too hot, the paper will blaze up or blacken. When the paper becomes dark brown, darker than ordinary meat, the oven is fit for small pastry. When light brown, the color of nice pastry, it is ready for tarts. When the paper turns dark yellow you can bake bread, large meat pies, or pound cakes. If it is just tinged, the oven is fit for sponge cake and meringue.

Many Bridges Over Seine

Paris has built 32 bridges over the Seine river, which winds for seven miles through the French capital.

WHITE, BLACK FELT HATS LIKED

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

No matter how many new hats in your winter wardrobe, you will be wanting to add to your collection at least one of the sprightly white felts trimmed with a touch of black. Latest whim of fashion, these little white felts with their perky wee bows of black fur or black ribbon, or a dashing little black feather.

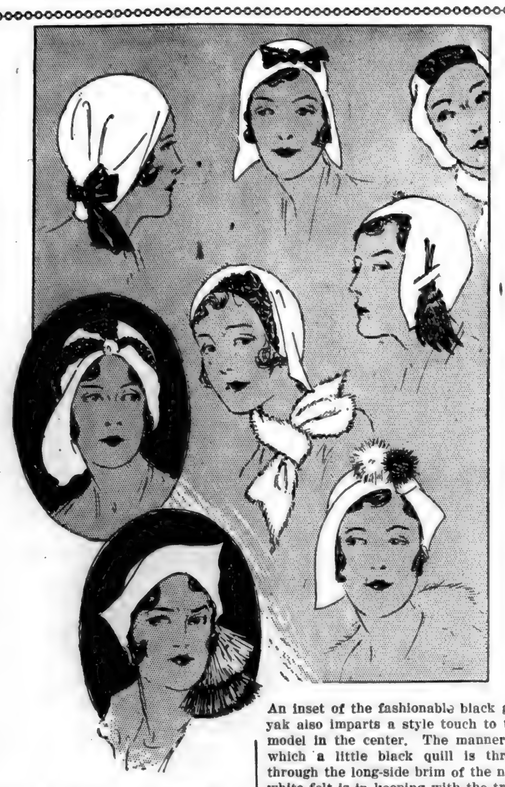
It is not that the white felt hat itself is so unusual but the fact of wearing it in late fall or midwinter gives it a new accent. With the smart daytime black crepe frock trimmed with white, fashion says to wear a white felt hat and be modern.

The white felt hat worn with a neckpiece and muff of flat white fur, no need to tell of its chic and its charm, such an ensemble speaks for itself. Of course a swatch of the white fur must appear on the white felt hat. For that matter the hat itself may be made all of thin fur, for hat, scarf and muff sets of white fur are ever so "classy." There should be a note of black somewhere, however, perhaps a black velvet bow here and there or black fabric-like fur made up with white fur.

The theme of the white felt hat becomes all the more arresting in that it features the very latest shapes such as for instance the tricorne and similar types whose brims rise upright from the forehead like the smart model in the oval below in the picture. Its black-and-white feather trim at one side gives it a dashing style, such as indicates a new trend.

In the other oval is a white felt which boasts the unbalanced brim silhouette about which we are hearing and seeing so much this season. Insets of black galyak fur give it an air of distinction.

The other hats sketched are individualized with novel trimming touches in black. At the top to the left black velvet ribbon ties effectively at the back of a bonnet-like shape styled of white felt which is as soft as a handkerchief. The next hat toward the right looks "nifty" because of its cunning little bow of black galyak. Peeking around the corner is another of the most recent shapes whose brim turns abruptly up. A section of this brim is of black fur.



An inset of the fashionable black galyak also imparts a style touch to the model in the center. The manner in which a little black quill is thrust through the long-side brim of the next white felt is in keeping with the trimming trend reflected in daily arriving models from Paris. The little pom poms of black and of white angora perched at the brim edge of the last hat in the group express a late note.

EVENING STORY FOR CHILDREN

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

The whippoorwills love the nighttime, and one evening a boy thought he would like to catch a whippoorwill and have him for a pet.

He loved the wonderful song of the whippoorwill, which is a beautiful, rather sad note.

The whippoorwills only sing when away from people, and they love to be by themselves.

That is why they choose their homes away in the woods, away from people.

At first the boy heard the whippoorwills singing their sad, lovely note over and over again.

Then he tried to catch them, but they fly off so silently always that he could not do that.

In the daytime, of course, he could not have found them, because they were almost always asleep then.

Besides their wings are the color of rocks and they are difficult to see.

But one night he caught Mr. Whippoorwill.

"Ah," he said, "I will be very good to you. You may have a large place in which to live, for I have made it with wire in the yard all ready for you.

They Were Singing.

"I will not keep you in a cage. That would be cruel."

The boy had not thought that it would be cruel to keep the whippoorwill anyway—the bird who loves solitude or being alone.

At night he listened to hear his whippoorwill sing, but never a sound did he make.

Then he thought it was because Mr. Whippoorwill was without his mate, and after a long time he caught Mrs. Whippoorwill.

Now he would surely have the glorious whippoorwill singing every evening—so he thought.

But not a sound did he hear. In fact they seemed to have forgotten their note.

They had left it behind in the woods!

You see, the whippoorwill will not sing in captivity. He is utterly miserable then, and he longs to be back where he can be alone.

Then, at night, when it is quiet and dark, we can sometimes hear his glorious note.

The boy did not know what to make of it, but at last he let them go.

Oh, the joy of spreading their wings in the direction of the dark woods!

How wonderful it was! And to see the whippoorwill children! And to feel the dark, cool woods, to sleep all day, to work all night.

For the whippoorwills do a great deal of good work. They catch bad insects when they are flying.

The whippoorwills enjoy eating the insects for breakfast and dinner, and they do away with insects which would otherwise injure shrubs and trees.

"Ah," said Mr. Whippoorwill, when he was back in the woods, "I must see if I can find my note. I left it in the woods behind me."

"So did I," said Mrs. Whippoorwill.

They found their notes! They were singing their lovely song now.

And the boy heard them.

He realized he had made a mistake. How thankful he was that he had let them go.

FOOD FOR THE FAMILY TABLE

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The delicious cinnamon or pecan roll which may be made with one base is a most delicious bread to serve on many occasions.

Cinnamon Rolls.—Take one cupful of scalded milk, add two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one-half teaspoonful of salt, four tablespoonfuls of shortening to the hot milk. Cool until lukewarm and add an yeast cake softened in one-fourth cupful of warm water. Mix with sufficient flour to handle and knead thoroughly, then allow the bread to rise until treble its bulk. Cut down and fold and let rise again. When light roll into a sheet one-half inch in thickness and spread with melted butter, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon. Roll like a jelly roll and slice into one-inch slices. Place in a baking pan and allow to rise again. Bake in a hot oven twenty minutes.

For the pecan rolls place a generous portion of butter and brown sugar with a half cupful of pecans in the bottom of the pan. Place the rolls and bake when light. Turn upside down and serve.

Spiced Hot Cross Buns.—Prepare the above mixture, make the rolls into rounds after adding one-half cupful of currants or a mixture of currants and raisins, a teaspoonful of cinnamon and one-half teaspoonful of allspice. Cut a cross on the top of each with a sharp knife just before baking.

Spice Cake.—Sift two and one-half cupfuls of pastry flour with one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of baking powder, one-fourth teaspoonful each of allspice, nutmeg, mace and one-half teaspoonful of cinnamon. Sift three times. Cream one-half cupful of butter, add two cupfuls of sifted brown sugar and cream together until light and fluffy. Add two eggs well beaten and the flour mixture alternately with one cupful of sour milk. Beat well after each addition and bake in a greased tin eight by eight inches. Bake fifty minutes.

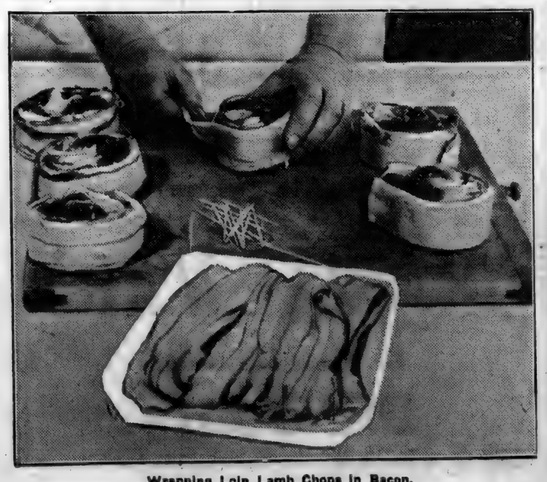
Lamb Chops, Rolled in Bacon, Tasty



Wrapping Loin Lamb Chops in Bacon.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Whether single or double, from loin, ribs or shoulder, always have lamb chops cut uniformly thick, and the fell removed. Double chops are often featured by "chop houses" and grills because they can be cooked to a tender juiciness without drying out. They are especially good broiled over a coal or wood fire, but excellent results may be obtained with the flame of a gas stove, an electric grill, or a heavy skillet.

Double loin chops may be boned, rolled, and wrapped in sliced bacon, suggests the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. They may then be cooked by any preferred method. If a gas oven is used, have the chops two or three inches below a moderate flame. Sear them on both sides. Then lower the flame and continue the cooking at reduced temperature. Turn the chops occasionally, but do not prick the brown crust. Do not let the bacon scorch. It may be found more convenient, after searing the chops under the flame, to transfer the broiler to a moderately hot oven (375 degrees to 400 degrees Fahrenheit) to finish the cooking.

If the chops are to be pan-broiled in a very heavy skillet heated sizzling hot, they may be seared quickly first on both sides and then, with a rack slipped under them, finished in a moderately hot oven. By either method, double loin chops from one and one-half to two inches thick require 25 to 30 minutes. Season with salt, pepper, and butter, and serve on a hot platter the moment they are done to the right turn.

Experiments in growing Turkish tobacco in Canada, near Leamington, Ontario, have proved successful.

Cod Liver Oil Wards Off the Winter Colds

Having plenty of vitamin A in the winter food supply helps to prevent infections of eyes, sinuses, air passages and lungs, according to Miss Ines Hobart, extension specialist in nutrition, University farm, St. Paul, Minn. "It is true," Miss Hobart says, "that the body has ability to store some of vitamin A for future needs, but the demand for it is high during the first cold months. To keep up bodily resistance this fall and winter, everyone needs to keep a generous supply of this "anti-infective" vitamin in their diet.

"Butter, cream, dairy products, eggs, liver, green leafy vegetables and cod liver oil are our richest sources of vitamin A. During the winter when the cows' and chickens' green food supply is so limited the vitamin content in dairy products and eggs is somewhat lowered. It then becomes very essential to increase the supply of green leafy vegetables in the diet and to supplement the diet with daily use of cod liver oil.

"The amount needed depends upon the individual and the vitamin content of the oil. The physician will prescribe the amount for the baby. The usual amount for children over two years, as well as for adults, is one tablespoonful daily."

DAVE HOLDEN chose his homestead high up the foothill valley not only for the shelter of surrounding hills and proximity to groves of spruce and lodge-pole pine. He had another reason for retreating so far from civilization. That reason was Sylvia Palmer.

Dave and Sylvia had been pals together down the plains where both were born. They had attended the same school, the same picnics, dances, country concerts. Many a starry night, with Sylvia at his side, Dave had driven the prairie trails, none too eager to reach their destination. And Sylvia, too, seemed quite content to daily on the way.

It was true there never had been any formal engagement between them. It hardly seemed necessary. They had "gone together" so long that some time, Dave supposed, when he was in a position to offer her a home, he would tell her so, and Sylvia would say, "All right, Dave. Whenever you are ready." Then she would turn her tempting mouth to him, and he would kiss her tenderly and a little differently, now that she was so soon to be his bride.

But Dave had not counted on a woman's will—and what comes of it. At eighteen Sylvia, having secured her teacher's certificate, applied for and was accepted by a town school some distance from her home. She was all enthusiasm and excitement over her plunge into the great, self-supporting world.

Dave may have shared her excitement, but not her enthusiasm. He told her so.

"Why, Dave Holden, I'm surprised at you!" Sylvia retorted. "I thought you would be glad to see me get a chance."

"Of course, I want you to have your chance," he explained, "but I'm figuring on fixing a chance for you, too. Dad is paying me a man's wages now. In another year or two I'll be all set to take up land of my own, and then—"

She waited for him to put something definite into words, but a certain shyness held him back. Anyway, she knew what he meant. She gave his disengaged hand a girlish squeeze.

"That will be fine," she said. "You will make a good farmer, Dave."

"Maybe," he admitted. "And maybe by that time you'll have taken up with one of those town sheiks, and I won't care then whether I go farming, or not."

"Don't you worry over that. I'm not planning on taking up with any town sheik—not with a big boy like Dave Holden running around loose."

But Dave worried, just the same, and by the second term he knew he had occasion for it. Sylvia's talk had turned from crops and country picnics and all things of the land to sport and tennis and particularly one Jack Fulton whose name was often on her lips. Dave had a feeling of being taken at a disadvantage. Instead of wooing Sylvia for himself he bluntly charged her with having transferred her affections to Fulton.

"I ain't blaming you," he said, sarcastically. "No doubt he is a very fine fellow. But if I meet him some day perhaps we'll see which is the best man."

"He's Pretty Strong, Dave," Sylvia Teased. "Better Be Careful."

"He's pretty strong, Dave," Sylvia teased. "Better be careful."

Whereupon Dave lost his temper altogether. "Maybe I should be careful, and maybe you should be careful, too. What I'm saying is, either you give him up, or I'm through!"

That was too much for the spirited Sylvia. Whether or not she cared for Jack Fulton, she wasn't going to take orders about it from Dave. Dave never had actually asked her to marry him, although she had given him opportunity enough.

"All right; you're through!" she said, and whisked herself out of his presence.

Dave had not expected that result, but he had gone too far to retreat. He had though that Sylvia would bow to his ultimatum. Her curt rejection hurt his pride more than anything he had thought possible. He felt that he had suddenly lost all faith in human nature, and that life among his old associates would be intolerable. So he drew his wages, gathered up his equipment, and trekked into the foothill country to the very farthest homestead on the map.

He found a place by a mountain stream, cut down spruce logs, and built himself a cabin. When winter set in he began cutting posts and rails for fencing on his farm. To keep from thinking he worked feverishly, early and late. But thoughts would come, in spite of all he could do to stop them. Particularly as the Christmas season drew near his mind would turn to the old farm down on the plains. What ample preparations would be going on in his mother's kitchen! What stacks of food! What happy chatter, sobered a bit perhaps because of the boy who had left home in a huff and never had written back! And Sylvia! Sylvia would be home now for the Christmas vacation. Perhaps this Fulton fellow would be visiting with her. . . .

Dave turned with a shrug and shoved more wood into his rusty stove.

"I am Jack Fulton," He Said. "Perhaps You Have Heard of Me?"

After all, he told himself, he was not so badly off. He had a cabin and plenty of fuel. He had a dog, and a gun, a team of horses, half a dozen yearling calves. . . .

He was taking comfort in such thoughts when suddenly his dog sprang up, barking. Dave was on his feet in an instant, his gun in his hand. Perhaps a deer or a bear had wandered into his little clearing.

At that moment came a knock, something which never before had happened on his cabin door. For an instant Dave hesitated, then swung the door open. The light fell on the figure of a young man.

"Are you Dave Holden?" the stranger inquired.

"Yes. Come in."

The stranger entered. Dave made him comfortable and gave him supper, waiting to hear his mission.

When they were seated on either side of the hot stove the stranger began. "I am Jack Fulton," he said. "Perhaps you have heard of me?"

Dave's veins seemed to freeze. "What brings you here?" he demanded. "Can't you leave me alone?"

Fulton kept his temper. "No, not under the circumstances. Let me tell you—I will be brief. I am the principal of the school where Miss Palmer teaches. All through the term I have seen she was worried. At last I asked her why. Naturally she was diffident at first, but finally told me. She is wearing her heart out for you."

Dave faced him. "Is this true, and why do you tell me? I thought—"

"Because I am to be married to a little girl of my own at Easter, and I think I know how both of you feel. So I got your location from the homestead officials, and took my Christmas vacation to look you up. I hope you are not annoyed by my interest?"

Dave seized his hand. "And I thought all the time—"

"Never mind what you thought! I've walked in from the nearest rancher's. If you have a team that can travel you can make the railway station by morning, and eat your Christmas turkey at Sylvia Palmer's. I'll stay and look after your cattle. It will be a real holiday for me."

But Dave had both his hands in his. "My friend! I don't know what I can say—"

"Say it to Sylvia! I'll give you six days to get back. And bring her with you, or I'll charge you for my time!"

"I'll bring her with me—or you can keep the farm," said Dave, who was already climbing into his heavy overcoat.

FEEDING CHOICE CATTLE IS BEST

Buy Fewer and Keep Them Couple Months Longer.

If you prefer to feed choice grades of cattle, why not buy fewer of them and feed them a couple of months longer?

This is a question that Paul Gerlaugh, chief of animal industry at the Ohio agricultural experiment station, puts to farmers who query him about the relative advantages of feeding lower grades and choice grades of cattle.

Don't make the mistake of buying the grade that is selling to best advantage when you purchase your feeders, says Gerlaugh. During the summer and fall months well-finished, corn-fed cattle usually sell at a relatively high market price, when compared with grass or feeder cattle from the range.

But by winter, he continues, the runs of grass cattle almost disappear, and the number of cattle coming from corn-belt feed lots increases, until by spring the plainer grades of cattle are found selling dangerously near to the price of choice grades. The lower grades of fat cattle invariably show more margin for the feeder during the winter feeding season than do the choice grades, although they handle feed less efficiently.

The summer market is generally higher than the spring market for fat cattle, and a longer feeding period is required to bring out the good qualities of choice grades of cattle.

Because of these market trends and feeding facts, Gerlaugh suggests that choice grades of cattle be fed longer, to carry them over into the period of higher prices in the summer and fall, rather than feed lower grades and sell them on a glutted spring market.

Stockmen Probably Save Through Feeding Wheat

Nevada sheep and cattlemen may be able to save some money this year by the purchase of wheat instead of corn for emergency winter feed.

This is the opinion of Prof. V. E. Scott, agricultural economist of the Nevada agricultural extension service, following an analysis by him of the comparative feed value and cost of the two grains.

If wheat is used, he states, it should be purchased in carlots and must be fed the animals in troughs.

Research has shown, according to Scott, that wheat has a greater feeding value than corn. Since corn weighs 56 pounds a bushel, he says, and wheat weighs 60 pounds, a bushel of wheat, even at the same feeding value, is worth more than a bushel of corn.

"Experiments carried on by the United States Department of Agriculture," Scott states, "have revealed that when corn is worth $1 a bushel, wheat is worth $1.07 when fed to poultry and sheep, and $1.12 when fed to hogs and cattle."

Cattle Should Have All Oats They Will Clean Up

Cattle should have all of the oats they will clean up good in two feeds per day, after being gradually worked up to a full feed in about four weeks' time, and should have about one pound of linseed oilmeal per head per day. This can be fed right from the beginning. By feeding your steers oats in this way for a period of five to six months, especially if you have enough hay of fair quality to use along with the oats, you should have your cattle in pretty fat condition, fat enough to just about suit the packer buyers when they reach market.

Wheat, properly handled and prepared, is a suitable feed for practically all classes of live stock. Except for chickens, it must be rolled, crushed or ground before being fed.

Hunter Uses Airplane to "Run Down" Coyotes

Hunting coyotes by airplane, an unusual adventure in Montana even in good weather, was introduced to stockmen of the snowbound regions last winter by Charles McGuire, Highwood rancher and aviator. When deep snows made hunting impossible, McGuire equipped his plane with skis in order that he might continue hunting predatory animals and save losses to his herds. The skis, six feet long and eighteen inches wide, were designed and made by McGuire. With them he is able to soar over the wilderness, confident of his ability to land on the open range if his motor fails him. The skis have alleviated the necessity of clearing snow from his landing field at Highwood.

Unkind Reflection on One Highbrow Novelist

Harold Bell Wright, one of America's most popular novelists, said on a visit to New York:

"The highbrow novelist gets wonderful reviews, but his books only sell a thousand or two.

"A highbrow novelist was walking on Fifth avenue one day with a manuscript sticking carelessly out of his pocket. A publisher who had lost money on a couple of the man's novels saw him from his car, pulled up and said:

"'Scribbles, my dear fellow, there's a big manuscript sticking out of the tail pocket of your good old frock coat. That's very careless of you. Why, man, you might be robbed—if you weren't so well known.'"

FARM WOMAN BENEFITED

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lickdale, Pa.—"Before I was married, my mother and sister and I did all the farming work on a 64-acre farm for eleven years. I married a farmer and now in addition to my housework and the care of my children I help him with the outside work on our farm. After my last child was born, I began to suffer as many women do. Finally our family doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did and now I am a new woman and I know that good health is better than riches."—Mrs. Clyde I. Growing Old, and Christmas

by Noni Clack Bailey

MARTHA WHITESIDE had come from a family proud of its Pilgrim ancestry. The women had always been good-natured, well read, but prim.

Because of Dolly, Martha, who was widowed early, had drifted into journalism. Dolly grew up, married Fred Howard and moved away. Martha loved her, missed her; but was too busy to consider changed conditions or passing time.

Then on Christmas eve came a letter. Martha sat alone in her apartment reading it. The stork had come! She arose hastily and went to the mirror to see how she looked—being a grandmother. Reflected she saw youth and grace. But—she had hardly realized it—her hair was white!

A grandmother! Faintly there came a vision of her own grandmother. A dainty little woman she was, in black with a snow-white apron tied about her slender waist. Around her shoulders was a soft mull fichu. A little lace cap adorned her silver curls. It was a bit old-fashioned, she knew. Most other women, Martha remembered, had quit wearing caps and fichus; but somehow they seemed just right for the quaint little grandmother who seemed always giving one cookies.

Martha laughed, a rather startled laugh; for she suddenly realized—"Why, I'm as old as she was then!" A puzzled look came into her eyes. The puritan Martha was saying: "It's time to give up your work, don somber clothes and learn to bake cookies." The newspaper woman was answering: "Martha Whiteside, you'll do nothing of the sort. You'll go to the beauty parlor tomorrow morning and get a facial and have your hair bobbed!" The vision looked a little shocked, laughed and disappeared.

Decision and action were one with Martha. The hair was cut in the latest lines. The curls nestled into form like they were happy over her decision. It suited her active bearing, her youthful face and smart ensemble.

In the editorial room the sports editor was passing her desk as she removed her hat. "Hello, Bob-White," he cheerily greeted her, and the sobriquet stuck tight. That's where she got the pen-name for those clever articles she writes. Those who are near her among business associates, friends or family fondly call her "Bob-White."

Again Comes the Dim Vision of Her Grandmother.

It is Christmas, five years since Martha made her decision as to the kind of grandmother she was going to be. Dolly and Fred with their Bobby and Jimmy are spending the day in Martha's apartment. A maid is converting a library table into a very proper one for dining, arranging a marvelous Christmas dinner, just sent up from the caterer's.

The group is gathered about a tinseled tree in the bow window. There are remarkable toys—too many perhaps. Martha, fresh and pretty as ever, is sitting on the floor teaching Bobby how to bark at the miniature kennel and see the radio dog jump out at the sound of his voice. On the soft blanket before the fire Jimmy is gleefully chewing the toe off a rubber clown.

Suddenly Martha looks up at the panel mirror and sees the picture. Again comes the dim vision of her grandmother, smiling happily. Martha laughs back at the vision, then solemnly relates the story. Vividly she paints the word picture of the prim little grandmother and of her puzzled decision. "Was I right?" she asks.

Bobby kicks over his "structo" castle as he throws his arms about her and cries, "My Bob-White's tind o' dramma I want."

Dolly, half tearfully, replies: "It was a pretty picture, mother, but it needs an antique frame; doesn't fit into this apartment at all. Who could want you different? You're glorious!"

The maid announced dinner and Fred, raising a glass of sweet, sparkling cider, suggested a toast "to the most charming of charming grandmothers in memory, poem or song—to the one who laughs off her sorrows—shoulders her share of life and never has time to grow old. Long live your type, my dear, the adorable kind of grandma we can lovingly call 'Bob-White.'"

RUPTURE

E. J. MEINHARDI, of Chicago, the well-known Rupture Shield Expert, is coming here again. He will personally be at the Anthony Hotel, Fort Wayne, Ind., on Monday only, December 15th, from 10:00 A. M. to 5:00 P. M.

SPECIAL NOTICE—All customers that he has fitted here during the last ten years are invited to call for inspection. All others are invited to call and investigate. There is no charge for consultation. Come in and talk with these former customers regarding their experience with this Appliance. This visit is for men only.

Mr. Meinhardi says:

The "Meinhardi Rupture Shield" not only retains the Rupture perfectly, but it also contracts the opening in ten days in the average case, regardless of the size of location of the rupture.

The "Meinhardi Rupture Shield" has no understraps. It is perfectly sanitary, practically indestructible, and may be worn while bathing.

Rupture often causes Stomach Trouble, Backache, Constipation, Nervousness, and other ailments which promptly disappear after the Rupture is properly retained. Thousands of deaths from rupture can be avoided.

Please note the above dates and office hours carefully, as he will not visit any other city in this section at this time. (This visit is for white people only.)— E. J. Meinhardi, Home Office, 1551 N. Crawford Ave., Chicago.

The Vagabond's Christmas

by HELEN GAISFORD

TRAINS scarcely slowed as they passed through Brayton, but the hobo was watching and dropped off in the snow. He picked himself up whistling, and approached the crossroads station. How well he remembered that station! Even the group of arguing old men seemed the same. Oh, but it was good to be home again, to spend Christmas where he had been so happy as a boy!

One of the men pointed a finger at him. "That," he said, "is what this country is coming to. Able-bodied men running the country in rags and tatters. Likely looking fellow, too. I tell you, it's high time congress—"

The vagabond chuckled and proceeded lightly down the road. Suddenly he checked himself. "George!" he said, "there's old Aunt Agatha's house. Why, Aunt Agatha was another mother to every boy in town. I wonder—?" He sprang up on the porch and knocked.

A sharp-faced woman opened the door. "Well!" she gasped; "no, I ain't giving victuals to tramps what can't come to the kitchen!" The door slammed, but he rapped again persistently.

Presently the woman reappeared. "I beg your pardon, ma'am, I'm looking for Miss Agatha Oberman. Do you know where I can find her?"

"She's been dead and buried these eight years. You an old friend of hers?"

"Yes, I'm Ben Martin—used to live in that house on the corner. I'm sure sorry she's gone." He moved down the steps. "Thank you anyway, ma'am, and a Merry Christmas."

A little of the zest had gone out of Ben Martin's return. He recognized the town drug store, just ahead, but now it carried a new sign—"Thompson's Pharmacy"—and in smaller letters, "W. J. Thompson, Prop." Inside

"No, Thanks; Too Used to Freedom," He Said.

—why, of course! "W. J. Thompson, Prop." was Bill!

"Bill," he called, "it's me—Ben Martin!"

"Ben!" Their hands clasped. "How well you look! But what on earth—let me give you a job."

"No, thanks; too used to freedom."

"Jove, Ben, you were a sickly kid—how did you do it?"

"Oh, it's careless sleep under the stars; going where adventure calls and doing what comes; eating plain food and—. But what of you and the rest of the boys?"

"Me? Oh, I'm married now and settled down. Tom's our doctor, but is away for the holidays. Bert and Pug have both married and moved away, and Fred is studying in New York. I say, I'd sure like to ask you out to Christmas dinner tomorrow, but, well, Martha's queer about some things."

"That's all right. I'll mosey around to the old homestead. My dear cousins still there?"

"Yes. Your uncle's gone, I suppose you know, but otherwise the family is the same as when the black-sheep nephew took off on his own. You'll surprise them."

"No doubt," Ben Martin replied, and made his farewells.

The old house on the corner was much the same. His knock brought a comely young woman to the door. "My dear Cousin Fanny," he said, "it's Ben. Give me a kiss, my dear, and announce to the family that the prodigal has returned."

The family had evidently already learned of his nearness and gathered in the hall. "I was wondering," he said at last, when the first greetings and questions had been exchanged, "whether you could put me up for a few days. I could, of course, sleep outside, if necessary."

"Unfortunately, Benjamin," his aunt replied, "every room is taken, as the family is all home for the holidays. Besides, there is the question of whether or not a—a wanderer—might have a proper effect on the younger members of the family, let alone the good name of us all. I think you'll understand—"

"I do." He drew himself up. "It was simply the sentiment. I felt I would like to spend Christmas here. But, I shan't impose on you. Glad to have seen you all again."

He strode back up the road. "Hang sentiment," he decided, "I'm going south." That night's express bore an extra passenger.

CORRECT POULTRY FEEDING

(By A. G. Philips)

A great many people believe that by selecting proper rations and finding the proper feeding method, they will solve all the problems of poultry production. Unfortunately feeding is not a panacea for all the ailments in the poultry industry. It is but a part of poultry management and must be preceded by correct breeding.

It is folly to feed fowls incapable of production, on the best of rations. Life reacts to proper and improper feeding, regardless of whether it be plants, birds, animals or human beings. While the method of reproduction is somewhat different poultry is not essentially different from other kinds of living things so far as its use of feeds is concerned.

Egg production is merely the job of producing in a container, what might be considered the entire nourishment for the development of the embryo. This means that we must have a complete ration if we are going to produce eggs that, in themselves, will be perfect. This is the problem of feeding. We must think of the egg as much as we do of the hen. The present standard of egg production is highly artificial. We are producing birds that are required to reproduce themselves from 150 to 250 times a year. They draw on their body reserve when the food supply is insufficient, in order that they may continue doing what is normally unnatural.

This means that if we do not have the hen's "storage battery" well charged and well supplied with what her eggs will demand of her, there will be a tendency to let up in producing a satisfactory food supply inside of the egg shell, resulting in lower hatches, poor hatches, and inferior eggs for human consumption. If we did not have such a high standard of egg production, it would be much easier to secure eggs and we would have less mortality in our flocks. This high standard requires much better feeding than we used to thing was necessary.

One of the most imporant things is the question of total consumption or total intake. The more a hen lays, the more she must eat, and the more she consumes of the right feed, the more she can lay. High producers eat more feed than low producers, and, therefore, the smart poultryman will do everything within his power to keep feed consumption to the very maximum.

High produing hens are very tempermental. The feeder must cater to their appetites, partly by method of feeding and also by making the ration palatable. The feeding of a moist fattening mash at noon will increase consumption and help maintain body weight. Feeding cracked corn instead of whole corn, offering germinated oats and chopped alfalfa (moist or dry,) will all aid in keeping heavy laying pullets from losing appetite and body weight.

HORSE SENSE

Oats may be used to replace one-fourth of the corn in the fattening ration for hogs. The oats should be of good quality and coarsely ground.

Most scale insects attacking fruit and ornamental trees are controlled by thorough spraying with three percent spray oil, during the dormant season. The oyster shell scale is an exception, and requires an eight percent dormant oil spray.

Apples, which produce alkali in the body, help to balance the winter diet.

Plow down soybeans, cow peas, or a clean legume sod before planting small fruits.

Oyster shells supply lime which goes into the egg shell and costs only a penny a pound.

This is the time to plan for next year's brooding operations. If chicks will be purchased, early orders insure delivery at the time the chicks are desired.

Price and quality would more nearly balance if all fruit and vegetables were handled on a graded basis.

Most nut trees can be propagated by budding or grafting.

Overhaul farm equipment during the winter, as time is cheaper in December than in April or May.

Tomato juice is a healthful drink. It should be found on the shelf of every modern grocery store and in every modern home.

Did you have plenty of water for your garden last summer? If not, now is the time to plan some sort of water system for next year.

A Japanese physician has shown that the acids of the apple destroy the germs of typhoid fever and cholera.

The front lawn should not be considered a display space for bird baths, stone benches, gazing globes, or such oddities as the weeping mulberry tree.

The chain stores like to handle produce packed in small containers which they sell direct to the consumer without repacking or weighing. The producer can well take a tip from the chain store and pack his produce the way someone wants to buy it.

Arthur Fuchs of Franklin county recently made the record of marketing 33 spring pigs from four litters, at an average weight of 190 pounds per pig, when they were 145 days old, because he followed the Thirfty Pig system of handling his sows and pigs last spring.

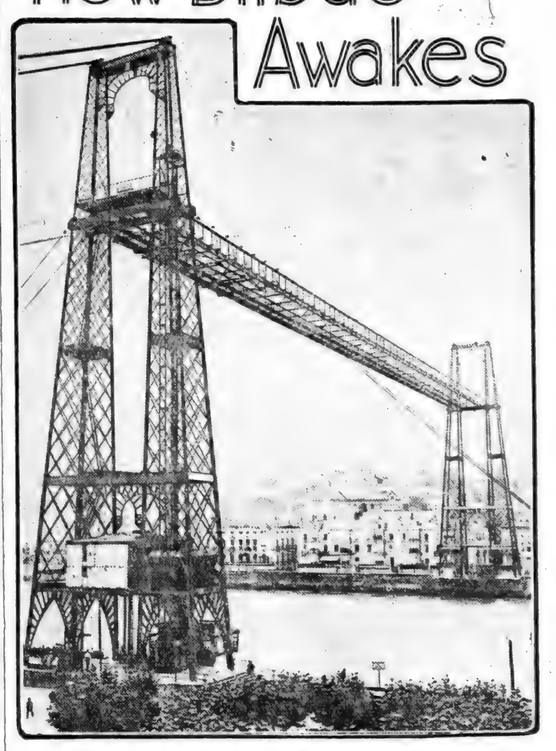
How Bilbao Awakes



"Flying Ferry" Across the Nervion River, Spain.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

HOW a city awakes is one of the most outstanding characteristics by which a traveler can catalogue it.

Bilbao, on the northern coast of Spain, has certain noises and activities all its own. When most northern Spanish cities wake up in the morning certain fixed and recognized noises are heard, certain events transpire, and certain movements of the population take place, and in Spain somehow these little incidents differ considerably from similar ones taking place at the same hour in other countries.

The whistle of locomotives is heard announcing the departure of early trains, and in Spain the best trains, apparently with fixed intent, manage to depart at about five o'clock. Tiny electric cars rumble through narrow streets and across the plazas, under the dusty palm trees, tinkling their little brass bells, or perhaps they haven't any bell at all, the conductor simply blowing from time to time a small tin horn as sign of warning.

The worker appears on the streets with his long blue blouse hanging to the knees, hurrying along noiselessly in his alpargatas, like canvas tennis shoes with soles of coiled rope, and his boina, a tiny blue cap with no visor, like a small tam-o'-shanter, with a piece of string an inch long replacing the pompon, set at a rakish angle.

Shops Open, People Appear.

In the older parts of the town the iron curtain covering both door and single window of the little stores, taverns, and wine shops of the poorer classes is pushed up with a rattle and the place is then open for business. The church bells call the faithful to early mass, and among them are many women garbed in black, further intensified by the black mantilla over head and shoulders, who slip like shadows through the early morning light.

Movement commences along the waterfront, where the rattle of donkey-engine is heard, the clanking of large chains, and the hoarse cries of the second mates starting their gangs at the day's work of cargo-handling.

All that takes place in any of the Spanish cities on the "Mar Cantabrico," as the Bay of Biscay is called in the mother tongue. But at Bilbao there are two incidents that occur in the early morning which apparently are unique to this, the largest of the Basque cities of Spain.

Number one. The oil lamps of the anguleros are extinguished. Now, anguleros are fishermen who since midnight have been engaged in a peculiar branch of the fisherman's art. They have been catching angulas, and angulas, in turn, are a very peculiar brand of fish—little white, almost transparent worms (perhaps it would sound better to call them miniature eels), only two inches long. When a batch of them is fried, however, in olive oil and served in an earthenware dish, with the oil still popping when brought to the table, most connoisseurs will agree that there is method in the anguleros' apparent madness.

This delicacy inhabits the River Nervion and is caught along the stone walls of the quays, being attracted into nets by the fishermen's oil lamps.

Women Stevedores of Bilbao.

Number two. The shrieks of barefooted, illy-clothed women stevedores are heard.

This requires the explanation that Bilbao, the most important port of Spain after Barcelona, derives its prominence from the heavy outward-bound traffic in iron ore from nearby mines and the correspondingly heavy imports of coals from Newcastle to furnish fuel for the many Basque industries.

The iron ore is loaded with modern equipment along the river, but the coal is often unloaded by hand or, perhaps to be more explicit, by head. Women almost exclusively are employed in this dainty occupation. Every day a continuous line is to be seen moving up one gang-plank, with bushel-basket in hand, and down another to the coal hills on shore, with a heaping basketful of coal balanced on each head.

When these toilers gather, shortly after daybreak, to begin work, there is a great row that has to do with preferred places in the line, there being some gang-planks slightly nearer to the coal heaps than others.

Bilbao is eight miles up the River Nervion from the sea. Numerous towns, some of them devoted to ship building, iron foundries and smelters, line both sides of the stream between the port and the sea. At the mouth of the Nervion are twin cities, Las Arenas on the right bank, and Portugalete on the left. People are transported between the towns in a unique manner.

Flying Ferry Is Unique.

On each river edge is a great tower of steel, something like a wireless tower, but more massive, over two hundred feet in height. These towers support a light iron bridge one hundred and fifty feet above the river, under which the largest steamers pass and repass night and day. From this bridge is suspended a "flying ferry" supported by a network of fine wire, which is pulled back and forth across the river. It hangs to within a few feet of the water.

One crowds onto the ferry, the whistle blows, the bell rings, the iron gate clangs shut, away one moves smoothly out over the river through the air, as it were. The opposite shore is reached in a minute, but it is a rather delightful little minute at that.

Portugalete has narrow streets, and its balconied houses stretch picturesquely up the hillside, while at the top is an enchanting little Gothic church, which is always the way in Spanish towns. They always seem to cluster around a church or two for protection. Indeed, in Bilbao, there are no less than seventy-five of these protectors.

Las Arenas, opposite Portugalete, is a modern village of seashore villas which has become popular as a summer resort. Here the Club Maritimo has its pleasant club house, overlooking the harbor entrance.

For administrative purposes Spain is divided into forty-nine districts or provinces. Regionalism is so strong that one may almost continue and state that there are also forty-nine national languages, forty-nine national costumes, forty-nine national dances, and, last but by no means least, forty-nine national dishes.

This would, perhaps, be a slight exaggeration, but the fact remains that the inhabitants of each district differ noticeably in characteristics from all the others. A man from Barcelona is first a Catalan and second a Spaniard. Likewise an inhabitant of Coruna is less Spanish than Gallego and a person from Bilbao places his Basque nationality before his Spanish adherence, and so on.

Thus, the Bilbaino holds that no dish can equal in excellence his bacalao vizcaino, and the citizen of Vigo turns up his nose at all foods except his own native pote gallego, a concoction of potato and cabbage boiled in water with lard and eaten with bread and garlic. The Valencian has his arroz valenciano, which is really excellent—rice cooked in oil, to which tender bits of meat and sweet peppers are added. The proud Castilian sticks through thick and thin to the puchero, the Sevillano to his beloved gazpacho.

CHAPTER XV

—24—

Some Day

But the day was not over for Ernestine. She left Will at the bank. His coat pocket was stuffed with the packet of bills the teller had given them, and her bank balance was reduced to three figures. But that didn't matter. Not a bit. She was a million times richer than she had been the day before. The bankbook figures would fatten again.

She wished she had her car, but, lacking it, she went across to Sheridan road, took a bus north, rode almost to Devon, left the bus and went to Lillian's.

Nobody answered the bell, but the door was unlocked, so Ernestine walked in. The house was silent, but she was instantly aware of the fact that some one was in it. She called, but no one answered. She went through into the kitchen. The maid's bedroom was off the kitchen and the door stood open. Ernestine went in there and saw that the room wore an unoccupied look. She opened the closet door. The hooks were empty. The maid had left, or had been dismissed.

She was still under the domination of her deep self, and, as she had been governed in Will's office an hour or so earlier by forces she did not understand, so now she went quickly up the stairs, through the silent house and into the big front bedroom where Lillian and Loring slept. The cover showed the impress of a body, the pillow had been drawn out from under the spread. She looked swiftly about and was not at all surprised to see Loring standing against the wall, behind her, one hand behind his back.

His coat collar was turned up across the back, his hair was in disorder, he was unshaved, and across one cheek was a deep imprint where his sleeve, or his pillow, had creased his flesh.

Ernestine went to him and held out her hand.

"Give it to me," she said sternly, as she might have addressed Peter.

Loring stared at her sulkily for a moment, his haggard eyes taking on a belated vitality. Then, silently, but with a shrug and a grimace, he drew from behind him a small nickel-plated revolver and put it in her hand. Ernestine crossed the room, opened the window and flung it far away into the water of the lake that breathed against the sandy beach.

She turned back to Loring, closed the window and dusted her hands.

"That's that," she said, with a gleam in her eyes. "What did you think that was going to do for you?"

He dragged himself away from the wall and sank down into a chaise-longue. With a kind of groan Loring hid his face in his hands and sat there like a broken man.

"I didn't know till this afternoon," he said. "But the grand jury—"

"That's all right, Loring," said Ernestine. "That's fixed."

"Fixed?" he said hoarsely, and looked up at her, his expression a little wild. "You don't understand. They've got me seven ways."

"Not now," she said, thinking how strange it was that he could never know about Pastano, and about the twenty thousand dollars.

"Will fixed it," she said gently. "You know, he has friends who told him. Will fixed it for you, Loring. He could—there are men downtown who would do anything for Will. He knows the ropes."

Loring's head fell forward again.

"I'm a failure," he muttered. "A complete failure—and now Will pulls me out of the rubbish heap. I've been here in the house all afternoon, trying to screw myself up to do one decent thing—to get myself out of the way—before all this falls on the rest of you, and I couldn't even do this."

"Of course you couldn't. You're too perfectly healthy. You've been a fool perhaps—like the rest of us, but you aren't crazy, and only insane people are capable of self-destruction. Look, Loring, you can start again. Why, men sometimes have to start again when they're old. Lots of men fail once—or twice—and then succeed. You can start back and rebuild your father's old business. What if you have to let the house and the car go—it's a small price for a new start. Pastano will let you alone, as long as you stay off of his preserves. Lillian's got her money. Will and I are going to start new."

He looked up at her—eager to be comforted as a child is eager to be comforted—eager to believe her, coming back, slowly and painfully, from the dark places of fright and madness.

"But Lillian"—he said, protesting, arguing, as mortal man always argues, on the wrong side—"Lillian's going to have a baby—that was what sickened me on all that old business—I'd been sick of it, anyhow, and when I knew I might have a son—I had to get clear. I told her to go to New York, last week, but she wouldn't. She's stuck to me, Ernestine. I never believed she would. I thought she was a fair-weather wife. I've always thought it. But she's been wonderful. She let her maid go, and she's been doing her own housework. She sold her car and brought me the money. She wrote to her father to let her have her trust fund outright. Now she's going out looking for a flat. That's all right—but when I thought of prison—and Lillian's baby coming in all that trouble, it seemed that the best thing I could do would be to get out. If I were gone, she'd go home to her mother, and perhaps no one would know. I'm all caved in about Lillian, about the way she's taken it."

"Why, Loring," said Ernestine, and laughed shakily, "Lillian adores you—always did. She loves you. When you've just found out how much she cares, you contemplate leaving her. What a way to figure. If that's not like a man!"

They talked a little. Ernestine sat down on the dressing table, flung her hat upon Lillian's bed and talked to him. She told him of the new plans she and Will had made. Gradually he relaxed, came back to normal. He reached up and turned his coat collar down and put up a hand and smoothed his hair. After a little he got up and shook his big body.

"I believe I'll go and shave," he said. "I'm a fright. You won't tell Lillian or Will about this afternoon?"

"Why should I tell them? It would just scare them both. Have you had lunch?"

"No, I don't think so; no, I didn't."

"Neither did I. I'll go downstairs and fix some coffee and sandwiches while you're shaving."

From the kitchen she could hear him moving about; then she heard the front door open and the click of the latch. She went to the hall, and Lillian saw her. Lillian came back to the kitchen.

"You didn't answer the phone, so I came over—Lorrie's upstairs. He said he hadn't eaten"—she made a gesture to the preparations on the table.

Lillian nodded absently.

"Ernestine," she said softly, quickly, "I'm going to have a baby."

Ernestine kissed her. "I'm awfully glad."

"Did you know about all of Loring's trouble?"

"Will told me some—Loring's told me the rest—but the worst is over for him now."

"Poor kid," said Lillian. She leaned against the door a moment and smiled at her younger sister. It seemed to Ernestine that since she had last seen her, the hard surface had dissolved from Lillian.

"Isn't it funny? Now everything is different. I used to wonder how you could go ahead when things were so hard. But it's not so bad—in the thick of it, as it seems from the sidelines. Just to know the baby's coming makes all this mess of Loring's seem so unimportant—I don't care what arrangements we make. Oh, Ernestine, there have been times when I thought Loring loved you more than he did me, but these last few days he's been so sweet to me—so worried about me. He's humbled—it makes my heart ache. I can't tell you how I feel."

"I guess I know," Ernestine answered. "It's this business of marriage—but go on up to him, darling, and get him to eat something. All this will straighten itself out."

Lillian went up the stairs. Standing in the hall, looking after her, Ernestine realized that these sorrows were blessings—these were the things that bound a man and a woman together. This would break for ever Loring's old fixed idea about herself, and Lillian's belief that she had married for her own advantage. This would leave them close together, warm, heart to heart.

She turned the gas low under the coffee-pot, spread a napkin over the sandwiches she had fixed and slipped quietly out of the house. Perhaps Will was at home, and she would eat with him.

As she walked she began to plan all the new life. Her practical, efficient mind set itself with vigor upon the new problems. The removal to the lake—the need of a studio there for Will, the possibility of adjusting their life to changeable income. But Will was so active—he would doubtless have all the work he could do, within a year or two. Some day he would be famous, and he would find the world willing to pay for beauty as well as wit.

She walked more quickly—eager to be home, the young blood singing in her heart.

Some day—

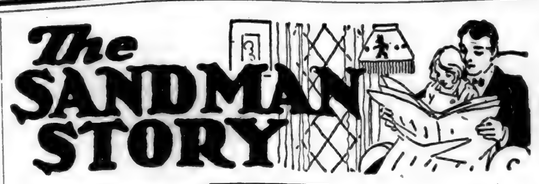
Writer Would Go Limit in State Abbreviations

The abbreviation used for Ohio is "O." Apparently Oklahoma and Oregon do not object. But there are six states whose names begin with letters which are not the first letters of the names of any of the other states. These states are: Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Pennsylvania and Utah. Why not use D, F, G, L, P and U for the abbreviations in those cases? Also, West Virginia is the only "West" state. So why not simply use "W. V." instead of the usual "W. Va."? The only reason for abbreviations in the first place is the desire to save time and space. Then why not save all the time and space possible, or else use the full name? Why fuss with "Pa." and "Penn." and "Penna." when "P." would fill the bill?—Worcester Telegram.

The SANDMAN STORY



ABOUT BOASTING

"NO LANDLORD," said Mother Kangaroo, "can complain of my children.

"If they get a bit wild or if they're apt to get into trouble, I can put them in my pouch and carry them so they don't bother anyone.

"I'm very superior," Mother Kangaroo ended.

"Ah," said the Cat, who was wandering about the zoo and who belonged to a lady who lived very near the zoo, "I rode in a taxicab the other night.

"Yes, when all the people were coming home in their automobiles and in taxicabs from the theaters one evening last week, I was riding with my mistress in a taxi, too. I looked out of the side window and when all the cars were stopped by the big policeman, so other cars could move in the other direction, all the people saw me from the windows of their cars.

"I Have Even Greater Reasons for Boasting," said the Kangaroo.

"They looked at me and they turned and nudged each other so that everybody looked at me.

"My mistress was much amused and she held me up a little higher so I could see and be well seen.

"I can tell you, I was a proud cat.

"I wouldn't be at all surprised if some of those people wondered if I had been to a theater.

"I hadn't been to one. My mistress had been out of town for several days and I had been with her and we were on our way home.

"Oh, it was a splendid experience for a cat to have! I certainly have the right to boast."

"You have the right to boast," said the Kangaroo, "but there is more excuse for my boasting. I have even greater reasons for boasting when you think that I can look after my children in such a fine way."

"Neither of you," said old Hippo from his yard nearby, "has as much reason or right for boasting as I have.

"Now, I can yawn quite openly when I'm bored or sleepy or tired, and you will admit that my yawn is quite a yawn.

"It's not a child's portion, nor a misses, nor a junior size. It is a real, real hippo's yawn.

"If people are bored or tired or sleepy they have to pretend that they are quite wide-awake.

"They have to cover up their yawns and appear not to be yawning. And if they're caught yawning they apologize and say:

"'Dear me, I don't know what makes me yawn. I'm sure it's not the company.'

"Now, I don't have to say any such thing. I don't have to apologize.

"They can think it's the company or not, as they see fit. I don't care.

"I can do as I choose."

"There's more reason and excuse for my boasting than for either of you," said the Kangaroo.

"Just what I say about you and Hippo," said the Cat.

"Just what I say about you and Cat," said Hippo to the Kangaroo.

And so they boasted.

Again and again they told their stories—the Cat told of his ride in the taxi through the city streets at night when the people were coming from theaters and when they looked at him as though he, too, came from one of the theaters and had seen one of the plays.

The Kangaroo boasted and old Hippo boasted.

But all of a sudden they stopped boasting.

For word came that the Elephant's mate was very ill and perhaps would not get well.

And the Elephant was trumpeting his grief—oh, such sad trumpet wails and sounds—and he was pacing up and down, refusing any food, hoping with all his great affection that his mate would get well.

And the three who had been boasting felt ashamed that they were so fond of themselves and so boastful when the Elephant cared not for himself, but for his mate.

They stopped boasting then and were very quiet, wishing a great big wish that soon the Elephant's mate would be well!

"THE DARK CONTINENT"

IT IS given to few people to perpetuate themselves through time because of a happy word or phrase; but, this is the privilege enjoyed by, among others, H. M. Stanley.

As everybody knows, Stanley was dispatched to find Livingstone, missionary and explorer who was considered lost in Africa.

Stanley succeeded in his task and wrote a book about it published in 1878, entitled "Through the Dark Continent."

This was the earliest recorded use of the phrase "The Dark Continent" as a reference to Africa, which was so called by Stanley because of its unknown character.

HOUSEWIFE NEEDS REST

THERE are times when the housewife feels that nothing short of three months in a sanitarium will prevent her from sinking into a state of premature old age or a complete mental collapse. And all she really needs is a single day of complete rest or a readjustment of her duties so that she can regularly take a half hour's nap every afternoon.

There are times when the young wife feels that her marriage is a fizzle and that a separation will be the outcome, when all that is needed to re-establish cordial relations is an evening spent at cards or dancing with a group of other young married people.

There are times when the worried housewife feels as if she would have to move into a smaller house or apartment or dip into the savings account—when all that is needed is a little systematic cutting down on the food bills.

There are times when the harassed mother feels that she will have to send her son or daughter to a strict boarding school or a reformatory, when all that the child needs is an opportunity to follow out some bent for which he or she has a natural fitness.

Shutting Off Bores

The Indian tribes living west of the Rio Grande and south of the Green river have a custom that effectually squelches bores. When they meet for ceremonial purposes they tell stories, but no relater is allowed to monopolize the show. Custom decrees that no tale may last longer than the life of one corn husk cigarette.

In the Golden Book Magazine, Mary Austin, famous writer of Indian stories told about this excellent method of restraining the long-winded story teller.

Mistaken

"Yes," said a sad-eyed man, "I married the widow of a man who was hanged, and I thought that in the circumstances there would be no comparisons with the late lamented. But I was mistaken."

"Did she praise him just the same?"

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

SENTIMENT

SENTIMENT is that tender feeling and expression toward what is highest and best in human experience. Its place in daily life is of no small value. Much of the real contentment and true happiness of the world would be eliminated if we did away with sentiment. Sentiment calls out the truest and noblest part of our natures. Upon it we are dependent for the fine and truly satisfying realities in life.

Who would be willing to part with the memories of childhood home, or willingly forget friendships which have proven true? A present may not represent large intrinsic worth, if it expresses the true spirit of the giver it is of priceless value. Things associated with those we love are cherished for sentiment sake. Who has not some golden casket of memory in which many of the treasures are kept?

L. A. Barrett.

The need for sentiment in our modern world is large and important. Its value is beyond compare. If sentiment has no place in our experience, we may have large material possessions but can be neither happy or contented. Sentiment, like love, may be impossible to some people. It simply does not come. Such persons are to be pitied. Sentiment can be developed, however, by giving time to the cultivation of things intimately allied with the development of life. The family tie deepens sentiment. If we would develop sentiment, listen to the prattle of little children, study ways to cause ripples of laughter to play over their faces, learn the deeper needs of those dependent upon you, be still enough to let nature speak to you. Start building up a library of choice books which we have read and from which we have received some inspiration and encouragement. Cultivate a garden, even though a small one, and learn the secret of the flowers. Learn something about the stars and wonderful beauty of the firmament. Find a life motto and let it dominate the impulses of life. Cultivate appreciation for the little things of our daily common life. "Sentiment is nothing but thought blended with feeling; thought made affectionate, sympathetic, moral."

Conditions which destroy sentiment are the mad rush of our modern age, the restless desire to hastily accumulate large wealth, the lack of poise and self-control. Only when sentiment directs a great life purpose can one be content—"to live in a house by the side of a road and be a friend to man."

SAUL OF TARSUS: HOW A PHARISEE BECAME A CHRISTIAN

LESSON TEXT—Acts 22:3-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I have suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but dung, that I may win Christ.

PRIMARY TOPIC—An Enemy Who Became a Friend.

JUNIOR TOPIC—An Enemy Who Became a Friend.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What It Means to Be a Christian.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Conversion: Its Nature and Effect.

I. Saul's Training as a Pharisee (vv. 3, 4).

1. Taught to love his own nation. ("I am a Jew.") The Pharisees were the nationalists of their day. Saul being a strict Pharisee was a patriot.

2. Taught to love God's Law. "Taught according to the perfect manner of the law of the fathers." Love for the Bible is a valuable asset in life. One may misinterpret the Bible and dangerously misapply it, but if there is love for it, he may yet come into right relation to it.

3. "Was zealous toward God." The root meaning of the word "zealous" is "to boil." It signifies a passion for God and his work.

4. Was conscientious (Acts 26:9, 10). Saul was conscientious in his opposition to Jesus. He regarded Jesus as an imposter. While Saul is to be condemned for his attitude toward Jesus, he is to be praised for responding to the dictates of his conscience. Conscience is the law of life for every man, but should be regulated by God's Word.

II. Saul's Burning Hatred of Jesus (vv. 4, 5, cf. Acts 9:1, 2).

He knew full well that unless the movement set on foot by Jesus was stopped it would supersede Judaism. However, he was entirely ignorant of the genius of Christianity. He did not know that "the blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Stephen's noble display of faith intensified Saul's hatred of Jesus. It made him more determined than ever to stamp out the Nazarene heresy.

III. Saul Kicking Against the Pricks (vv. 6-11).

The figure here is of an eastern ox driver following the animal with a sharp iron attached to a pole. The ox is prodded along with this instrument, and if it is refractory and kicks against this iron, it only injures itself.

1. A light from heaven (v. 6). The time had now come for Jesus to interpose in behalf of his own. Saul is stricken with blindness and falls to the earth.

2. A voice from heaven (v. 7). This was the voice of Jesus saying, "Why persecutest thou me?" Jesus Christ is so closely identified with believers that he regards treatment of them as treatment of himself.

3. Saul's inquiry (vv. 8, 10). "Who art thou, Lord?" "What shall I do, Lord?" The dictator is now willing to be dictated to.

4. A second voice from heaven (vv. 8, 10). In response to Saul's inquiry, Jesus revealed himself, and instructed Saul what to do.

5. Saul entering Damascus (v. 11). This hitherto savage persecutor went humbly into the city, led by attendants. What went on in his soul during three days of blindness and fasting we can only surmise.

IV. Ananias Ministers to Saul (vv. 12-15).

1. Sent by the Lord (Acts 9:10-12). In a vision the Lord showed him that Saul was now a praying man. The name of Saul's host and the number of his street were made known to Ananias.

2. Ananias' hesitancy (Acts 9:13-16). Knowing Saul's violent hatred of Jesus, he was afraid to go near him until he received the divine message.

3. Ananias' message (vv. 13-15).

(1) "Brother Saul, receive thy sight." (v. 13). Sight was given.

(2) "The God of our fathers hath chosen thee" (v. 14).

This choice was for three things: a. "That thou shouldest know his will." This is true of every one chosen by the Lord. b. "And see that Just One." The sight of Jesus Christ transformed Saul's life. c. "And hear the voice of his mouth." How wonderful that even a savage persecutor should come to hear the voice of Jesus.

(3.) "Thou shalt be his witness unto all men of what thou hast seen and heard" (v. 15).

Choice Is With God

Wretches that we are! to be keeping up jealousies of our Lord, when we should be rejoicing in his love. As if any man could choose Christ before Christ hath chosen him; or any man were more willing to be happy than Christ is to make him happy.—Baxter.

Charity

Charity resembleth fire, which inflameth all things it toucheth.—Erasmus.

U622

Since the close of the Liberty Loan Campaigns in Indiana, no such widespread volunteer army will have been assembled as that which will function in each county of the state during this month in the 1930 Sale of Tuberculosis Christmas Seals and Health Bonds.

A statement made by Miss Anne M. Lutz, of Lafayette, eminent research worker in biology and president of the Indiana Tuberculosis Association, told of elaborate organization for the Seal Sale by thousands of volunteers from every walk of life in Indiana.

"It is probable that no other single purpose since the World War finds Hoosiers so widely organized for public service as the annual Christmas Seal Sale," Miss Lutz said. This year we have reports already from dozens of counties that show that the groups went into action on Thanksgiving Day and will labor through the Christmas holidays in the most comprehensive public effort since anti-tuberculosis work began in Indiana back in 1915.

Physicians are taking deep interest in the success of each Seal Sale and many are enlisted this year for volunteer service in their respective counties. Nurses will also take an important part. Women's clubs, luncheon clubs and church organizaitons, already are at work in many communities on such specific jobs as sanatorium betterment, child nutrition camp enlargement, fresh-air school development and other preventive and curative efforts. These are urging the purchase of Christmas Seals now, as an aid to carrying on the other disease control efforts in 1931. Teachers in great numbers co-operate throughout the year in child health education in the effort to continue the downward trend of the tuberculosis death rate and practically all of them will lend time and effort to the success of the Seal campaign this year.

Labor unions, fraternal groups, women's sororities, members of the newspaper profession the clergy, lawyers and other professionmen and large numbers of men in all lines of business are serving on committees in the counties, arranging early details of the state's greatest co-operative selling effort. They have all come to know that the anti-tuberculosis war, financed almost wholly by the Sale of Seals and Health Bonds at each Christmas time, is really a struggle in which every man, woman and child in Indiana is interested. Fifteen short years of such increasing co-operation by thousands of citizens has resulted in the lowering of the death rate from the disease by more than one-half. and the actual saving of more than 1,600 lives a year from the plague.

No specific remedy for tuberculosis has been discovered, but it is now an established fact that it may be prevented and cured by a regime of proper living habits that gradually is becoming known far and wide among our citizens. Perhaps the greatest means we have of distributing the educational factors in this campaign are the annual Sales of Christmas Seals, when the attention of thousands of volunteer workers is concentrated on the items of the anti-tuberculosis fight which make for its success. This year it will rise to its peak in state wide attention—and every community in Indiana will benefit directly by the labors of its own unselfish people, oragnized to perform the highest type of social service, the saving of human life and the elimination of human suffering.

Men and women throughout the state are serving on committees, organizing township groups, operating Seal Sale headquarters and actually selling Seals to their neighbors and friends in a state wide human effort that will rival the days of the Liberty Loan campaigns. Reports already indicate that the state never was organized as completely as it is just now for the Seal Sale drive. A goal of $200,000 has been set. With that reached Indiana's death rate from the plague should keep on going downward.

Princeton's Famous Ivy

The first class ivy at Princeton was planted by the class of 1877 on its class day at its graduation in June, 1877, and the ceremony was accompanied by an oration, called then and since the ivy oration. The orator in 1877 stated that ivy had been chosen as a symbol of the perpetual remembrance the class would have of Princeton, striking deep, clinging close, and always green. The class of 1877 turned out to be one of the most remarkable classes in after years that Princeton has graduated. The first ivy was planted at the new library. Since then it has been planted at Nassau hall with a tablet naming the class. Some of the ivy has been historic, being brought specifically for the planting, one spray having been sent from the castle in Germany of William of Nassau, prince of Orange, after whom Nassau hall was named in 1756.

Origin of Tile

At the siege of Argos in the year 272 B. C., a tile fragment thrown from a housetop slew the battling king of Epirus. Thus tile played an important part in history.

Tile is one of the oldest building materials, having first been made in the remote ages of antiquity; yet, how many of us know just what tile actually is?

Tile is burned clay, or to be more specific, a carefully proportioned mixture of certain clays and other minerals, after being formed into the desired shape, is heated in a special furnace called a kiln until the particles become so hot that they partially melt and stick together. When cooled, tile, as firm and homogeneous as a piece of stone, results.

A Beautiful Christmas

BY

Florence Harris Wells

IT WAS Christmas morning. Two elderly persons stood at the front window of their big farm house and gazed at the snow blanketed world about them.

"Not a chance for Sam and his family to get through these drifts, Mother, not a ghost of a chance. No car on earth could make it."

"I guess you're right, Pa," Mrs. Clark answered, solemnly shaking her head with its beautiful wavy white hair. "And our dinner's well on the way. I'll have to tell Annie not to cook so many potatoes and perhaps we can manage to keep most of the turkey a day or so until the children can come. I suppose there's no chance for the snow plows to get through today either, William?"

"No. They'll clear the main highways first. But it's beautiful, isn't it, mother? with the ice and sleet on the trees and now the snow for trimming. It's as beautiful a Christmas morning as I have ever seen. And we're both well and strong and able to enjoy it together. It's great, isn't it?" Grandfather Clark slipped his arm about his wife's waist and drew her close beside him.

Meanwhile Sam and his family, seated about their breakfast table, were much more concerned about missing Christmas at Grandmother's and the good dinner than they were at the beauty of the world about them.

"Oh, grandfather and grandmother will understand," Marion, the daughter, was speaking. "We're the goats in this case. Ham and eggs for Christmas!"

"Gee! Can't we do anything 'cept sit here and talk about it?" Sam, Jr., aged fourteen, puckered his brows in evident great concentration. Suddenly he threw down his napkin and dashed for his sweater and cap.

"Where're you going?" Marion shouted.

The banging of the front door was the only reply.

In less than a half hour Sam, Jr., came bursting back again, all excited:

"Get ready! We're going! We're going!"

"Going — fiddle sticks!" Marion scoffed.

"Please explain, young man," Sam, Sr., quizzically demanded, a gleam of understanding coming into his eyes as he caught sight of tall, handsome Dick Roberts who had entered quietly after Sam, Jr., and stood just outside the door. Now he stepped forward.

"Merry Christmas, everybody!"

Marion's face was as rosy as Dick's as she grasped his extended hand. "I thought you were going to your sister's in the East," she stammered.

"I was," Dick laughed, "but business wouldn't let me. I don't mind now that I can be of service to you. Young Sam knew I hadn't gone, and he swooped down upon me and explained your predicament. And my plane is at your service."

"Your plane!" Marion gasped. "A plane in this snow?"

"Yes. My plane has skis, you know. I can take you one at a time and land you safely at your grandfather's."

Grandfather and Grandmother Clark were more excited than the others, if that could be possible, when Mrs. Sam arrived first and explained what was happening. Sam, Jr., came next; then Father Sam, and last of all Marion, all rosy and excited.

"Beautiful sight, wasn't it, gliding over the country?" Sam asked as he helped Dick off with his togs.

"Marvelous!" Then Dick added quickly, "But everything's wonderful to me today because it took a ride way up in the clouds to convince Marion that I could be her pilot for life. Congratulate me."

"You're a welcome new member of the family," Sam answered quietly and dropped his hand on Marion's shining hair.

"Mother and I thought this was the most beautiful Christmas we'd ever seen when we looked out of the window this morning," grandfather's eyes danced, "and we hadn't been riding in any airplane. When one feels right with the world it's easier to see the beauty of things we sometimes miss."

Sam, Jr., grinned at them all: "Some Christmas!"

Widow Millie Filled the Stocking

By Wm. L. Gaston

WIDOW MILLIE lived on a western farm and with the help of a hired man—a slow-going man named Mike—nobody ever heard his last name—managed to grow good crops and maintain the appearance of thrift.

Five years before her husband, Wilson Macy, had died and she had been left alone to carry on the work of the ranch. Mrs. Macy was an attractive young woman whose age would have been guessed somewhere in the thirties. She was plump, good-natured and generally liked in the community. Somehow she came to be called Widow Millie by the neighbors, who used the name as much to express their kindly feelings as to distinguish her from other people.

Bob Ramsay and Jim Walden were both eligible widowers and each owned a quarter section of good land adjoining Widow Millie's land, one on the north and one on the east. Each seemed a trifle more than anxious to have everything go right on the widow's ranch and neither was backward in the proffer of advice or offers to help. To do this properly required a call and neither was averse to calling.

Tom Moulton was a bachelor—a timid, bashful bachelor, who could blush better than he could talk, in the presence of ladies. He owned a good ranch and was one of the most thrifty farmers in the community. He was good looking and very obliging. He was well liked but no one believed that he could ever muster the courage to propose marriage to any woman. He often slipped over to the widow's farm, to see Mike, of course. He gave his farm advice to Mike. Sometimes he exchanged work with Mike and on these occasions there was an extra white cloth on the table and the biscuits had an extra flakiness. Tom liked the biscuits. Tom ate the biscuits but he could not think of a word to say when the conversation was directed to him.

On the night before Christmas both Bob and Jim called and Widow Millie proceeded to entertain both in the parlor. She managed conversation and kept it going in the general direction while the visitors fidgeted and squirmed, each hoping that the other would soon leave. Millie was sure that Tom was in the kitchen. She could hear the muffled conversation of two slow-speaking men. Millie extended an invitation to both her visitors to come over the next day and have Christmas dinner with her. This was the signal for both to leave.

After their departure Millie went to the kitchen, but Tom had gone and Mike had retired. But hanging on the kitchen wall just over the stove was a pair of ladies' silk stockings. She looked at them in amazement. They were not hers and how could they have gotten there. Going closer she observed a piece of note paper protruding from one of them. She pulled it out hastily and excitedly read:

"Widow Millie: I have hung these stockings up here for you. I want you to fill them and wear them tomorrow. I have hung up a pair for myself at home. I will fill them and wear them over here tomorrow noon. The preacher and his wife will be with me. I fixed up everything else at the courthouse this afternoon. I can farm better if I do not have to cook. You can cook better if you do not have to farm. This is an honest offer, from Tom."

It would be hard to describe the thoughts that raced through Millie's mind. At first she was indignant. She resented it as an impertinence. "He had his nerve," she said almost aloud a dozen times, but she smiled when she thought that nerve was the very thing that Tom was supposed not to have. She liked Tom, and if he had come out boldly and proposed in the usual way she did not know what she would have done. She took up the note again, but she could only see the last line—"this is an honest offer, from Tom." It smote her with its straightforwardness and simplicity. "He is honest," she said to herself. She resolved first one thing, then another, but always came back to that last line—the honest offer. The last line won.

When Tom, the preacher and his wife arrived, Widow Millie had the stockings filled and dinner was well on the way. The minister's wife finished it. Bob and Jim were in time for the ceremony, and of course they stayed for their Christmas dinner.

TO A HORSE

Oh Horse, you are a wonderful thing. No horns to honk, no beels to ring; no license plates to screw on front and rear.

No spark to miss, no gears to strip; you start yourself, no clutch to slip; no gas bills mounting every day to steal the joy of life away. Your inner tubes are all OK, and thank goodness, they stay that way.

Your spark plugs never miss or fuss; your motor never makes us cuss. Your frame is good for many a mile; your body never changes style. Your wants are fe wan deasily met—you've something on the Auto yet.

NEWS MAKES A GOOD PAPER, SO SEND IT IN TO US.

VOL. XLIV — ST. JOE, DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY. DEC. 18, 1930 — NUMBER 51

PARENT-TEACHERS ASSOCIATION

Christmas may be a week off according to the calendar but you will not want to miss an early broadcast, epsecially prepared for the Parents'-Teachers' Association by Station X-M-A-S, December 18. Come to the high school gymnasium at 7:30. The High School Band will make its first public appearance at this time.

For all of you who still believe in Santa Claus, and everybody should, Mrs. Oberlin's pupils in the third and fourth grades have prepared a play called "Santa Strikes." According to a secret that has leaked out it seems that Santa, himself, will be in the play. Due to the doubts voiced by a few boys and girls that there was no real Santa, the real Santa goes on a strike which is to last until he is once more truly appreciated. But the Spirit of Giving prevails upon him and everything is well once more.

The cast of "Santa Strikes" is—
Santa Claus, Ray Littlefield.
Mrs. Santa, Catherine Bell Curie.
Spirit of Giving, Karma Jean Wilcox.
Dream Lady, Helen Goodwin.
Mehitable, Esther Webb.
Susan, Helen Fae Curie.
Belinda, Christina Zonker.
Captain of Soldiers, James Draggoo.
Soldiers.
Mother, Alice Hanna.
Father, D. D. Wasson.
Little Boy, Hermon Collins.
Little Girl, Minta Davis.

The more serious Christmas story will be told in a pageant illustrating some of the best known carols. A mixed chorus from the high school, under direction of Miss Woods, will sing the songs, except the featured one "We Three Kings of the Orient Are," sung by Mr. Williams, Mr. Staman and Mr. Woodcox. Patrons of the school have been coached in pantomime parts to portray the meaning of the songs by members of the following committee. Mrs. Borthwick, is chairman and Mrs. Hamilton and Mrs. Woodcox have assisted. Mr. Durwood Ridgway and his daughter, Jean, have the prominent speaking parts. The story is told in the actual words of the Bible.

Remember the place and date, and come with the children.

RED LETTER DAY AT M. P. CHURCH

Sunday was marked as a red letter day in the local Methdist Church, when at the morning service six were baptized and ten were received into church membership of which number three were adults and seven were younger folks.

As the result of the three and a half weeks meeting many more have made confession, than was received into the church on Sunday.

As a whole, the meeting has been a real success, spiritually, and the church has been benefitted. The pastor did his best to lay down the law and Rev. and Mrs. C. S. Thompson did their best in singing the gospel, and the response to the financial obligation for this meeting was gratifying to the pastor.

GOV. LESLIE DESIGNATES "CHRISTMAS CHEER WEEK"

Indianapolis, Dec. 11.—The week of December 17 to 24 was set aside as "Christmas Cheer Week" by Governor Harry G. Leslie today in a proclamation urging that unemployed be hired to do small jobs around the home.

"There are hundreds of small jobs to be done in every household," the proclamation said. "There are menial tasks to perform that are put off from day to day that someone would gladly do for the sake of a little money to bring Christmas to loved ones."

The governor pointed out that because of the depression there will be an unusually large number of empty stockings this year, and urged that persons employ for wages "someone to do work that will bring Christmas to those dependent upon him."

LEGAL NOTICE

The Advisory Board of Concord Township will meet at their regular meeting place on Friday, December 19, at 7:30 P M. to consider additional appropriations as follows:

1. To fund No. 22, for sash and glass, etc., for school building, $40.00.
2. To fund No. 24, new desks, $50.00.
3. To fund No. 33, additional transportation and repair of bus body, $310.00.

Taxpayers appearing shall have a right to be heard thereon.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving remembrance of Daniel C. McCann, who died December 14, 1929.

One year ago today, Father passed away,
We had a treasure once,
He was our joy and pride.
We loved him, Ah! perhaps too well,
For soon he slept and died.
All is dark within our dwelling
Lonely are our hearts today,
For the one we loved so dearly
Has forever passed away.

Mrs. D. C. McCann and Children.

The News will go to press next week on Tuesday, so as to be delivered to its readers on Wednesday.

If we published on our regular schedule the paper would arrive a day late, and this we do not like.

All correspondents, advertisers and persons wishing their material printed next week, will please notice this change.

TOWN BOARD CLOSES YEAR

The town board met Monday evening and transacted its business preparing to close the work for the year.

Every claim against our incorporation has been paid in full with a very substantial balance.

Frank Akins, treasurer, tendered his resignation to take effect with December 31, 1930, at which time he will make a financial report to the board on January 5, 1931.

Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Lee and children of Fort Wayne, were Sunday guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Ruple.

Merritt Sechler left last Friday on a business trip to eastern Pennsylvania, as administrator of the Jos. R. Sechler estate. Mrs. Jennie Sechler accompanied him as far as Evans City and returned Monday evening.

FARM STOCK

MANY PARASITES REMAIN MYSTERY

Life History of Most of Them Little Known.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Many hundreds of kinds of parasites infest America's live stock, and yet the life histories of most of them are still little understood by the veterinary profession, says Dr. Maurice C. Hall, zoologist of the United States Department of Agriculture. He believes there are many more life histories that are not yet known than have already been ascertained.

Of all the tapeworms in the world, life histories of perhaps not more than 1 per cent are known to the profession, he says, and little more is known of the parasitic roundworms and flukes. Until much of the information now lacking is supplied it will be difficult, this scientist believes, to separate major offenders from minor offenders.

Parasitic diseases are about as important as bacterial diseases, but it is more difficult to see the damage caused by them because most of them are present throughout the year. It is much easier to see the loss from bacterial diseases, which strike suddenly and cause severe losses at the time, than to detect the steady drain from parasites which manifests itself in animals that are in poor condition, unthrifty, and less capable of producing meat, wool, milk, eggs or other things for which these animals are raised.

Before the live stock industry can be relieved of many of the losses now suffered because of parasites it will be necessary to make extensive surveys to discover what parasites are present in this country and where they are prevalent, to work out their life histories, to learn their habits, to develop effective treatments, and to devise satisfactory prophylactic measures that will prevent future losses.

Give Brood Sows Right Care to Insure Porkers

This is the time of year when brood sows need some special care, and the time when the farmer can give it to them. It will depend almost entirely upon what they get to eat, as to what the spring pig crop will be. Sows that are to raise spring litters are unable at this time of the year, no matter how large the pasture may be, to get all the requirements of their systems from the regular feeds and forage they have access to. If the ground is frozen, it is impossible for them to get their mineral requirements, which are more than ordinarily heavy at this season. In fact no self respecting hog should be obliged to dig his own minerals any time of the year. It takes a lot of energy which might be otherwise turned into pork for a porker to stand on his head and dig a well out in the middle of the pasture while digging for mineral. Besides this it is mighty hard on the pasture also. Commercial minerals are not expensive when compared to the trouble the hog must experience in digging his own, even if as the old Arkansawyer said, "A hawg's time hain't worth nothin'."

Soft Pork Products Are Very Difficult to Sell

A soft or oily condition of pork products makes them difficult to sell. Lard from soft hogs is a sloppy, semi-liquid mass which does not harden at ordinary temperatures. Because of the softness of the fat they carry, the loins become smeary and unattractive in appearance when they are placed on the counter or in the showcase. The bacon is soft and flabby, has a displeasing appearance and is difficult to slice even with a machine. Hams are also affected, but probably to a less extent than are the other cuts. These undesirable characteristics not only reduce the demand for soft pork but for pork products in general. A decrease in pork products consumption hurts corn belt farmers who produce such a large percentage of our annual crop of hogs.

Cholera Symptoms

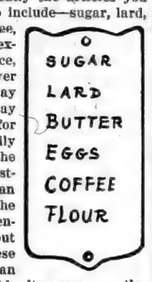
Hog cholera is characterized by complete loss of appetite, extremely high temperature, constipation usually followed by diarrhea, chills, depression, burrowing in litter, ears and tail drooping, and sometimes cough. Red spots or blotches appear on the skin of the belly, inner side of the hams, and on the ears. In advanced stages there is a staggering gait, and a gummy discharge from the eyelids often glues the eyes shut.

Best Veal Calves

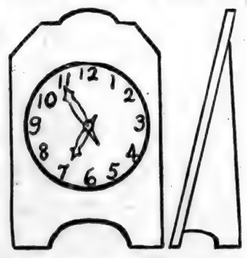
Market topping veal calves generally are produced only by allowing the calves to nurse the cow until they are seven to ten weeks old. To make the very best quality of veal, calves should have no other feed. There would be no objection to weaning the calves and feeding milk from a bucket, though it would hardly be a paying proposition to go to the trouble of milking the cow and feeding the whole milk to the calf, if the calf is intended for veal.

Christmas Gifts to MAKE

EITHER a board or a heavy piece of cardboard will do. This should be about 2½ inches wide. The top and bottom of the board should be cut a little curved, as the picture shows. Now print very neatly the articles you wish to include—sugar, lard, butter, eggs, coffee, tea, lemons, extracts, spices, rice, flour or whatever else Mother may need in the way of supplies for making the daily meals. When she receives her Christmas gift, she can hang it in the kitchen, and whenever she runs out of one of these articles, she can stick a pin beside its name on the board, and not forget to order it.



This also can be made out of board or cardboard, cut a little fancily at top and bottom. It can be made to hang on the wall or to stand on a desk. A sheet of paper cut round like a clock face with numbers neatly printed on it must be pasted in the center of the board. Then from lighter cardboard or thin pieces of metal, two hands, a little one and a big one, must be fastened through the middle of the clock face with brass fasteners or a pivot, and when Daddy has an appointment at a certain time he will move the hands to that time on his clock so he surely won't forget to keep it.



A Reminder Clock Will Be Appreciated by Father.

A block of white paper, either ruled or plain, a pair of scissors and a ruler are all you need to make many of these books for those you love. Cut one sheet that measures three and one-half inches wide and eight inches long. Then with this for a measure cut twelve more exactly like it. Fold them in the middle and make a cover of colored paper in which to enclose them. Then punch two holes where they are folded and fasten the sheets together with brass fasteners. Print the letters of the alphabet, one letter in the right hand corner of each page, and you will have a neat line indexed address book.

Like Christmas Dolls

In spite of all the advanced ideas of the rising generation, the average small girl still likes a doll as well as she likes any other Christmas present.

CHRISTMAS IN AN AIRLINER

by Helen Gaisford

ESTHER MARTIN felt cheated. Here she was on her first trip by air—at Christmas time—and she couldn't enjoy it at all! Of course, she had to admit to herself, Fred Harrington was probably as surprised as she was, if he had seen her.

At least he didn't know that she had seen him. She had been in her seat when she noticed him entering the air liner and never since had her face been turned from the window. That wouldn't have been so bad if she could have seen the earth and watched the rivers and farms as they skimmed swiftly along, but with this snowstorm raging!

She lifted her vanity case for the tenth time and under pretext of arranging her hair carefully surveyed the man two seats back across the aisle. He was still absorbed, apparently, in his magazine. That was what she had expected, and she would have dreaded meeting his glance, yet she pursed her lips in discontent.

She lowered the glass and again looked out of the window, trying to cheer herself with the prospect of Christmas. Christmas without Fred! Against her longing to go to him, to talk to him, was her pride. One was proud in love. She tilted her chin higher, but could not keep the tears from her eyes.

The other passengers were chatting gayly, exuberant with holiday plans. Suddenly there came a hush. The ship was going down, slowly gliding earthward. Tensely they watched the land seemingly come up to meet them, and then as the ship struck and jolted over the rough ground a woman screamed.

Involuntarily Esther looked back and into the eyes of Fred Harrington. "Oh, Fred!" she said, and he caught her to him.

"My dear," he whispered. "My dear!"

After a bit they joined the excited group about the pilot. "Couldn't take a chance in this blizzard," he was saying, "so we dropped a flare. We'll have to all stick by the ship till it clears up. A man wouldn't get far in this storm."

"You mean," Esther asked, "we'll have to spend Christmas here?"

"Possibly."

"Oh, well," said Fred, "what does it matter? I think we'll have a very merry Christmas—now—together—don't you?"

And Esther, understanding, smiled and answered, "Very."

How to Light the Tree

To combine in equal proportions red and green lights of equal brightness on your Christmas tree is an assault on the eyesight. The result suggests traffic signals gone mad. Two parts of green to one of red may be used more effectively.

CHAPTER I

—1—

Bond street, deserted by shopping and sightseeing crowds, is not exhilarating. It is in fact rather depressing, to one who takes it between seven and eight o'clock on a typically wet and drizzling London night.

Save for an occasional belated clerk, a watchman or two and a policeman, the young man who was making his way from Regent to Clifford street found it practically his own and he did not like it.

He turned the corner of Clifford street, caught sight of his own image in the long mirror of a corner shop which reflected the light from a street lamp, saw how disgruntled he looked and managed to smile at himself. After all a disagreeable duty might as well be gone through with some spirit. He stopped to look in a bookshop window next to the entrance of the flats in which his stepmother had her temporary residence. He could see very little of the books, because of the dim light, but one large pile of new and gaily bound novels, well in the foreground with the price "seven-and-six" plainly marked, caught his eye. He gazed at them with interest, because seven-and-six (less than two dollars) represented the exact amount he had in his pocket.

He was so hungry that he could not help hoping that his stepmother would not ask him to dine, since he could not possibly accept if she did, and the mere mention of food would make him ravenous. His pride required that he refuse.

He had tasted nothing since breakfast. The journey to town had taken all but his precious seven-and-six, and he had yet to secure a night's lodging.

He found himself in the doorway, resitating, his hand on the bell. The neighborhood was not fashionable, but it was undoubtedly, for a country woman like his stepmother, both convenient and accessible. A few doors above him was the shop of a well-known shoemaker. He could see the shop from the doorstep. How many times he had come up this street to order a pair of shoes! Well, those carefree days were over. In fact they had come to an end when his father married the woman whose doorbell he was about to ring.

He gave the bell a savage pull and waited. There was no answer. He rang again.

Faint and far away he heard the rumble of something that must be an elevator. He shook the water from his hat and sighed.

The door was opened by a very pretty young girl in a maid's cap and gown.

"Lady Sandison."

"Yes, sir."

The maid indicated the elevator, which was in the middle of the narrow dimly lighted hall. The floor was covered with a black and white patterned linoleum. A dark marble-topped stand stood near the doorway, containing a mirror in which it was impossible to see oneself. Surrounding the mirror were several wooden pegs on which to hang hats and coats although none were hung there. There was a small, tarnished, silver-plated tray for cards on the marble top of this stand, and about it were scattered several letters and papers. It was the sole piece of furniture in the hall.

The maid paused to gather up the letters and papers before she followed the young man past the stairs, which were rather ornate as to handrail, balusters and newel post.

The young man had glanced quickly at the scattered letters before taking his way down the hall, reassured that none of them were in his handwriting, consequently his stepmother must have received the note he had sent from Liverpool.

The elevator was so small that when the maid entered, and took hold of the rope which operated it, there was barely room for one passenger. The maid closed the door and the antiquated little contrivance began its slow ascension.

After his long sojourn in the Americas, both South and Central, the first glimpse of the hall, the lift and the maid had given him an odd feeling, like that experienced in a dream which the dreamer feels he has had before. The next moment, even as with the dreamer, he had forgotten all that had been daily sight and experience for some time, and was once more part of the "British" environment in which he found himself, all strangeness gone.

His stepmother's flat was the front flat on the second floor. The maid brought the elevator to a standstill and preceded him down a narrow hallway. The young man followed, trying to picture what this meeting would be like.

The maid, after a perfunctory knock, thrust open the door and announced:

"A gentleman to see you, Lady Sandison."

"Come in," said a full deep voice with a good honest Scotch burr in it, and the young man walked in.

The sitting room looked very cosy, after the wet streets. The curtains were drawn and the fire was blazing. In one of the easy chairs, a large one, drawn close to the fire, her feet on the fender, sat a dumpy little woman with red-fair hair that was slowly turning gray. Her features were quite regular. Her complexion was clear red and white. She wore a black dress with white collar and cuffs, well and simply made, which gave her an air of greater refinement than was really hers. She could not, however, cloak her Scots' tongue. It is difficult to do Lady Sandison's speech justice in cold print. There was a crispness, a richness, a rolling of the r's, a tendency to make "dinner," "deener" that an attempt to illustrate by letters would only travesty.

The young man advanced toward his stepmother, who had not risen, with outstretched hand.

"Sir Geordie," the dumpy little woman said, rising slowly to her feet and holding his hand, "it's grand to see you again."

As Sir George stood looking down at her, a slow smile lifted the corner of her lips. "Dear, dear! But you're an awful height laddie—I mean Sir Geordie."

"Oh, why not the 'laddie,' if you like?"

His stepmother gave a quick look about her. The maid, all eyes, had left the room.

"Sit down, Sir Geordie," she said with an air of command that somehow

"Dear, Dear! But You're an Awful Height, Laddie."

seemed natural to her. "Have you engagements or will you dine with me? I've a deal to say."

"I'll dine with you, gladly," Sir George found himself saying. He was amazed at himself, or was it at Lady Sandison? It was the last thing he had contemplated, but since there was no way out now, he would continue at least to look as though duty and pleasure went hand in hand.

"Would an early dinner discommode you?"

"It would not. I would be glad to have it early. I've been traveling since morning."

"That'll suit me fine. I'll ring for the dinner now, and then we'll get to our talking."

She rang the bell and looked again at her stepson.

"Dear Sakes! It's queer enough to think of you and me sitting down together."

Sir George frowned, but before he could voice his evident annoyance, the woman spoke again.

"I've been wanting to tell you several things for a long while past. But they were not such things as could be put on paper, so I had to bide in patience until I could get at you, so to speak."

The maid appeared again, and was briefly told to see about the dinner at once. "Sir George is dining with me."

The maid gave a pleased stare at Lady Sandison, with her "Yes m'lady," which led Sir George to surmise correctly that she had been taken, at least a short distance, into Lady Sandison's confidence.

But Aggy, Lady Sandison, never took anyone too far into her confidence. She had confided to the landlady through the maid, that the young man was expected. She had also hinted that she might "have him to dinner if he was not that engaged that he hadn't a minute to spare, even for a stepmother." She had further added: "And I have that much to talk about with him that, in case we have not got through by midnight, I'll be asking you to leave sheets and blankets in the press here, so I can make up the couch in the sitting room for myself, if I can persuade the poor tired laddie to rest here."

The landlady, who had found Lady Sandison "near" but just, had agreed to this, picturing to herself from m'lady's confidences some pale, tired lad of fifteen or sixteen.

The sheets, blankets and pillow cases were that moment reposing on the top shelf of the press in the sitting room and the shrewd Lady Sandison was determined they should be used, though this Sir George did not guess. He was even then, his dinner having been provided by Providence, wondering where he would lay his head, yet retain his seven-and-six for breakfast in the morning, until he could borrow money enough to start anew.

Again Lady Sandison upset her stepson's calculations, for she faced him and said:

"You must have often wondered what made me marry your father."

His father's son blushed, as he remembered that father, and then said guiltily:

"I never wonder at marriages. The reasons why are never clear to an outsider."

"I wouldn't exactly call you an outsider."

"Everybody except the parties to a marriage is an outsider," Sir George insisted. He was becoming a little annoyed with Aggy. He was remembering now that as his nurse, long years ago, she had been awfully set on having her way, and would argue with the small boy he had been until she got it.

"My father was old enough—" he began again.

"Your father was an old fool. We both knew that," admitted Aggy with the awful directness that had always distinguished her, and using more markedly plebian terms of expression than before. Evidently when Aggy grew excited or emotional, caution left her. "But what you do not understand is that he would have made a far worse fool of himself if I hadn't interfered. He was fair determined to marry that young brazen hussy, Jock Heath's daughter, Meggy. If I wouldn't have him. It was my thought that there would be less trouble and expense for you if he married me, a wiselike woman of sense and middle age, than a young hussy that would make the money fly—and what was left of the estate."

"Aggy!" gasped her stepson.

"That's more like it," Lady Sandison said, with a satisfied look. "Keep to Aggy, Sir Geordie, and you'll not go far wrong. It's your own old Aggy, with an eye to your future, that married your father and, if I do say it, kept him in order for the last of his days."

Aggy grew solemn. "They were fewer than I thought they would be when I took on the job. He was a grand man, Sir Steenie was, and I was set up that he should choose me. He was sober the day we were married, I saw to that myself," she continued with an air of conscious rectitude. "My conscience! It was an awful-like honeymoon! He started in when he reached Gles'ga, and he was still at it, when, after running over the city half the night, I got him back to his hotel and then on the train for Sandisbrae. Save us! When he got there!" She shook her head. "Well, I kept him alive for more than a year and the doctor himself said it was a wonder that he had lasted a week. His end was very peaceful after he got over the idea he had that he was being chased by Robert Bruce's spider—and all its family." She looked at Sir George with a kind of triumph in her eye.

"He was an extraordinary man, grand even in the D. T.'s! He couldn't even have a delirium like anybody else.

She stopped and wiped her eyes. "I was fond of him," she said simply. "In spite of all, I was a proud woman that he selected me to be his Second, and however you have felt toward him and me, Sir Geordie, you must mind I did it for your best interests, and he was an extraordinary man."

"I think," Sir George told her, "it is you who are an extraordinary woman," he hesitated and then said it, "Lady Sandison."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Marriage After Dark Not Legal in England

Although divorce is on the increase in England, it is difficult to achieve and seekers after legal separations often find it easier to find a flaw in the union itself, thus bringing about a dissolution on the ground that they were not truly married in the first place.

English courts have held, for example, that marriage by registration may be legal in Russia but cannot be so recognized in England. A Russian woman who sued for judicial separation and maintenance, stating that she and her mate had registered their union in Moscow, got the separation all right, but had no legal claim for maintenance when the court said:

"I have come to the conclusion that the petitioner and respondent were never husband and wife."

In another case a man accused of deserting his family defended himself on the ground that he married the girl after dark.

He was not joking. A marriage in England outside the hours between eight in the moring and three in the afternoon is no more legal than a whisky and soda bought at a bar after regular hours.

Lesson for December 21

TIMOTHY: THE INFLUENCE OF HOME TRAINING

LESSON TEXT—Acts 16:1-3; Philippians 2:19-22; II Timothy 1:1-6; 3: 14-16.

GOLDEN TEXT—And that from a child thou hast known the holy scriptures, which are able to make thee wise unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Living for Christ in Our Homes.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Religious Training in the Home.

I. Timothy's Parentage (Acts 16:1). His father was a Greek and his mother a believing Jewess. On his mother's side, at least, he had a godly ancestry. Frequently the influence of the mother makes the son. A pious mother and a pious grandmother were back of Timothy. How thankful to God ought those to be who have been blessed with a godly ancestry. Christian heredity and training are vital elements which go to make up Christian life.

II. Timothy's Training (I Tim. 1:5; II Tim. 3:14, 15).

His wise and faithful mother and grandmother carefully nurtured him in God's Word. He knew the Scriptures from childhood through their training. The faith which came to him through his grandmother and mother did not come through the laws of heredity, but through careful training and teaching.

Three factors were involved in his training:

1. Godly ancestors. Those who have been blessed with godly ancestors should thank God for them. Those who are to be the parents of the coming generation should see to it that their children are not handicapped by a wrong life and wrong teaching.

2. A Christian home. The young of the human race must remain for the longest period under the influence of their parents. Unending existence and exalted destiny demand long and careful training. The goodness and wisdom of God are vitally reflected in this provision for humanity.

3. A diligent study of the Holy Scriptures. Timothy not only was taught the Scriptures from childhood, but was commanded diligently to study them (ch. 2:15). No home training or hereditary influence can possibly take the place of personal study of the Bible.

III. Timothy's Call (Acts 16:2, 3).

While on his second missionary journey in company with Silas, Paul found Timothy at Lystra near Derbe. Perhaps he had been converted on Paul's first missionary journey, but hearing a favorable report of him by the brethren, Paul circumcised him so as not to offend the Jews, because his father was a Greek. This was in harmony with the decision of the Jerusalem council. It was a case where conciliation was possible without compromise of truth. From this time to the end of Paul's life, Timothy was his devoted companion.

IV. Timothy's Character.

1. Of a retiring disposition (II Tim. 1:6). He had received a gift from God at the hands of the apostle but it needed to be stirred up; that is, fanned into a flame. Such a temperament would mature in touch with a great personality like Paul. Each Christian has a gift from God's hand. It is highly important that the God-given gift be stirred up.

2. Courageous (II Tim. 2:1-8). Having been stirred up and freed from the spirit of fear, he deliberately identified himself with Paul in his sufferings and trials. Courage is greatly needed in doing the Lord's work.

3. Faithful (Phil. 2:20). Timothy tarried in the difficult field of Ephesus through many years. He was the only man of the proper fidelity to minister to the Philippians. The secret of his faithfulness in such a position was his fidelity to God's word.

V. Timothy's Ministry.

1. As a fellow missionary with Paul (Phil. 2:22). Paul testified that Timothy, as a son with a father, had served with him in the gospel.

2. As pastor of the church at Ephesus (I Tim. 1:3, 4). Here Timothy labored for many years, tactfully meeting the difficulties of that great church. The secret of his ministry, as that of all Christian ministers, was that he had implicit confidence in the Scriptures as God's Word, and that he diligently studied them so as rightly to divide them in meeting the needs of those to whom he ministered. This is the only way to meet the needs which arise in the difficult field of a pastor.

Humility

Humility is not only a virtue in itself, but a vessel to contain other virtues—like embers which keep the fire alive that is hidden under it. It emptieth itself by a modest estimation of its own worth, that Christ may fill it.—Thomas Adams.

Working With God

If I can put one touch of a rosy sunset into the life of any man or woman, I shall feel that I have worked with God.—George Macdonald.

How Old Are You?

By The Stars In Heaven—I'm 47

The Spirit Of Youth Is In Me

Millions of men and women the world over know that the Kruschen Method of burning up fat and getting weight down to a healthy and shapely basis is a safe and sensible one.

But there are millions more who are not fat who ought to know that Kruschen Salts keeps the body free from harmful toxins and acids—puts into your internal organs, nerves, glands and fibres the six vitalizing minerals that nature says it should have if you are to be vigorous, energetic and free from petty ailments.

If your weight is normal and you have no fat to lose—eat anything you want and take one-half a teaspoon of Kruschen Salts in a glass of hot water before breakfast every morning.

An 85 cent bottle lasts four weeks—and after the first bottle you will realize what a wonderful rejuvenating combination Kruschen is—You will probably feel younger than you have for years with clearer skin, brighter eyes and keener mind.

You can get Kruschen Salts at any real drug store in the world—It's the inexpensive way to have glorious health and to keep it.—Adv.

Hard to Figure Reason for His Staying Away

"Women get away with murder," remarked Jack Doyle, fight promoter, "because it is generally understood that they don't mean what they say. This always gives them a loophole when things go wrong.

"Funny part of it is that the women themselves do not seem to think their remarks should be taken literally. Like Gwenny.

"'What's the trouble between you and Freddie?' a friend asked her.

"'I'm sure I don't know,' said Gwenny. 'He hasn't been to see me for a week, just because I told him I never wanted to see him again.'"—Exchange.

Mother of Four Babies

"Although I am only 22 years old, I have four babies to care for. Before my first baby was born my mother urged me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was so terribly weak. I had to lie down four or five times a day. After three bottles I could feel a great improvement. I still take the Vegetable Compound whenever I need it for it gives me strength to be a good mother to my family."—Mrs. Vern L. Dennings, 510 Johnson Street, Saginaw, Michigan.

CLASSIC AND QUAINT BROUGHT INTO THE FASHION PICTURE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

In the realm of evening frocks the very air breathes of romance. Styles of the past reincarnated into modes of the present, thus fashion's magic wand is working miracles. Would you be statuesque like a goddess of ancient Greece, or would you reflect the quaint charm of mid-Victorian days? You will find the answer in the lovely dine, dance, and party frocks which grace the 1930-31 midseason showings.

A gathering of the elite attired in formal evening regalia takes on somewhat the aspect of a historical pageant, for our contemporary fashionists have delved into the history of dress for inspiration, gathering all that is loveliest irrespective of whether the period be that of the Middle ages, the first or the second empire or the golden age of Pericles.

And so fashion's followers find themselves living in an age of romance so far as evening dress is concerned. Side by side in the procession of beautifully clad women goes sauntering a chastely classic gown of Grecian inspiration, its statuesque silhouette contrasted by a quaint frock whose naive fall-off-the-shoulder decolletage is its charm.

In the picture we see the classic lines of an exquisite lace gown silhouetted against the background in contrast to the girlish dance frock pictured in the foreground. Youth is expressed in every detail of the dainty dress of powder blue satin, which features a beguiling-off-the-shoulder and puff-sleeve arrangement. Romantic necklines such as this and which recall the adorable portraits of sweet Jennie Lind in her lovely low-neck gowns, have found their way into the modern picture, much to the delight of those who are seeking the picturesque. The circular skirt of this winsome frock is handsomely encrusted with lace. The ornate decoration of appliqued flowers adds beauty.

It is a far cry from the ingenue frock in the foreground to the sophisticated lace model as shown, and yet who can say which is the loveliest? Jeanette Loff, a recent recruit to the Hollywood clan of film stars, wears this lace fantasy and it is particularly becoming to her graceful, slender figure. The lace of which it is made is a pinkish beige posed over a satin foundation in exactly the same shade. Its cape effect and its wide flounce are important style details.

Coffee Meets Food Law Requirements

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Does your breakfast coffee have a smooth rich flavor with just a slight sharpness to give it refreshing zest?

It should have, and most of the 1,400,000,000 pounds imported annually into the United States do have, says the United States Department of Agriculture. Inspectors of the food and drug administration seldom find coffee to be in violation of the pure food law. Adulterated coffee is immediately seized to prevent sale to a public which wants and has a right to expect its coffee to be pure.

The coating of the coffee berry known as "silver skin" has no beverage value and is removed before roasting. This skin not only covers the berry but continues into the fold or crease, from which it is very difficult to remove. Some of this chaff is taken out in the process of grinding, but a small amount is sure to remain. Any good brand of ground coffee bought at the store may be expected to contain approximately 2 per cent of coffee chaff, say the officials.

However, inspectors in Mississippi recently found a shipment of coffee which contained as high as 20 per cent chaff in some samples. They immediately recommended seizure. Examination by government scientists indicated that a very clever attempt was being made to defraud the public. Chaff from the coffee bean had evidently been ground, molded, and mixed with whole coffee.

Cleanliness Vital When One Has Cold

For the person who cooks the food as well as for those who eat it, there is no more important health measure than thorough and frequent hand cleansing with soap, warm water and a nail brush. The woman who is suffering from a cold or any other communicable disease is doing herself as well as her family an injustice by pottering around the kitchen when she should be in bed. If there is some good reason why it is necessary for her to be up and about, she must be especially careful to use plenty of clean handkerchiefs and to keep her hands clean.

Brittany Druid Stones

Brittany, the "Land of the Sea," is one of the oldest lands in the world, and its Druid stones of colossal size date back thousands of years before the Christian era and, like those at Stonehenge, in England, are visited annually by thousands.

St. Malo, on the coast, has the appearance of a large ship at anchor. It stands on a rocky peninsula and is surrounded by massive walls which were built in the Sixteenth century as a defense against the French and the British. The town is named after a Welsh monk named St. Malo, or Maclou, who held a bishopric there in the Sixth century.

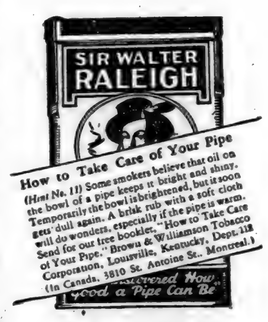
BUT if you must convince yourself, try some ordinary tobacco in an old pipe. Note result in chalk on the bottom of your left shoe.

Then try some ordinary tobacco in your favorite pipe. Note on other shoe. Finally, try some Sir Walter Raleigh smoking tobacco in any good pipe. You won't have to note it anywhere, for you'll notice with the very first puff how much cooler and milder it is. It stays so, right down to the last puff in the bowl—rich, mellow and fragrant. Your regular tobacconist has Sir Walter, of course. Try a tin—today.



How to Take Care of Your Pipe

(Hint No. 1) Some smokers believe that oil on the bowl of a pipe keeps it bright and shiny. Temporarily the bowl is brightened, but it soon gets dull again. EVENING STORY FOR THE CHILDREN WHEN THE SANDMAN COMES

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

You have heard before how parrots behave in a zoo when the rain falls down on the roof, but now you must hear the story of Mrs. Red Winged Parrot and some of her friends.

"Of course," said Mrs. Red Winged Parrot, "it would not be surprising to me if you wondered if I really and truly meant what I said a few minutes ago.

They Spread Their Wings.

"Parrots are often not supposed to mean what they say. People like to have parrots copy them, and then they say we are just copying parrots.

"Very ungrateful of them, after they have taught us to copy them, and wish us to copy them.

"However, I must continue.

"You see a great many people take baths at one time, and then, at quite another time altogether, they take their drinks of water.

"They don't save time as we do, and yet they are always rushing around as if they were trying to catch up with the time that they have lost."

"What you say is absolutely correct," shrieked Mrs. Yellow Winged Parrot, shaking her head wisely.

"Now we parrots can drink and have our baths at the same time.

"We can open our beaks for the drops of water to refresh us, and we can shake our feathers and get fine and clean.

"And all at the same time."

"So we can," said Mrs. Yellow Winged. "There is certainly no mistake about that."

"Now you take our cousins who live in people's houses," said Mrs. Red Winged, "they never get over that sensible idea and habit of ours.

"They may hear the rain on a tin roof and they spread their wings all in readiness to get their bath.

"Of course the tin roof keeps the water from falling in—which I think is most extremely stupid, but at the same time I must admit that it is pretty smart of our dear cousins never to forget the ways of parrots who are wild."

"Isn't it splendid of them!" said Mrs. Yellow Winged, proudly.

"And they do the same thing when they are kept in bird houses and hear the rain pattering on the glass," said Mrs. Red Winged.

"Ah yes, they do, the sensible dears," said Mrs. Yellow Winged.

"To be sure," continued Mrs. Red Winged. "But now we must be having supper.

"Do you eat twice a day, too?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Yellow Winged.

It began to rain now, and as these parrots were in the zoo they spread their wings as though the rain would fall down on them.

Alas, they found as usual, that rain would not go through a roof.

To parrots that is always a disappointment.

Checking Up on the Cost of Food

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Most home makers think they know in a general way the probable cost of the food materials needed in their families for a week or a month. Nevertheless there is a surprising fluctuation in the monthly item for food at different seasons. It is due not only to the kinds of food available and the local retail prices, but also to changes in the make-up of the household, the number of house or dinner guests, the number of days in the month, and even the number of hired persons who eat meals.

For example, the father may be away on a business trip during February, which is a short month, anyway. Because of his absence there may be little or no company. In March, a thirty-one-day month, the spring holidays from school or college begin, the boy or girl away from home returns, bringing a friend, perhaps, and there is more or less entertaining. Spring sewing or cleaning possibly adds a dressmaker or charwoman to the number of persons to whom midday or other meals are served. Regardless of the current prices for food, it is clearly impossible to compare the March bills with those of February.

Nobody can tell you how much either month's food should cost, but there is a simple way to estimate this with reasonable accuracy. If you have previously kept accurate accounts and know how many persons ate meals during each month, try this plan, suggested by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture: Get out the bills for the same month last year, and divide the total by the number of days in that month. Divide again by the number of persons in the family. What is the result? Forty cents? Fifty cents? Sixty cents? This is the approximate cost of feeding one person for one day at your standard of living. If there were many changes in the make-up of the household for the month you are analyzing, you may prefer to credit each person with the number of days he or she ate meals and divide the total food cost by the total number of person-days. The result will be similar to the other figure. If you have no records make the best guess you can, and when you make next month's food budget revise the estimate as necessary.

Swiss Steak

Pound into both sides of a three-pound round steak with the edge of a thick saucer, one cupful of flour well seasoned with salt, black pepper and paprika. Sear brown on both sides in sweet fat in a very hot skillet. Pour in enough hot water to half cover the steak. Cover the skillet tightly and let simmer, not boil, for an hour. More water may be added if necessary. The rich sauce formed is very delicious. Serve with potatoes, boiled hominy or rice and one green vegetable.

Some Timely Hints for the Homemaker

If doughnuts crack in cooking, try a little less baking powder in the recipe.

Hearty meals should be followed by light rather than rich desserts.

Molasses is recommended for children's sweets because it is rich in iron and calcium.

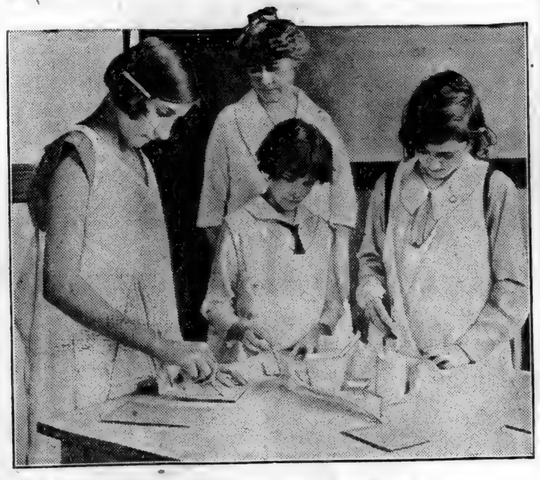
The wisest parents wish to understand and help rather than to dictate to their children.

Attractive garnishes often make the difference between an appetizing dish than an uninteresting one.

Apples baked in maple sirup, with a piece of butter in the center, will be a rich satisfying dessert for dinner.

A good workman is known by his tools, so the home maker buys kitchen utensils of good quality and takes good care of them.

Poisoned Paste Exterminates Silverfish



Preparing a Poison Paste to Get Rid of Silverfish or Slickers.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When you give the attic its annual turning out you may see some shiny little flat insects darting here and there, especially near books and clothing and other stored articles. They are silverfish or slickers, which damage textiles such as cotton, rayon, or silk fabrics by eating the size or finish, if it contains starch, glue, or gum. This insect likes a dark place where it can live undisturbed. Frequent use and airing of clothing and other articles is the best protection against destruction by silverfish.

Silverfish may be easily poisoned by spreading poisoned paste on cardboards. The girls in the illustration are preparing poisoned paste to use in this way. The poison is made by adding a small quantity of white arsenic to half a cupful of paste made from flour and boiling water. Care must be taken to destroy all leftover paste and to cleanse the dishes and brushes used in preparing the paste and the boards. Put the cardboards where children cannot get them.

SOME FOOD HINTS THAT WILL INTEREST THE FAMILY

By NELLIE MAXWELL

Every mother knows how hard it is to force children to eat the food they should eat. The only way to accomplish this is to begin with the baby. Food and feeding time will be a happy time if habits of correct eating are formed early. The child who has had his own way in all things is going to make a difficult adult to live with or for other people to enjoy being with. It takes but little patience to train a baby, but often it is difficult when the child has become willful.

All foods given children should be simple, well cooked, easy to digest and attractively served. Tasting the food before being served is an important duty for the mother or nurse, to be sure it is palatable, for often dislikes have been formed that are hard to overcome by one dish of poor food.

The following are a few breakfast suggestions:

Orange Honey Crispy.—Peel an orange and separate into sections, removing the membrane. Allow six to eight sections for each serving. Dip each section into honey and turn over in rice or corn flakes, puffed wheat or any of the light cereals which have been warmed until crisp in the oven. Arrange on an attractive plate and serve. Maple sirup may be used in place of honey for variety.

Breakfast Cocktail.—One beaten egg yolk, a pinch of salt, a teaspoonful of honey and the juice of two oranges. Beat well and serve cold. This supplies iron from the egg yolk and vitamins from the orange juice. This is a good drink to give as a mid-meal.

All the above recipes are equally good for the nursing mother who needs to take as much liquid as possible.

For a child of six years the addition of the juice of half a lemon to a glass of orange juice is recommended to give increased vitamin C and to prevent and cure tooth troubles.

Frosted Orange Juice.—Into a large glass pour a cupful of orange juice. Add a spoonful of vanilla ice cream and stir a moment, then serve.

Panned Oysters.—Drain the oysters and put into a hot pan with two tablespoonfuls of butter for each pint of oysters, sprinkle with salt and pepper and cook until the edges curl. Serve very hot with finely minced onion and french dressing on lettuce.

Preserved Watermelon Rind.—Cut the red portion from the watermelon rind, remove the green skin and cut the rind into inch pieces. Soak the rind in lime water using two quarts of water and two tablespoonfuls of lime; let stand three and one-half hours. Drain and let stand in fresh cold water for an hour. Drain and cook for an hour and a half in clear water, or until tender. Drain, make a sirup of two pounds of sugar and four quarts of water, drop in the rind after it has begun to boil, add one thinly sliced lemon that has been cooked in very little water until transparent. Add such spices as one wishes and cook until the sirup is thick. Pack in jars and seal.

Take canned cherries or large strawberries drained from their juice, toss them into egg white and sugar prepared as for a meringue. Chill and serve in sherbet glasses.

"The idea that presenting scissors as a gift will cut friendship is shear nonsense."

For one hundred years the old andiron had never left its post.

For one hundred years it had served the fire faithfully and well.

But now it had to be mended. It was going to be taken to the blacksmith shop to have a piece of iron fastened to its one-hundred-year-old leg.

Grandma told the man to be very careful when he carried it up the street.

"Remember," she cautioned the man, "to carry it with great care, for the outside world will seem very strange to the andiron which has spent its whole life by the fire.

"It will be astonished by the excitement of a street. It will be a little nervous. So be very careful."

The man was very careful. The andiron went into the shop, carried by the man. The blacksmith shop and the fire looked natural, in a way, to the andiron, and it was a relief after the excitement of the street.

After the andiron was mended it was brought back again. Its partner listened to the account of the street and of the shop.

"You've had adventures," said its partner, as the fire crackled.

"You will have to tell me all about it at night when all is quiet and when we're here by ourselves."

And the old andiron promised that it would.

Ah, yes, once more it was back in its place. Once more it was at home.

"I'm happy to be home again," the andiron said that night after everybody had gone to bed and ashes had been put over the fire so that no sparks would fly out.

"Yes, I'm happy to be at home again. I'm not one for the outside world.

"It was cold going up the street, very, very cold. I like the warmth of my own fire.

"I'm a homebody. I love my own fireside just as some people do.

"The outside world may be very fine, but give me my own hearth, with you, dear partner, and the family and the fire."

"I'm thankful," said the andiron's partner, "that you feel like this about your own home fire."

"There is nothing like it," said the one-hundred-year-old andiron, and its brass face glowed in the dying embers of the fire.

ARRANGING THE TABLE

MANY persons use doilies and runners on their dining room tables —to save the tablecloths—and others use heavy hushers, asbestos pads and tablecloths in order to save the surface of the dining table.

There is something amusing about the situation. Pray, why treasure the surface of the table so, if it is never going to be seen? Yet if you use a fine table every day unprotected by pads and hushers the surface soon becomes marred and stained.

While the craze for doilies and runners was at its height housewives probably exaggerated the amount of time saved in this way. As a matter of fact the bare table plus runners and doilies probably takes just as much time as the table covered with husher and cloth. If you leave the setting of the dining table entirely to a maid you probably have found that better results are obtained with the old-fashioned cloth.

Few persons know how to care for a bare table properly. It should be cleaned after each using, of course, yet you should be careful not to wash it as you would a kitchen table. It should be occasionally oiled to preserve the finish of the wood, and yet the oil should be used ever so sparingly and well rubbed in so that not a suspicion of it will remain, for it is certainly not pleasant to eat from a bare table that still shows vestiges of furniture oil.

No table is probably worth the amount of concern that some housewives bestow upon their dining room tables. It is foolish to use as a dining table a precious heirloom. When you use pad and tablecloth, asbestos mats should be beneath the places where hot platters and vegetable dishes will be placed—that is if you serve dinner. There is no need for asbestos pads under the dinner plates for plates should never be warmed to such a degree that they will need more than the husher between them and the surface of the table. If doilies are used then you should have asbestos pads to fit under the doilies used beneath the platters, etc.

SOCIAL LIABILITIES

ASSETS and liabilities are important factors not only in the economic world but also in the world of social values.

The idler is a social liability. Like the parasite in plant life he tries to live at the expense of others without making any effort to earn his own living. He is the man who feels that the world owes him a living and endeavors to exact from society what he thinks is his due. The idler's philosophy of life takes various forms. He is the wandering tramp who is quite content to depend upon the generosity of those from whom he begs but looks askance at the woodpile. Rather would he go hungry than do any work. That the devil has mischief for idle hands to do is undoubtedly demonstrated by the idle man who most frequently is found among the criminal classes. He is the petty thief, safe wrecker, bomb thrower, a social liability wherever he goes.

L. A. Barrett.

Another liability is the spendthrift. Some years ago when wages were high and work plentiful money was spent lavishly by those who could least afford it. Truly they earned the money and had the right to spend it; but a proper appreciation of their obligation, not only to themselves but also to society, would have demanded the practice of economy rather than extravagance. The suffering in the present period of depression would not be so intense had more funds been laid up for a rainy day. A substantial reserve in one's bank account accumulated in days of prosperity pays big dividends not only in one's comfortable feeling of security, but also in the absence of strain in times of adversity. Through the proper exercise of economy the spendthrift would not become a liability upon society.

The pessimist is another social liability. The optimist is the man who sees a light in the future. He may endure hardship and meet disappointments but his eye is never away from that light. He summons courage and strength to press forward because he knows that everything will work out all right. He radiates into the lives of others the same faith and hope that burns in his own heart. The pessimist is the man who extinguishes that light and consequently, with neither faith nor hope in his own heart, radiates only gloom and despair. The idler, spendthrift and pessimist are three social liabilities. The optimist, who both toils and saves, is the most important social asset.

Educator Refuses to See Limit on Learning

Instances of elderly people who have accomplished prodigies of learning are frequently adduced as encouragement to the average person of mature years. If so-and-so, the famous musician, could learn Hebrew at eighty, then John Smith need not despair of mastering any subject he may fancy, even though his years of youthful vigor in acquisition may be long behind him. Thus the argument has run, probably without quite convincing John Smith. For he has felt, as most of us feel, an increasing difficulty of concentration and retention as his school and college years have receded into the past.

Dr. Herbert Sorensen of the University of Minnesota has been making experiments and he says that the only trouble with John Smith's mind at fifty is that he hasn't kept it exercised.—Waterbury Republican.

HOME BUREAU

The Concord Township Ladies Home Bureau held their Christmas meeting December 12 at the home of Mrs. E. R. Kinsey. The home was beautifully decorated with Christmas red and green Japanese roping, poinsettias and crepe paper, a small Christmas tree adorned a table in the center of the room under which was placed the Christmas gift exchange. At the noon hour the table was set with every sort of appetizing dainty, the committee in charge serving with these, creamed chicken, mashed potatoes and coffee.

At 1:30 the meeting was called to order; yearly reports were read from the secretary, treasurer and flower committee. Monthly report was read by the secretary and accepted, the following committees were appointed by the president, Membership: Hattie Draggoo, Marie Draggoo, Mayola Kinsey, Mable Baker, Ann Sechler, Grace Dilley, Inez Hadsell, Pluma Hamilton, Leona Mason and Beulah Coburn; Flower: Harriett Johnson, Minnie Ulm and Laura Washler; Finance: Mary Krise, Anna Tustison, Carrie Morr, Anna Rickett, Minnie Pepple and Nellie Lindley.

Thirty-one members responded to roll call after which the following program was given: Christmas carols led by Nettie Culbertson and Laura Washler; Christmas story, Millie Shull; Christmas reading, Laura Washler and a reading by little Miss Paddy Byers, the numbers being well given and much enjoyed by all. The Christmas exchange was then conducted by Mrs. Minnie Pepple, each member receiving a gift which carried with it the best wishes of the giver for a happy Christmas. As all left for their homes, the feeling was general that the day was well spent and a happy ending of a year's work and recreation in the club. Two guests were present Mrs. Driver and Mrs. Byers, one new name was added to roll that of Mrs. Pauline Simanton. The committee in charge of the day's program was Mrs. Mayola Kinsey, Mrs. Minnie Pepple and the 1930 officers, Mrs. Borthwick, Mrs. Cora Curie, Mrs. Millie Shull, Mrs. Pluma Hamilton and Mrs. Katy Storer. Next meeting will be held at the school house January 16, 1931.

Gertrude Borthwick.

RURAL HOUSEWIVES

The Rural Housewives Club met with Mrs. W. W. Wilder Friday afternoon, December 12th. After a short business session the following officers were elected to serve the next six months:

President, Gladys Hart.
Vice Pres., Almira Conine.
Secretary, Marie Trostel.
Treasurer, Gladys Murphy.
Press Correspondent, Minnie Gee.

The new president appointed Elizabeth Hart as superintendent of special numbers and the following sick committee, Dora Wilder, Pluma Hamilton, Cora Waltz.

The club gave a birthday shower in honor of Marie Trostel. Next meeting to be at Mrs. Claud Mason's, on Tuesday afternoon, December 30, at which time there will be a Christmas exchange. The hostess served a fine lunch of sandwiches, salad, meat loaf, plum pudding with whipped cream, wafers and coffee and passed the after dinner mints.

What Roger Brought Home

A Christmas Story

by MYRTLE KOON CHERRYMAN

ROGER was always bringing home something! His twelve-year-old ideas of fun, household benefit and chivalry were sometimes embarrassing to the family. This time, it was a foreign looking woman, and luckily Mr. Damon was busy in the library, so he didn't have the shock of seeing her first.

Mrs. Damon, as she lay in bed, recovering from an attack of flu, had the news broken to her gently by Roger, who came in and closed the door after him.

"Mother, when I went down to the station to mail that letter on the train for Dad, I saw a woman sitting there crying, and I found out she'd come to work for some family, and they hadn't met her. She'd lost the address and could not remember their name—isn't that dumb? So I brought her home to have something to eat—she hadn't had any breakfast, and was afraid to go to a hotel."

"But, darling, did you tell her I was sick, and that our maid had to go home for a funeral?"

"Yes, I explained that we were in a pickle, too, and were trying to decide whether Dad and I should go to a hotel for our dinner."

"Well, you are going! It's foolish of you to stay home because the doctor won't let me get up yet. The turkey will keep, and if my fever doesn't return today, I can get up tomorrow; Mary will be back next day, and we can have our Christmas dinner then."

"Well, we'll see—but now I'm going to take her into the kitchen—she's Mrs. Schwartz—German, I guess—and get out the eggs and things for her. I told her I'd make her some toast, but that I wasn't very good on coffee. Dad could make it fine, but I was afraid he wouldn't be enthusiastic."

"Hardly!" exclaimed Mrs. Damon, remembering her husband's complex against doing anything not on the program. "Well, do the best you can, dear—but I hate to think of the way that kitchen must look after two days of male housekeeping."

She went back to her reading, and as the house was quiet, she finally fell asleep, making up for the hours lost worrying in the night about what her "boys" would do for holiday festivity in this bleak situation.

Two hours later she was roused by a gentle tap at her door, and in response to her "Come!" Roger entered, carrying a dainty tray, with a cup of steaming chocolate, and some attractive little cakes.

"She made it—the chocolate—and these are some kuchens, or whatever you call 'em—she had in her bag, like they make in the old country. And she's got all the dishes washed. I helped put 'em away—and now, what d'ye s'pose?"

"She has unfolded her wings and flown back to heaven!" guessed Mrs. Damon, sipping the most delicious cocoa she had ever tasted.

"No! She's got the turkey in the oven, and is getting the dinner! I'm going to the phone now to see if I can locate the folks that sent for her. She remembered the name—Martin. She told me half an hour ago, but I didn't want to hurry too much, because I wanted her to get the dinner cooked first."

"Oh, you scamp!" laughed his mother. "Go right to the phone and call up all the Martins. There are so many it may take until the turkey is done, anyway."

"Yes, it's pretty near ready now!"

Whether Roger, artfully timed his search for lost employers or not, they were located just as dinner was ready, and were so jubilantly grateful that they told Mrs. Schwartz to serve the dinner and eat her own; they would send for her in an hour to cook their own evening meal. It seemed they had expected her at another station, and had worried all morning over what had happened to the poor woman, as well as what would happen to their own poor dinner.

When the angel-cook left at four o'clock, she would take no pay for her work, saying: "I hat n gut Chrismus, und dis liddle boy vas my Kris Kringle."

Christmas in A. D. 190

Christmas was first celebrated as a religious festival about A. D. 190.

The Extra Christmas Plate

By ROBERT J. C. STEAD

ON THE fourth Christmas in succession Nellie Martin set an extra plate. On past Christmases her husband and the two boys had pretended not to have noticed it. But this year Fred Martin, walking into the big dining room just as his wife was adding the finishing touches to her Christmas table, stopped when his eye fell on the extra plate.

"I think you shouldn't set it, Nellie," he said, gently. "It only reminds us of—things we would be better to forget."

Mrs. Martin brushed a capable, floury hand quickly across her eyes. Things would go blurry when she thought of Lucy.

"Let me leave it just once more," she almost pleaded. "It is more than four years now since Lucy went, and every day I am hoping for her back. Particularly at Christmas I like to think that her place is set and waiting for her. Oh, Fred, if we could let her know."

Fred's hand found hers, where it had rested a moment against the table for support. "I know," he said huskily. "I was wrong in turning her out as I did. I thought the honor of the family demanded it. I thought perhaps she would write; that is, if she is still . . ."

He left the sentence unfinished. Death might not have been unwelcome to Lucy, and four years of silence left them to draw their own conclusions.

"Lucy is too proud to write," his wife asserted. "And yet, I have always felt that sometime she would come back. Perhaps at Christmas.

That is the time of year when one just can't help thinking of home."

"If that Blake boy had been any good," Fred lamented. "She was just throwing herself away on him. That is why I gave her the choice of giving him up or getting out. I wanted to save her. And she got out."

"I know," his wife agreed. "You meant it for the best. Arthur Blake was said to be wild and useless, but the Blake's are a good family, and I've often noticed that boys of a good family generally straighten up again, even if they do go a little wild for a while. You know, Fred, when I married you there were people who said you were, well, just a little—"

"But I got a wife like you," her husband answered. "That makes all the difference."

"Yes, and Arthur got a wife like Lucy—if he married her," Nellie Martin insisted. "Let me leave the plate once more. I'm not giving up hope—"

At that moment the boys were heard coming in by the kitchen door. There were muffled voices, and a sound as though they were helping some one.

George, the elder, appeared in the dining room door, and his face summoned his mother.

"Some one here to see you, Mom," he said, in an awed voice.

In the kitchen Mrs. Martin found a woman sitting on a chair, her head turned away, her figure enclosed in a frayed cloth coat. Soberly she crossed the kitchen floor and turned the head to her eyes.

"Lucy!" she cried. "Lucy—"

The girl made as though she would speak, but seemed overcome. Her mother dropped to her knees beside her, chafing her hands, speaking words of endearment, crying for Fred and the boys.

"We found her in the snow, just between the barn and the house," the boys explained. "She seemed to have fallen there."

But right then Lucy seemed to come to life. She sprang to her feet.

"Mother—Dad—I can't keep it from you any longer. Please help me off with my coat."

Willing hands drew it from her shoulders. "Why, Lucy!" her mother exclaimed, "you are well dressed."

"Well enough, mother. You see, Arthur wanted to be sure how you would receive your erring daughter before he would agree to come in."

"Arthur!"

"Yes. He is in the cutter with little Nellie, just beyond the wind-break. Boys, will you run and tell him?"

The boys dashed off, but Fred Martin seemed the most excited of all. "Two extra plates, Mother!" he shouted. "Two extra plates—and a high chair!"

WINTER PIGS CAN MAKE MONEY

(By Prof. W. B. Krueck)

Too often the Fall pig is treated like an orphan child—neither can succeed if given no attention.

The Minnesota Experiment Station has demonstrated quite effectively that practically as much money can be made on Fall pigs as on Spring pigs provided they are properly fed.

Pushing the pigs by liberal feeding early in the Fall in order that they may obtain some size before cold weather arrives, is one of the important factors in successful winter feeding of hogs.

In doing this, however, the feeder must keep in mind that Fall and Winter feeding do not provide some of the things that are ordinarily provided by Summer and Spring seasons. Therefore, the ration must help to supply the things that nature is unable to supply for the Fall pigs.

The little Fall pig ordinarily is not a very good scavenger. Too often, however, he is asked to find his living largely in the corn field, depending largely upon waste in harvesting. This, however, does not produce results. It is very essential that a complete ration be fed. A variety of protiens will help supply the vitamins and proteins that are most essential for successfully starting these pigs.

In addition to proteins and vitamins, certain minerals are essential. Several of the Experiment Stations have demonstrated the importance of certain minerals to keep these pigs in proper condition.

For instance, a lack of iron has a tendency to lower the hemoglobin content of the blood and develops an anemic condition in pigs that are suckling brood sows. It requires a very small quantity of iron to supply this and keep the blood of the pig in condition to function efficiently. Therefore, the importance of a complete ration cannot be over emphasized in starting Fall pigs.

More liberal feeding is also essential. The government has answered this question and demonstrated the economy of self-feeding both brood sow and pigs while suckling and has showed that practically 160 pounds of feed can be saved on each hundred pounds of pork produced during this period. Therefore, the good feeder will take better care of his Fall pigs and place before them a good pig meal in self-feeders and give them a start before cold weather hits them.

SHALL I RAISE BROILERS THIS YEAR?

By Prof. P. G. Riley

December, January and February are the months in which chicks for broiler purposes are usually hatched. Ordinarily a good market is found for broilers which are porduced from chicks hatched during these months. Last season, however, saw small or no profit made from these extra early hatches. One of the chief reasons for this was the very heavy holding of cold storage broilers, coupled with the business depression, which kept prices down to the point where there was no real money for the poultry raisers in the early broiler businese.

There are some conditions this year which indicate that the production of early broilers might be more profitable than last year. There are only sixty per cent as many broilers in storage this year as there were a year ago. The low prices of poultry meats during the past year have caused the public to become more accustomed to eating large amounts of chickens and particularly broilers. While present business conditions are not generally considered as good, the prospects are that the financial conditins will be as good or better than a year ago by the time these early hatched chicks become broilers. With only sixty per cent the number of broilers to draw from out of storage, broiler prices may be very satisfactory. Chick prices are likely to be somewhat lower than last year, and feeds are considerably below a year ago. These factors should indicate that the cost of production is likely to be lower and the price per pound higher, which are two important factors in making a profit from early hatched chicks.

Better equipment is required for these extra early chicks than for normal brooding. Unless good chicks are secured, the losses may be so heavy that it is difficult to make a profit. The problem of feeding is more important with these early chicks than with the later ones that have access to good range. After one's mind has been made up that there is a good possibility for putting the brooding equipment to double usage for next year in hatching out an early group of broilers before the laying stock for next year is brooded, it is very essential that the equipment be gotten in good shape, that chicks are purchased which will live, and that a tested feeding program is put into practice. These things, coupled with good management and sanitation, give promise of a profit in early broilers this year.

Scientists Find Many Metals in Human Body

Such figurative expressions as "a heart of gold," "the iron fist," and "with leaden feet" are recalled by the recent investigation of two French chemists. Through spectroscopic examination of the ashes of human organs, says Popular Science Monthly, they found there are copper, aluminum and a little silver in the heart; copper, aluminum and traces of the rare metal, titanium, in the lungs; cobalt, nickel, lead and silver in the pancreas; copper, lead and silver in the liver; aluminum, silver and copper in the kidneys and the near-by adrenal glands, and silver, tin and copper in the spleen.

The brain appeared to be rich in tin, and this metal was also found in the thyroid gland, in the neck, which also contained silver, copper, lead and zinc.

Real estate involved in the mortgage foreclosure suit of Lillie Johnson against Stanton Osborn has been sold by Sheriff John C. Armstrong to the plaintiff for $1,000 and the costs. The property is that formerly owned by Dan Myers in the west end of town. F. B. Leighty has been appointed as the receiver, by the court.

The alienations of affections suit of Henry Reinoehl of Smithfield township, against Jay A. Sutherland is scheduled for jury trial in the DeKalb circuit court next Friday. The plaintiff is demanding $10,000. He says in his complaint that he and his wife, Hazel, and their son, Billy Lee, lived happily until the defendant began calling at his home and paying attention to his wife. He came frequently, says the plaintiff, and they held clandestine meetings and in June, 1929, his wife told her husband she no longer cared for him and would not live with him. She left, divorced the plaintiff and then married the defendant.

CHRISTMAS DAY in OTHER LANDS

by Louise Hastings

"COME, Hedwig," called her mother. "It is time to light the candle!"

"Why do we light it, Mother?" asked five-year-old Hedwig, as her mother proceeded to light it and pass it to her daughter.

"Put it right here in the window, and then I will tell you a story," replied her mother.

Hedwig climbed into her mother's lap and the story began: "This is a legend that people have loved for many, many years. It is thought that on Christmas eve the Christ Child returns to earth in search of kind and deserving people. He wanders over hill and dale, from castle to hut. And people who think of this beautiful legend still do as they did in other days. They place lighted candles in their windows that he may see the way and not stumble and fall. Sometimes he does not find people who will open their hearts and doors for him; sometimes he finds the way dark and full of pitfalls; but on and on he goes searching for loving people. So every Christmas eve we place our lighted candle in our window so that if he comes this way he will not find it dark."

"I am glad we have a candle burning," said Hedwig. "Perhaps it will light the way for others, too. Do all little Austrian girls and boys light their candles on Christmas eve?"

"Yes," answered her mother, "and they do it in other parts of the world, too."

It was a beautiful, warm day and Jacko was getting ready for his

Hedwig of Austria.

Christmas celebration. "There go the bells, Mother," he called. "Shall I go now and meet the other children who will be in the parade?"

"No, child," his mother answered. "First we must go to the service. That is more important than the floral procession."

Jacko took his mother's hand and together they went to the church. He always loved that, and today, because it was Christmas, the service would be more beautiful than ever.

After this early service was over, Jacko's mother said, "Now you may join the children who are to parade the street, my child. Do you hear the music?"

Did he hear the music? He certainly did! It was a real band at the head of the procession, and Jacko couldn't get into line quick enough.

"How beautiful the flowers are!" he thought to himself as the procession of children and flowers and music began its march through the streets, "and how happy everybody looks!"

The afternoon was devoted to feasting and games and many kinds of enjoyment, but to Jacko the best part of the Christmas day was the floral parade, and for weeks and weeks he lived over again his marching with the other children, and he could hear the wonderful echo of the band long after the Christmas day and its celebration had passed.

Jacko of the Philippines.

"Father," asked little Marie, "when will Pere Noel come? May I sit up and greet him?"

"No, no, child. No little folks must greet Pere Noel," replied her father.

"Go over by the great log and keep very quiet. If you are good this Christmas eve Pere Noel will send down sugar plums in the night."

"When shall I put my shoes beside the Yule log, Father? Is it time now?" asked little Marie, who was impatient to have her part of the evening's festivities begin.

"Put your shoes by the great log when you go to bed, but keep very quiet now and listen to the older people sing their carols. Here come the minstrels to join with us," answered her father as he patted her on the head and smiled into her upturned eyes.

Keeping as quiet as her excited little heart would allow her, Marie watched the burning of the huge oak log and wondered many things. All around her was merriment and song, but she wanted the sugar plums that Pere Noel would bring if she were good, so she kept as silent as it was possible. But she wasn't silent inside, not a bit of it! She was just about bubbling over with joy and happiness, and all of the time she was thinking of the sugar plums which she hoped to find in her shoes, and the Christmas gifts which she would receive on the morrow and again on the New Year's day. Oh, it was a wonderful night, and she was glad that she belonged right there with her dear father and mother and the songs and the Yule log!

"Mother," said Florian, "isn't it nearly time to start for the cathedral?"

"Not yet," she replied. "You must be patient a while longer. Come and help me give little sister her supper. Just as soon as the sun sets you will hear the cannons boom forth and the Holy Season will begin. Soon after that we shall start because we want to get a good place in the cathedral tonight."

It was hard for Florian to wait. This was the first time he had been allowed to go to the church services on Holy Night. Always he had seen the others go to this most important church event, but he had had to remain at home. Now the time had come for him to enter into the ceremonies, and he could hardly wait to start.

To the children living in Rome this Holy Night service is the most wonderful one of all. There is the beautiful church music to be heard, and the whole service is very magnificent. Florian's heart beat fast as he thought of all he was going to see and hear.

Florian of Italy.

Hark! What was that noise? The cannons were booming! "Shall we go now, Mother?" he asked.

"Yes, Florian," she replied, taking him by the hand tenderly. "We will join the crowds on their way to the great cathedral and have a part in the great service." And little Florian was so happy he could hardly speak.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Jesus Wants Us to Live.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Some Examples of Christian Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons from the Lives of Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Fellowship with Christ.

For senior and adult classes two good methods of review may be used: The first may be designated character study of the principal persons mentioned in the lessons of the quarter; namely, Zacharias and Elisabeth, Mary, Simeon and Anna, Peter, Thomas, Zacchaeus, Stephen, Saul, and Timothy. In using this method assignment should be made the week before. The second method may be designated the summary method in which the salient facts should be noted followed with the leading teaching. In this case also, assignment should be made a week ahead.

Lesson for October 5.

The parents of John the Baptist were noted for their godliness. Zacharias means "Jehovah hath remembered." Elisabeth means "covenant maker." Every indication is that this pious couple wrought together for God. John the Baptist was a great man. Much can be expected of a child born of such parents and brought up in such a home.

Lesson for October 12.

God chose Mary to receive the greatest honor ever conferred upon a human being. To fill this place of honor meant exposure to suspicion as well as much suffering and hardship.

Lesson for October 19.

The ability of Simeon and Anna to discern the Messiah was due to a special revelation of the indwelling Holy Spirit, not merely because they were pure in heart. The grace which they possessed is available to every believer.

Lesson for October 26.

The believer experiences a vital conflict going on within. This conflict is due to the fact that he was once born of the flesh and afterward born of the Spirit. Victory over the flesh is to be obtained through the power of the indwelling Holy Spirit.

Lesson for November 2.

Peter through over-weaning confidence fell, even denying his Lord. The occasion of his denial was the sifting to which Satan subjected him. Through the prayer of Jesus Christ he was restored.

Lesson for November 9.

Thomas is everywhere presented in the Scriptures as of a skeptical mind, but he was an honest doubter. The Lord is pleased to be put to the test. No honest skeptic has ever remained in darkness.

Lesson for November 16.

The centurion's faith in Christ brought healing to a very dear servant. Genuine faith links man with Omnipotence.

Lesson for November 23.

A noble young ruler failed to get eternal life because his heart rested on earthly riches. Christ demands man's whole heart.

Lesson for November 30.

Zacchaeus did not allow difficulties to keep him from seeing the Lord. The sight of the Lord moved him to repentance. This is always true. He proved the genuineness of his repentance by making restitution.

Lesson for December 7.

Stephen, while called to minister in the temporalities of the church, witnessed of Christ in the energy of the Holy Spirit. He sealed his testimony with his blood. To those who are faithful unto death a crown of life shall be given.

Lesson for December 14.

The sight of Jesus Christ transformed Saul, the savage persecutor, into a most ardent witness for Christ.

Lesson for December 21.

Through the faith of a godly mother and grandmother, Timothy was nurtured for God. Careful home training is rewarded with pious children.

In Communion With God

As long as we dare to think that the secular life must be a separate existence from the spiritual, that earthly engagements cannot be fulfilled in uninterrupted communion with God, just so long are we living outside the purposes of God, contradicting the majesty of our true nature, and denying the efficacy of the gospel of the Lord Jesus.—Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe.

The Faith in God's Elect

Neither fear, neither danger, neither yet doubting, nor backsliding can utterly destroy and quench the faith of God's elect, but that always there remaineth with them some root and spark of faith, howbeit in their anguish they neither feel nor can discern the same.—John Knox.

FAIRY TALE FOR CHILDREN

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"How are you feeling?" asked Jingo Elephant of Bingo Elephant. They liked their names of Bingo and Jingo and the children called them by these names, too.

"Perfectly well, I thank you," said Bingo. "I had good exercise after the children had left. They did give us a lot today. Didn't you feel ill?"

"I didn't get quite as many as you did," said Jingo. "But wasn't it funny to see the children?

"At first they wanted to throw the peanuts into the yard. We looked so big that we frightened them—so they said.

"But the keeper told them not to mind us. And then they began to give us the peanuts, which we took into our trunks and so up to our mouths.

"They thought it was funny to see us do it."

"I wonder how they thought we fed ourselves?" asked Bingo.

"I'm sure I don't know," said Jingo. "I found out a splendid trick to do."

"What was it?" asked Bingo.

"I held several in my trunk at the same time when they were giving them to me so quickly.

"That was so I wouldn't miss any while I was getting my trunk up to my mouth."

"Oh, dear, oh, dear," laughed Bingo. "What are you laughing at?" asked Jingo.

"Because," said Bingo, "that is an old trick that has been known by elephants for ever and ever so long.

"As long as the children have been children and peanuts have been peanuts and elephants have been elephants."

"That's certainly a long time," agreed Jingo.

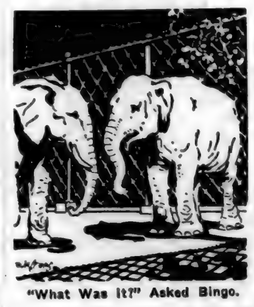
"You just thought it was a matter of course, because it's your nature—as is the nature of every elephant."

"It shows I am growing up," said Jingo, "and I like to grow up."

"I think the children had an idea you were grown up enough," said Bingo.

"Oh, yes, in size," said Jingo. "But I like to be old in years too."

It was night time now and they



"What Was It?" Asked Bingo.

were tired. They started to rest and sleep.

The next morning more children came to look at them, and again they brought peanuts which they put in the end of the trunks of the elephants and watched them carried up to their mouths.

Now the keeper thought it would be nice for the elephants to show off their tricks.

First Jingo made very handsome bows to the children, who were greatly amused.

Next Bingo carried the keeper on his back and up on his head. Then he let him down again.

Both elephants said their prayers and put their trunks around the keeper.

They let the keeper lie down underneath them in such a way that their big bodies did not touch him.

At the end of it all they were given water and hay for a reward.

It had been fun doing tricks for the children.

Hints for the Busy Housewives

To keep butter perfectly sweet and fresh the container should be washed and scalded for each new print.

Chocolate stains can be removed by soaking in cold water as soon as possible after stains appear.

To foster a love of reading in children, see that they are provided with comfortable chairs and good light placed conveniently near.

One can use ice received in the morning to make ice cream or ices and afterward use the ice for keeping the refrigerator cool.

A palatable way to serve cold boiled potatoes is to put them through the sieve, season them well with butter and salt, form into cones and brown in the oven.

Bottles can be deodorized with powdered black mustard seed and water.

Kerosene or gasoline should be applied to the machine at intervals. This cuts the hardened oil that may have accumulated.

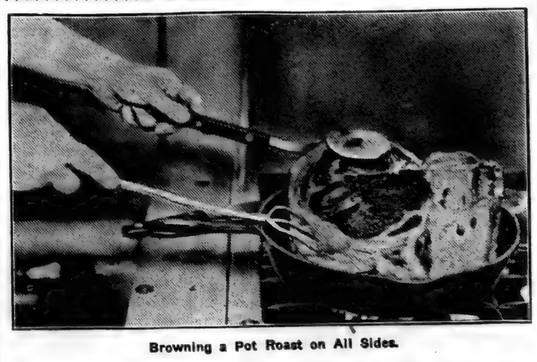
Make baking powder biscuits in the usual way, then when ready to roll out mix with a cupful of clean dry currants or chopped raisins.

When baking cookies turn the pan upside down and bake them on the bottom. They will bake more evenly both on the top and the bottom.

Tired Feet Need Hot Bath Every Night

Feet shut up in shoes sixteen or eighteen hours of the twenty-four need a daily bath to keep them in good condition. The best time to give feet their hot-water-and-soap bath is at night. In the morning a plunge in a bowl of cold water will make them hardy and keep the skin and flesh firm. Be sure to dry them thoroughly by vigorous rubbing. A little foot powder dusted over them is soothing and helps absorb excess moisture.

Cooking Less Expensive Cuts of Meat



Browning a Pot Roast on All Sides.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When you go to market to buy a piece of beef, you have to think of two points: What cut will best serve as a nucleus for the menu of the day, and at the same time fit the contents of the housekeeping purse?

Among the less tender and consequently less expensive cuts of beef, there are several which will appeal to the family taste if properly cooked. Heat, moisture, and slow cooking help to accomplish the desired result in such dishes as pot roast, breasted flank steak, swiss steak, or stews. Meat from the less tender cuts is also excellent when ground and used in various ways.

The method of cooking a pot roast is given in a popular free leaflet on the cooking of beef, prepared by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. Choose a piece of beef from the chuck ribs, cross arm, clod, round, or rump. From four to six pounds is a good weight. Wipe the meat with a damp cloth and rub it with salt, pepper, and flour. Next, brown the meat on all sides in a heavy kettle, using about three tablespoonfuls of beef fat. Slip a low rack under the meat, add one-half cupful of water, cover tightly, and simmer until tender. The time required for cooking cannot be definitely stated, but it will probably be about three hours. Turn the roast occasionally. When the meat is done, remove from the kettle, skim off the excess fat from the liquid, and measure the remainder. For each cupful of gravy desired, measure two tablespoonfuls of the fat and return to the kettle, add one and one-half to two tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until well blended and slightly browned. Then add one cupful of the meat stock or of cold water and stir until smooth. Season the gravy with salt, pepper, and chopped parsley. Serve the pot roast on a hot platter with buttered carrots and stuffed onions.

If desired, any of the following vegetables may be cooked in the pot with the roast: Carrots, onions, potatoes, and turnips. Add the vegetables during the last hour of cooking the meat if they are to be served whole or in quarters. If preferred they may be cooked longer and mashed and served as puree in the gravy.

SOME TESTED RECIPES

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The foundation of education consists of training a child to work, to love work, to put the energy of his entire being into work: to do that work which develops his body, mind and soul: to do that work most needed for the elevation of mankind.—Parker.

Nature has given us a delightful fruit well protected from all outside contamination. When yellow and still firm it is in its best condition. Flecks of brown on the skin is insurance that the fruit within is ripe. Even dark brown-skinned fruit, if firm, is preferred by many.

Broiled Bananas.—Allow one banana for each person. Cut into halves crosswise, then into halves lengthwise. Dip into melted butter, then into bread crumbs. Grease the broiler and set the bananas in place, broil first on one side, then on the other. Serve hot with a bit of lemon juice poured over each.

Frozen Fruit Salad.—Take five oranges, five bananas, one small can of pineapple, one bottle of maraschino cherries. Dice the fruit, mix well with one cupful each of salad dressing and whipped cream. Put into baking powder cans and pack in ice and salt for five hours. Cover each can with oiled paper before putting on the cover.

Mixed Fruit Salad.—Take one-half cupful each of shredded pineapple, chopped nut meats, orange pulp, grapefruit pulp, maraschino cherries and one and one-half cupfuls of sliced bananas. Mix the fruit, chill and serve with:

Dressing.—Beat the yolks of two eggs, add two tablespoonfuls of butter and one-half cupful of sugar creamed together; now add two tablespoonfuls each of vinegar and lemon juice, one tablespoonful of olive oil, one-half teaspoonful of mustard, one teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika and three-fourths of a cupful of whipped cream, after the dressing is cooked and chilled.

Banana Fruit Salpicon.—Cut four bananas into thin slices. Peel one orange and cut into slices lengthwise, add one cupful of grated pineapple, one cupful of sugar, the juice of a lemon and a cupful of peeled and seeded grapes. Mix lightly with the sugar and juices and serve in sherbet cups. Strawberries, raspberries, or any berry in the season may be used with the fruits.

Artichoke Ring.—Cook twelve artichokes (the Jerusalem variety) until tender, then rub them through a sieve or colander. Add one cupful each of cream and milk, six well beaten eggs, separating the yolks and whites. Add the yolks and when well mixed one cupful of fresh bread crumbs. Now fold in the stiffly beaten whites and pour into a ring mold. Set into a pan of hot water and bake until firm. Serve with the following for filling: Cook together four tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour, add one pint of cream, stir until thick, add salt to season. Blanch one pound of sweet breads and two calf's brains, place in cold water. To a little vinegar add two or three cloves, dash of pepper, small piece of bay leaf and water to cover. Simmer for fifteen minutes or until the meat is well cooked. Drain, remove the fibers and add the sauce. Serve hot after filling the ring.

Crab-Meat Canape.—Mix together one cupful of crab meat chopped, one-fourth cupful of mayonnaise, one teaspoonful of anchovy paste, two olives finely chopped. Spread on toast cut in two-inch diamonds. Garnish the edge with finely chopped hard cooked egg white mixed with chopped parsley. Garnish the top with creamed butter, flavored with anchovy paste and forced through a pastry tube to form a rose.

KEEP RECORD OF ALL INSURANCE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Among the necessary fixed household expenditures in most family budgets there are usually those for insurance of several different kinds, with premium payments occurring on definite dates. As the policies themselves are best kept in a safety-deposit box or safe, it is wise to have an accurate record at home, showing each kind of insurance owned, the face value and policy number, the amount of premium payable, and due dates. If there are many such payments to be made, some sort of calendar reminder is also needed, so that the necessary sums will be set aside at the right time.

The bureau of home economics suggests, in connection with planning and recording family expenditures, that a record of all insurance policies be kept on a special page in the household account book. If the household accounts are entered under the "page-to-a-class-of-expenditure" system — food, housing, operating, and so on—insurance will be found listed under at least four and possibly more of the main heads. All insurance does not serve the same purpose. Under savings will come the forms of insurance which represents money set aside for later use in some form—life, endowment, and annuity policies for various members of the family. Savings usually includes also the emergency fund, or money kept in the bank to meet unexpected demands. It therefore legitimately covers expenditures for insurance carried for the same purpose, such as accident, burglary, and health insurance, and extra premiums on life insurance policies for double indemnity and for partial and total disability.

The important point is to have readily accessible information about every policy owned, with inescapable reminders of premiums due in any current month.

Learn to Group Foods in Proper Class

It will be necessary to learn to group foods so as to place them in their proper class, as an example foods that are high in protein, ones high in starch, mineral matters and fats and then plan your daily meals so as to include sufficient amount of the various food elements. It may take a little time to learn these points, but it will be worth while.

The "Plumed Knight"

Robert G. Ingersoll gave James G. Blaine the plumed-knight title in the speech in which he said: "Like an armed warrior, like a plumed knight, James G. Blaine marched down the hall of the American congress and threw his shining lance full and fair against the brazen foreheads of the defamers of his country and the maligners of his honor."

Beads Add Glitter to Apparel

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A touch of beauty and novelty is displayed in the dress "motif" of "buttons" or "bead embroidery" as they are being interpreted in fashion afternoon frock, beaded design is staging some of its most breath-taking effects.

A charming exponent of the bead-trimmed gown is presented in the picture. This decidedly smart frock is of black chiffon. Its flounced peplum is cleverly manipulated to give soft lines without sacrificing the slender silhouette.

The bead treatment is refreshingly new, as it appears on the yoke and the sleeves of this modish dress. Row-and-row tiny pearl beads are worked in the novel and effective manner portrayed. Which goes to show what a decorative role beads are playing in the mode.

Now that beads are accepted in the realm of daytime fashions even by those of most discriminating taste, style creators are outdoing each other in point of intriguing designfulness. An interesting new theme is the cowl neckline accomplished with a wide border of solidly worked tiny satin seed pearls in either white or pastel coloring. This collar effect together with matching wide beaded cuffs adds a charming note of color to any number of the black or dark-toned crepe frocks which are now in the fashion picture.

Since contrasting sleeves and yokes are so important, designers are turning to unique and colorful beadwork as a means of adding to the chic and charm of this smart vogue. Sometimes the yoke extends so deep it takes on the appearance of a sweater-on bodice. The scheme is worked out beguilingly in two colors, let us say, the upper portion of the dress perhaps of pale turquoise blue crepe or satin or velvet as the case may be, the sweater-on skirt in black. It is a matter of fancy whether the beads be worked in neat motifs conventionally spaced with border treatments trimming the edges or whether the beadwork be concentrated at the neckline and sleeves.

of the hair. Not only are shifting things being done with beads as they find their place in formal evening modes, but in the realm of the daytime

DRY OUT THE ROOM TO KILL BOOK LICE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Did you ever open a book and see a tiny grayish insect, smaller than the head of a pin, scurrying across the pages? This was probably a book louse, or "psocid" like the picture from the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, except that the photograph is many times larger than the actual insect.

These insects like to stay in damp, well-shaded rooms or other places which are not in general use. They feed on all sorts of vegetables and animal matter. They may be found in upholstered furniture, and in mattresses stuffed with hair, feathers, straw, husks, or moss. They rarely become abundant enough to do damage, but when they do they may be destroyed easily by moisture and dryness. Heating the room where they are found long enough and hot enough to thoroughly dry it out will destroy all book lice in it. Fumigation is also recommended in certain cases where book lice have become so abundant as to be a nuisance, but it should be done by some one who has had experience with fumigants.

The ladies of the Literary Club held their annual Christmas Party last Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Avis Staman.

The rooms were beautifully decorated in the Christmas colors of red and green. The festivities came to a climax at 6:30 when the guests and the committee enjoyed a pot-luck dinner.

Due to the operetta given at the Gymnasium and the Methodist Church Service many of the guests departed early. Those who remained participated in several games and contests.

The committee for the evening was composed of Avis Staman, Jennie Sechler, Golden High, Millie Shull, Inez Hadsell and Reba Woods.

Reminders

Once in a while, too rarely indeed to keep us from wide drifting, rare spirits steal across the pages of human experience and, with messages like muffled stones artfully cast, shatter the meaningless temples in which mortals enshrine their deities, liberating anew the Creator—not he who in the beginning did create, but he who always does create—to the recreation of mankind. These humble messengers breathe (not of self-sacrifice and self-denials through which they possess the heart of Christ, but, apart from pomp that vainly boasts itself and covetous commercialism that sports itself at this holy season, they do remind us that Jesus was born in Bethlehem of Judea, that God was made new to the world in his birth, and that he now abides in our wandering hearts encouraging us to peace and goodwill among ourselves, which is a near parallel to reconciliation with him.

DISTRIBUTION OF TAXES ARE HIGHER

The semi-annual distribution of tax money has just been made to the various taxing units by County Auditor Estell Dawson.

The net amount for distribution is $463,110.59, which is $27,000 higher than a year ago.

The warrant for the state of Indiana is $51,765.95 which is $1,500 less than last December. The county general fund gets $57,143.06, which is $10,000 higher. The amount for the gravel road repair fund is $28,718.68, which is $2,000 less. The tax collected for the redemption of road bonds is $84,213.42, an increase of $7,000.

Auburn city gets $1,300 more, Garrett city $1,100 more, Garrett schools $2,800 more, St. Joe town $150 more, Auburn schools $6,500 less and Ashley town $200 less. The distribution to the other units of the county is practically the same as a year ago.

The figures follow:

Auburn city $22,189.81.
Auburn schools $57,430.56.
Butler city $4,156.21.
Butler schools $11,008.27.
Garrett city $14,271.37.
Garrett schools $33,080.52.
Altona town $323.33.
Ashley town $418.79.
Corunna town $714.86.
St. Joe town $633.87.

The assessments in the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Co., are now payable, with a vast difference in the rodded and unrodded class. The rodded class pays 25 cents per $100 while the other is 50 cents. The company now has $10,282,770 of insurance in force in the rodded class and $2,055,280 in the unrodded class, a total of $12,338,050. The total amount of insurance represents a gain of over $700,000 during the year.

Mrs. Chas. Coburn of Michigan is here indefinitely as a visitor in the Fred Hart home.

FAIRY TALE FOR CHILDREN

By MARY GRAHAM BONNER

"How are you feeling?" asked Jingo Elephant of Bingo Elephant. They liked their names of Bingo and Jingo and the children called them by these names, too.

"Perfectly well, I thank you," said Bingo. "I had good exercise after the children had left. They did give us a lot today. Didn't you feel ill?"

"I didn't get quite as many as you did," said Jingo. "But wasn't it funny to see the children?

"At first they wanted to throw the peanuts into the yard. We looked so big that we frightened them—so they said.

"But the keeper told them not to mind us. And then they began to give us the peanuts, which we took into our trunks and so up to our mouths.

"They thought it was funny to see us do it."

"I wonder how they thought we fed ourselves?" asked Bingo.

"I'm sure I don't know," said Jingo. "I found out a splendid trick to do."

"What was it?" asked Bingo.

"I held several in my trunk at the same time when they were giving them to me so quickly.

"That was so I wouldn't miss any while I was getting my trunk up to my mouth."

"Oh, dear, oh, dear," laughed Bingo. "What are you laughing at?" asked Jingo.

"Because," said Bingo, "that is an old trick that has been known by elephants for ever and ever so long.

"As long as the children have been children and peanuts have been peanuts and elephants have been elephants."

"That's certainly a long time," agreed Jingo.

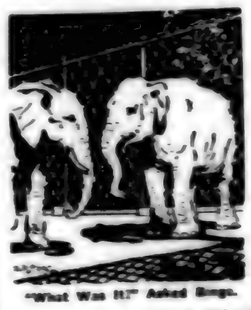
"You just thought it was a matter of course, because it's your nature—as is the nature of every elephant."

"It shows I am growing up," said Jingo, "and I like to grow up."

"I think the children had an idea you were grown up enough," said Bingo.

"Oh, yes, in size," said Jingo. "But I like to be old in years too."

It was night time now and they



"What Was It?" Asked Bingo.

were tired. They started to rest and sleep.

The next morning more children came to look at them, and again they brought peanuts which they put in the end of the trunks of the elephants and watched them carried up to their mouths.

Now the keeper thought it would be nice for the elephants to show off their tricks.

First Jingo made very handsome bows to the children, who were greatly amused.

Next Bingo carried the keeper on his back and up on his head. Then he let him down again.

Both elephants said their prayers and put their trunks around the keeper.

They let the keeper lie down underneath them in such a way that their big bodies did not touch him.

At the end of it all they were given water and hay for a reward.

It had been fun doing tricks for the children.

Tired Feet Need Hot Bath Every Night

Feet shut up in shoes sixteen or eighteen hours of the twenty-four need a daily bath to keep them in good condition. The best time to give feet their hot-water-and-soap bath is at night. In the morning a plunge in a bowl of cold water will make them hardy and keep the skin and flesh firm. Be sure to dry them thoroughly by vigorous rubbing. A little foot powder dusted over them is soothing and helps absorb excess moisture.

Cooking Less Expensive Cuts of Meat

Browning a Pot Roast on All Sides.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

When you go to market to buy a piece of beef, you have to think of two points: What cut will best serve as a nucleus for the menu of the day, and at the same time fit the contents of the housekeeping purse?

Among the less tender and consequently less expensive cuts of beef, there are several which will appeal to the family taste if properly cooked. Heat, moisture, and slow cooking help to accomplish the desired result in such dishes as pot roast, breaded flank steak, swiss steak, or mews. Meat from the less tender cuts is also excellent when ground and used in various ways.

The method of cooking a pot roast is given in a popular free leaflet on the cooking of beef, prepared by the bureau of home economics of the United States Department of Agriculture. Choose a piece of beef from the chuck ribs, cross arm, clod, round, or rump. From four to six pounds is a good weight. Wipe the meat with a damp cloth and rub it with salt, pepper, and flour. Next, brown the meat on all sides in a heavy kettle, using about three tablespoonfuls of beef fat. Slip a low rack under the meat, add one-half cupful of water, cover tightly, and simmer until tender. The time required for cooking cannot be definitely stated, but it will probably be about three hours. Turn the roast occasionally. When the meat is done, remove from the kettle, skim off the excess fat from the liquid, and measure the remainder. For each cupful of gravy desired, measure two tablespoonfuls of the fat and return to the kettle, add one and one-half to two tablespoonfuls of flour and stir until well blended and slightly browned. Then add one cupful of the meat stock or of cold water and stir until smooth. Season the gravy with salt, pepper, and chopped parsley. Serve the pot roast on a hot platter with buttered carrots and stuffed onions.

If desired, any of the following vegetables may be cooked in the pot with the roast: Carrots, onions, potatoes, and turnips. Add the vegetables during the last hour of cooking the meat if they are to be served whole or in quarters. If preferred they may be cooked longer and mashed and served as puree in the gravy.

SOME TESTED RECIPES

By NELLIE MAXWELL

The foundation of education consists of training a child to work, to love work, to put the energy of his entire being into work: to do that work which develops his body, mind and soul: to do that work most needed for the elevation of mankind.—Parker.

Nature has given us a delightful fruit well protected from all outside contamination.

When yellow and still firm it is in its best condition. Flecks of brown on the skin is insurance that the fruit within is ripe. Even dark brown-skinned fruit, if firm, is preferred by many.

Broiled Bananas.—Allow one banana for each person. Cut into halves crosswise, then into halves lengthwise. Dip into melted butter, then into bread crumbs. Grease the broiler and set the bananas in place, broil first on one side, then on the other. Serve hot with a bit of lemon juice poured over each.

Frozen Fruit Salad.—Take five oranges, five bananas, one small can of pineapple, one bottle of maraschino cherries. Dice the fruit, mix well with one cupful each of salad dressing and whipped cream. Put into baking powder cans and pack in ice and salt for five hours. Cover each can with oiled paper before putting on the cover.

Mixed Fruit Salad.—Take one-half cupful each of shredded pineapple, chopped nut meats, orange pulp, grapefruit pulp, maraschino cherries and one and one-half cupfuls of sliced bananas. Mix the fruit, chill and serve with:

Dressing.—Beat the yolks of two eggs, add two tablespoonfuls of butter and one-half cupful of sugar creamed together; now add two tablespoonfuls each of vinegar and lemon juice, one tablespoonful of olive oil, one-half teaspoonful of mustard, one teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of paprika and three-fourths of a cupful of whipped cream, after the dressing is cooked and chilled.

Banana Fruit Salpicon.—Cut four bananas into thin slices. Peel one orange and cut into slices lengthwise, add one cupful of grated pineapple, one cupful of sugar, the juice of a lemon and a cupful of peeled and seeded grapes. Mix lightly with the sugar and juices and serve in sherbet cups. Strawberries, raspberries or any berry in the season may be used with the fruits.

Artichoke Ring.—Cook twelve artichokes (the Jerusalem variety) until tender, then rub them through a sieve or colander. Add one cupful each of cream and milk, six well beaten eggs, separating the yolks and whites. Add the yolks and when well mixed one cupful of fresh bread crumbs. Now fold in the stiffly beaten whites and pour into a ring mold. Set into a pan of hot water and bake until firm. Serve with the following for filling: Cook together four tablespoonfuls each of butter and flour, add one pint of cream, stir until thick, add salt to season. Blanch one pound of sweet breads and two calf's brains, place in cold water. To a little vinegar add two or three cloves, dash of pepper, small piece of bay leaf and water to cover. Simmer for fifteen minutes or until the meat is well cooked. Drain, remove the fibers and add the sauce. Serve hot after filling the ring.

Crab-Meat Canapa.—Mix together one cupful of crab meat chopped, one-fourth cupful of mayonnaise, one teaspoonful of anchovy paste, two olives finely chopped. Spread on toast cut in two-inch diamonds. Garnish the edge with finely chopped hard cooked egg white mixed with chopped parsley. Garnish the top with creamed butter, flavored with anchovy paste and forced through a pastry tube to form a rose.

Hints for the Busy Housewives

To keep butter perfectly sweet and fresh the container should be washed and scalded for each new print.

Chocolate stains can be removed by soaking in cold water as soon as possible after stains appear.

To foster a love of reading in children, see that they are provided with comfortable chairs and good light placed conveniently near.

One can use ice received in the morning to make ice cream or ices and afterward use the ice for keeping the refrigerator cool.

A palatable way to serve cold boiled potatoes is to put them through the sieve, season them well with butter and salt, form into cones and brown in the oven.

Bottles can be deodorized with powdered black mustard seed and water.

Kerosene or gasoline should be applied to the machine at intervals. This cuts the hardened oil that may have accumulated.

Make baking powder biscuits in the usual way, then when ready to roll out mix with a cupful of clean dry currants or chopped raisins.

When baking cookies turn the pan upside down and bake them on the bottom. They will bake more evenly both on the top and the bottom.

KEEP RECORD OF ALL INSURANCE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Among the necessary fixed household expenditures in most family budgets there are usually those for insurance of several different kinds, with premium payments occurring on definite dates. As the policies themselves are best kept in a safety-deposit box or safe, it is wise to have an accurate record at home, showing each kind of insurance owned, the face value and policy number, the amount of premium payable, and due dates. If there are many such payments to be made, some sort of calendar reminder is also needed, so that the necessary sums will be set aside at the right time.

The bureau of home economics suggests, in connection with planning and recording family expenditures, that a record of all insurance policies be kept on a special page in the household account book. If the household accounts are entered under the "page-to-a-class-of-expenditure" system—food, housing, operating, and so on—insurance will be found listed under at least four and possibly more of the main heads. All insurance does not serve the same purpose. Under savings will come the forms of insurance which represents money set aside for later use in some form—life, endowment, and annuity policies for various members of the family. Savings usually includes also the emergency fund, or money kept in the bank to meet unexpected demands. It therefore legitimately covers expenditures for insurance carried for the same purpose, such as accident, burglary, and health insurance, and extra premiums on life insurance policies for double indemnity and for partial and total disability.

The important point is to have readily accessible information about every policy owned, with inescapable reminders of premiums due in any current month.

Learn to Group Foods in Proper Class

It will be necessary to learn to group foods so as to place them in their proper class, as an example foods that are high in protein, ones high in starch, mineral matters and fats and then plan your daily meals so as to include sufficient amount of the various food elements. It may take a little time to learn these points, but it will be worth while.

The "Plumed Knight"

Robert G. Ingersoll gave James G. Blaine the plumed-knight title in the speech in which he said: "Like an armed warrior, like a plumed knight, James G. Blaine marched down the hall of the American congress and threw his shining lance full and fair against the brazen foreheads of the defamers of his country and the maligners of his honor."

Beads Add Glitter to Apparel

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

A wealth of beauty and novelty is expressed in the terms "beaded" or "beadwork" or "bead embroidery" as they are being interpreted in fashions of the hour. Not only are thrilling things being done with beads as they lend their glitter to formal evening modes, but in the realm of the dressy afternoon frock, beaded design is staging some of its most breath-taking effects.

A charming exponent of the beat-trimmed gown is presented in the picture. This decidedly smart frock is of black chiffon. Its flounced peplum is cleverly manipulated to give soft lines without sacrificing the slender silhouette.

The bead treatment is refreshingly new, as it appears on the yoke and the sleeves of this modish dress. Row-and-row tiny pearl beads are worked in the novel and effective manner portrayed. Which goes to show what a decorative role beads are playing in the mode.

Now that beads are accepted in the realm of daytime fashions even by those of most discriminating taste, style creators are outdoing each other in point of intriguing designfulness. An interesting new theme is the cowl neckline accomplished with a wide border of solidly worked tiny satin seed pearls in either white or pastel coloring. This collar effect together with matching wide beaded cuffs adds a charming note of color to any number of the black or dark-tonal crepe frocks which are now in the fashion picture.

Since contrasting sleeves and yokes are so important, designers are turning to unique and colorful beadwork as a means of adding to the chic and charm of this smart vogue. Sometimes the yoke extends so deep it takes on the appearance of a sweaterish bodice. The scheme is worked out beautifully in two colors, let us say, the upper portion of the dress perhaps of pale turquoise blue crepe or satin or velvet as the case may be, the sweater-ish shirt in black. It is a matter of fancy whether the beads be worked in neat motifs conventionally spaced with border treatments trimming the edges or whether the beadwork be concentrated at the neckline and sleeves.

DRY OUT THE ROOM TO KILL BOOK LICE

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Did you ever open a book and see a tiny grayish insect, smaller than the head of a pin, scurrying across the pages? This was probably a book louse, or "psocid" like the picture from the bureau of entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture, except that the photograph is many times larger than the actual insect.

These insects like to stay in damp, well-shaded rooms or other places which are not in general use. They feed on all sorts of vegetable and animal matter. They may be found in upholstered furniture, and in mattresses stuffed with hair, feathers, straw, husks, or moss. They rarely become abundant enough to do damage, but when they do they may be destroyed easily by sunshine and dryness. Heating the room where they are found long enough and hot enough to thoroughly dry it out will destroy all book lice in it. Fumigation is also recommended in certain cases where book lice have become so abundant as to be a nuisance, but it should be done by some one who has had experience with fumigants.

CHRISTMAS DAY in OTHER LANDS

by Louise Hastings

"COME, Hedwig," called her mother. "It is time to light the candle."

"Why do we light it, Mother?" asked five-year-old Hedwig, as her mother proceeded to light it and pass it to her daughter.

"Put it right here in the window, and then I will tell you a story," replied her mother.

Hedwig climbed into her mother's lap and the story began: "This is a legend that people have loved for many, many years. It is thought that on Christmas eve the Christ Child returns to earth in search of kind and deserving people. He wanders over hill and dale, from castle to hut. And people who think of this beautiful legend still do as they did in other days. They place lighted candles in their windows that he may see the way and not stumble and fall. Sometimes he does not find people who will open their hearts and doors for him; sometimes he finds the way dark and full of pitfalls; but on and on he goes searching for loving people. So every Christmas eve we place our lighted candle in our window so that if he comes this way he will not find it dark."

"I am glad we have a candle burning," said Hedwig. "Perhaps it will light the way for others, too. Do all little Austrian girls and boys light their candles on Christmas eve?"

"Yes," answered her mother, "and they do it in other parts of the world, too."

It was a beautiful, warm day and Jacko was getting ready for his

Hedwig of Austria.

Christmas celebration. "There go the bells, Mother," he called. "Shall I go now and meet the other children who will be in the parade?"

"No, child," his mother answered. "First we must go to the service. That is more important than the floral procession."

Jacko took his mother's hand and together they went to the church. He always loved that, and today, because it was Christmas, the service would be more beautiful than ever.

After this early service was over, Jacko's mother said, "Now you may join the children who are to parade the street, my child. Do you hear the music?"

Did he hear the music? He certainly did! It was a real band at the head of the procession, and Jacko couldn't get into line quick enough.

"How beautiful the flowers are!" he thought to himself as the procession of children and flowers and music began its march through the streets, "and how happy everybody looks!"

The afternoon was devoted to feasting and games and many kinds of enjoyment, but to Jacko the best part of the Christmas day was the floral parade, and for weeks and weeks he lived over again his marching with the other children, and he could hear the wonderful echo of the band long after the Christmas day and its celebration had passed.

Jacko of the Philippines.

"Father," asked little Marie, "when will Pere Noel come? May I sit up and greet him?"

"No, no, child. No little folks must greet Pere Noel," replied her father. "Go over by the great log and keep very quiet. If you are good this Christmas eve Pere Noel will send down sugar plums in the night."

"When shall I put my shoes beside the Yule log, Father? Is it time now?" asked little Marie, who was impatient to have her part of the evening's festivities begin.

"Put your shoes by the great log when you go to bed, but keep very quiet now and listen to the older people sing their carols. Here come the minstrels to join with us," answered her father as he patted her on the head and smiled into her upturned eyes.

Keeping as quiet as her excited little heart would allow her, Marie watched the burning of the huge oak log and wondered many things. All around her was merriment and song, but she wanted the sugar plums that Pere Noel would bring if she were good, so she kept as silent as it was possible. But she wasn't silent inside, not a bit of it! She was just about bubbling over with joy and happiness, and all of the time she was thinking of the sugary plums which she hoped to find in her shoes, and the Christmas gifts which she would receive on the morrow and again on the New Year's day. Oh, it was a wonderful night, and she was glad that she belonged right there with her dear father and mother and the songs and the Yule log!

Marie of France.

"Mother," said Florian, "isn't it nearly time to start for the cathedral?"

"Not yet," she replied. "You must be patient a while longer. Come and help me give little sister her supper. Just as soon as the sun sets you will hear the cannons boom forth and the Holy Season will begin. Soon after that we shall start because we want to get a good place in the cathedral tonight."

It was hard for Florian to wait. This was the first time he had been allowed to go to the church services on Holy Night. Always he had seen the others go to this most important church event, but he had had to remain at home. Now the time had come for him to enter into the ceremonies, and he could hardly wait to start.

To the children living in Rome this Holy Night service is the most wonderful one of all. There is the beautiful church music to be heard, and the whole service is very magnificent. Florian's heart beat fast as he thought of all he was going to see and hear.

Hark! What was that noise? The cannons were booming! "Shall we go now, Mother?" he asked.

"Yes, Florian," she replied, taking him by the hand tenderly. "We will join the crowds on their way to the great cathedral and have a part in the great service." And little Florian was so happy he could hardly speak.

REVIEW: THE PATTERN OF CHRISTIAN LIVING

GOLDEN TEXT—Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.

PRIMARY TOPIC—How Jesus Wants Us to Live.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Some Examples of Christian Living.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Lessons from the Lives of Others.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Fellowship with Christ.

For senior and adult classes two good methods of review may be used: The first may be designated character study of the principal persons mentioned in the lessons of the quarter; namely, Zacharias and Elisabeth, Mary, Simeon and Anna, Peter, Thomas, Zacchaeus, Stephen, Saul, and Timothy. In using this method assignment should be made the week before. The second method may be designated the summary method in which the salient facts should be noted followed with the leading teaching. In this case also, assignment should be made a week ahead.

Lesson for October 5.

The parents of John the Baptist were noted for their godliness. Zacharias means "Jehovah hath remembered." Elisabeth means "covenant maker." Every indication is that this pious couple wrought together for God. John the Baptist was a great man. Much can be expected of a child born of such parents and brought up in such a home.

Lesson for October 12.

God chose Mary to receive the greatest honor ever conferred upon a human being. To fill this place of honor meant exposure to suspicion as well as much suffering and hardship.

Lesson for October 19.

The ability of Simeon and Anna to discern the Messiah was due to a special revelation of the indwelling Holy Spirit, not merely because they were pure in heart. The grace which they possessed is available to every believer.

Lesson for October 26.

The believer experiences a vital conflict going on within. This conflict is due to the fact that he was once born of the flesh and afterward born of the Spirit. Victory over the flesh is to be obtained through the power of the indwelling Holy Spirit.

Lesson for November 2.

Peter through over-weening confidence fell, even denying his Lord. The occasion of his denial was the sifting to which Satan subjected him. Through the prayer of Jesus Christ he was restored.

Lesson for November 9.

Thomas is everywhere presented in the Scriptures as of a skeptical mind, but he was an honest doubter. The Lord is pleased to be put to the test. No honest skeptic has ever remained in darkness.

Lesson for November 16.

The centurion's faith in Christ brought healing to a very dear servant. Genuine faith links man with Omnipotence.

Lesson for November 23.

A noble young ruler failed to get eternal life because his heart rested on earthly riches. Christ demands man's whole heart.

Lesson for November 30.

Zaccheus did not allow difficulties to keep him from seeing the Lord. The sight of the Lord moved him to repentance. This is always true. He proved the genuineness of his repentance by making restitution.

Lesson for December 7.

Stephen, while called to minister in the temporalities of the church, witnessed of Christ in the energy of the Holy Spirit. He sealed his testimony with his blood. To those who are faithful unto death a crown of life shall be given.

Lesson for December 14.

The sight of Jesus Christ transformed Saul, the savage persecutor, into a most ardent witness for Christ.

Lesson for December 21.

Through the faith of a godly mother and grandmother, Timothy was nurtured for God. Careful home training is rewarded with pious children.

In Communion With God

As long as we dare to think that the secular life must be a separate existence from the spiritual, that earthly engagements cannot be fulfilled in uninterrupted communion with God, just so long are we living outside the purposes of God, contradicting the majesty of our true nature, and denying the efficacy of the gospel of the Lord Jesus.—Prebendary H. W. Webb-Peploe.

The Faith in God's Elect

Neither fear, neither danger, neither yet doubting, nor backsliding can utterly destroy and quench the faith of God's elect, but that always there remaineth with them some rest and spark of faith, howbeit in their anguish they neither feel nor can discern the same.—John Knox.

NOTICE TO CONTRACTORS

State of Indiana,
County of DeKalb, ss:
In the Commissioners Court,
DeKalb County, Indiana.

In the Matter of the Boyd Jennings et. al. Highway on the Township Line between Franklin and Troy Townships, DeKalb County, Indiana.

Notice is hereby given that the board of commissioners of DeKalb County, Indiana, will, up to the hour of 10:00 A. M. on the 6th day of January, 1931, at the commissioners' court room in the Court House of the City of Auburn, receive sealed proposals for the improvement of a highway in said county, which said improvement is known as and designated as the Boyd Jennings et al Highway in Franklin and Troy Townships, which said improvement is petitioned for by Boyd Jennings et al and will consist of grading, draining and graveling of said road as set out in plans, specifications and profiles now on file in the Auditor's Office of said county.

Said proposals received will be for all materials used, all labor performed and for the full completion of the said improvement in accordance with the report of the engineer and viewers and the said plans and specifications and profiles aforesaid.

That the estimated cost of the said improvement is the sum of $4.771.64.

That the length of said highway to be improved is about two miles and is described as follows: Beginning at a point were Troy, Franklin, Stafford and Wilmington Townships, all in DeKalb County, Indiana, corner and intersect and running from thence north on the township line between Troy and Franklin Townships, and there terminates, the said highway being outside the limits of any city, and outside the limits of any incorporated town.

Each bidder must submit with his proposal, a bond with sufficient surety, payable to the state of Indiana, in a penal sum double the amount of his proposal, conditioned for the faithful performance of the work on which he bids, If personal surety is given, they shall be residents and freeholders of the state of Indiana. Each bidder must submit with his proposal an affidavit to the effect that he has not entered into any combination, collusion or agreement with any person relative to the price to be bid by any one; that he has done nothing to prevent any one from bidding; that his bid is made without reference to any other person.

Said improvement will be let as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder duly qualifying as such.

The board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

The work shall be completed within a time to be fixed by an agreement between the board of county commissioners and the successful bidder.

Witness my hand and seal this 15th day of December, 1930.

SHALL I RAISE BROILERS THIS YEAR?

By Prof. P. G. Riley

December, January and February are the months in which chicks for broiler purposes are usually hatched. Ordinarily a good market is found for broilers which are porduced from chicks hatched during these months. Last season, however, saw small or no profit made from these extra early hatches. One of the chief reasons for this was the very heavy holding of cold storage broilers, coupled with the business depression, which kept prices down to the point where there was no real money for the poultry raisers in the early broiler business.

There are some conditions this year which indicate that the production of early broilers might be more profitable than last year. There are only sixty per cent as many broilers in storage this year as there were a year ago. The low prices of poultry meats during the past year have caused the public to become more accustomed to eating large amounts of chickens and particularly broilers. While present business conditions are not generally considered as good, the prospects are that the financial conditins will be as good or better than a year ago by the time these early hatched chicks become broilers. With only sixty per cent the number of broilers to draw from out of storage, broiler prices may be very satisfactory. Chick prices are likely to be somewhat lower than last year, and feeds are considerably below a year ago. These factors should indicate that the cost of production is likely to be lower and the price per pound higher, which are two important factors in making a profit from early hatched chicks.

Better equipment is required for these extra early chicks than for normal brooding. Unless good chicks are secured, the losses may be so heavy that it is difficult to make a profit. The problem of feeding is more important with these early chicks than with the later ones that have access to good range. After one's mind has been made up that there is a good possibility for putting the brooding equipment to double usage for next year in hatching out an early group of broilers before the laying stock for next year is brooded, it is very essential that the equipment be gotten in good shape, that chicks are purchased which will live, and that a tested feeding program is put into practice. These things, combined with good management and location, give promise of a profit to early broilers this year.

Scientists Find Many Metals in Human Body

Such figurative expressions as "a heart of gold," "the iron fist," and "with leaden feet" are received by the recent investigation of two French chemists. Through spectroscopic examination of the ashes of human organs, says Popular Science Monthly, they found there are copper, aluminum and a little silver in the heart; copper, aluminum and traces of the rare metal, titanium, in the lungs; cobalt, nickel, lead and silver in the pancreas; copper, lead and silver in the liver; aluminum, silver and copper in the kidneys and the nearby adrenal glands, and silver, tin and copper in the spleen.

The brain appeared to be rich in tin, and this metal was also found in the thyroid gland, in the neck, which also contained silver, copper, lead and zinc.

Real estate involved in the mortgage foreclosure suit of Lillie Johnson against Stanton Osborn has been sold by Sheriff John C. Armstrong to the plaintiff for $1,-000 and the costs. The property is that formerly owned by Dan Myers in the west end of town. F. B. Leighty has been appointed as the receiver, by the court.

The alienations of affections suit of Henry Reinoehl of Smithfield township, against Jay A. Sutherland is scheduled for jury trial in the DeKalb circuit court on Friday. The plaintiff is demanding $10,000. He says in his complaint that he and his wife, Hazel, and their son, Billy Lee, lived happily until the defendant began calling at his home and paying attention to his wife. He came frequently, says the plaintiff, and they held clandestine meetings and in June, 1929, his wife told her husband she no longer cared for him and would not live with him. She left, divorced the plaintiff and then married the defendant.

Law is a Democracy

"For that is what a law is in a democracy—a statute that the people will back up; indeed, in the long run, that is all a law is anywhere. The laws of a nation or community are the recorded customs of the people . . . and all the historic codes, the Mosaic code, the laws of Solon and Lycurgus, the codes of Justinian and Napoleon, the civil law, the English common law, and the legendary taboos of the savage tribes are but customs that have existed so long that they have crystallized into law . . . It is not the law that makes the custom, but the custom that makes the law, and when statutes run counter to custom they are impotent."—Brand Whitlock's "The Law of the Land," in the Atlantic Monthly.

The commercial supply of iodine is almost entirely obtained from seaweeds. In some of the latter—particularly the giant kelp, known to science as Macrocystis, meaning "big bulb"—the concentration of iodine is extraordinary. That marine plant, enormous in size, anchored to the sea bottom by a stem hundreds of feet long, with a vast floating frond of leaves, contains over one-fourth of 1 per cent of iodine.

Those giant seaweeds are ideal carriers of iodine for human uses. Medicinal extracts made from them are already standardized, and have proved most valuable. But the kelps, vastly abundant, should yield valuable food products. They contain all the worth-while minerals that the ocean holds in solution, and may be regarded as marine vegetables neglected through ignorance.

Holding Old Age at Bay

There is no other joy in life like mental and bodily activity, like keeping up a live interest in the world of thought and things. Old age is practically held at bay as long as one can keep the currents of his life moving. It seems as if one never could get to the end of all the delightful things there are to know, and to observe, and to speculate about in the world. Nature is always young, and there is no greater felicity than to share in her youth. I still find each day too short for all the thoughts I want to think, all the walks I want to take, all the books I want to read, and all the friends I want to see.—John Burroughs in "The Summit of the Years" (above 70).

Significant Number

Forty is a number that has long been regarded as peculiarly significant. The idea may have originated with readers of the Bible, who noticed that Moses was 40 days on the mount, Elijah was fed 40 days by the ravens, the rain of the flood fell 40 days, another 40 days elapsed before Noah opened the window of the ark, 40 days was the period of embalming, Jonah gave Ninevah 40 days to repent, the Lord fasted 40 days, and He was seen 40 days after His resurrection. Old English law also featured many 40-day periods.

Artistic Book Decoration

The term "forage painting" used in book binding is a corruption of the words "fore edge," used to describe the delicate painting or decoration applied to the extreme front edges of the book. When the book was closed, only blotches or masses of colors showed, but when the leaves of the book were partially spread delicate tracery, artistic designs and sometimes elaborate pictures were revealed. Samuel Mearne, book binder to King Charles II of England, is credited with originating this form of decoration.

Pretzel Legend

Pretzels, according to the accepted legend, originated in the monasteries of the Middle Ages. It was the custom of the priests to give a small cake to children who learned their prayers. The cake was called pretiola, meaning "little reward."

One day an ingenious priest thought to make the pretiola symbolical, so he folded the strip of dough to represent the folded arms of children in the attitude of prayer.

Many and Varied

A youngster was starting to school and learning to spell.

"What does A B C spell?" he asked of his mother.

"Nothing," she replied.

"Well, does X Y Z spell anything?" he again asked. And again the answer was "nothing."

A small girl who had stood by, listening intently, remarked dryly. "Seems like there's a lot of ways to spell nothing."

Unusual Malady

Janice's mother had been cleaning rugs with ammonia. That afternoon Janice went next door and the neighbor asked why her eyes were so red.

"Oh, mother's been cleaning rugs," Janice replied, "and I've got pneumonia in my eyes."

Eve's Solitaire Won Jerry

By LEETE STONE

(Copyright.)

EVE ABBEY, winsome sales girl at the silk lingerie section of the mammoth Pendennis department store, was spending a sleepless night. Her consciousness was a whirlpool of conflicting emotion; a fast revolving wheel of desire and doubt.

Every hour she would rise from the narrow cot in her meagerly furnished room, switch on the small electric bulb that jutted out above the bureau, and feast her dark, startled eyes on a beautiful, blue-white diamond, simply set in a svelte circle of old-fashioned yellow gold. Each time she rose she slipped the ring caressingly on the third finger of her left hand; arched her wrist and curved her finger upward to the light—and recelled in the tiny, sword-like flames of fire that lurked and leaped to meet her excited gaze. She might have been measured for the ring. A flawless gem that fit perfectly.

Eve visualized the nonchalant manner she would employ next morning as she flashed the treasure before Alice Foster. Alice would spy it the moment they folded up their counter cover together. It was a matter of nip and tuck between Alice and Eve to gain the permanent devotion of Jerry Edwards, the jolliest and handsomest department store detective that ever cast a keen eye over the daily throng at Pendennis.

Seeing the ring, Alice would surely and surreptitiously point it out to Jerry when he stopped, as he always did, for a moment's chatter at the lingerie counter. Of course, Jerry would mask his curiosity, twinkle his eyes, and say something like:

"Puttin' on the Ritz this morning, what, Evie?"

"Who says so?" she would return casually.

"Some solitaire, eh?"

"Oh, I ——" She would tinge her reply with flippant provocation. "That's an heirloom, an' seeing it's such a nice morning I thought I'd air it."

And so night banter proceed until she succeeded in angling a dinner invitation from Jerry. That accomplished, in view of her combination of charm, sympathy, solitaire and one fancy frock, how could Jerry remain silent any longer? Eve was sincere about Jerry. She loved him.

When finally dawn peeped through the narrow window, and time arrived for Eve to dress and breakfast for another day, she was still lashed to the horns of her first dilemma. But the sting of cold water, action, an two cups of black coffee freed her. A definite solution presented itself.

At the store that morning, matters transpired as Eve had fancifully conceived. Alice pounced on her before the counter covers were folded with a high-pitched "Where'd you get that?" Eve high-hatted the query, leaving Alice no course but to retire into envious silence.

Jerry stopped at Alice's end of the counter about nine-fifteen before the floor became crowded, and Eve saw her thrust a pert head toward his ear; watched Jerry grin and come strolling over. The dialogue took place almost as etched in her mind during those long sleepless hours. He did hold her hand; he did examine the ring, very closely, adding:

"'S a Crown Jewel all right, Evie. Used to work in Maiden Lane when I was a kid . . . got so I could pick 'em. Say, Evie, you look swell this morning. How about a bite with me tonight?"

That was the first event of the day for Eve. The second was the reprimand she received from the floor manager for being fifteen minutes late in from lunch. How the hours dragged until the great event of the day—dinner with Jerry.

Over dessert, after a merry hour at a little place Jerry liked, he said:

"Let's glimpse that sparkler again, Evie. You know how it is . . . like to hold your hand, see? Sure enough! But honest, kid," an infectious grin as he reached for her unresisting fingers, "it kinda gets me, you're havin' that. Isn't our kind of ornament, Evie. Goes with silks and swells an' . . . Say," his expression changed and a professional Jerry spoke quietly, "where's the sparkler you wore this morning? That one was worth a thousand dollars in Maiden Lane. This cost two-fifty or three on Nassau street. What's the game, little girl?"

"Some detective, Jerry! I took the real one back to the swell lady that lost it. She lives on Park avenue and she gave me twenty-five dollars. That's how I got a call-down for being late this noon." Her eyes filled with longing. "... It was wonderful, wasn't it, Jerry? ... I got this fake just to play I owned one like that. And I put twenty dollars in the bank, Jerry."

Jerry just sat and thought—still holding the capable little fingers. Finally Eve began to be afraid.

"Gee! Evie, you could have gotten away with that sparkler as easy as pie. Say, you're a pretty swell little dame yourself. And square. That's what I like. Come on, Evie; let's sit in a movie. I got somethin' to talk to you about—somethin' to ask you, may be."

Jade Earrings Told on Her

By HELEN ST. BERNARD

(Copyright.)

FOR twenty-five years the annual ball at "Strathmore School for Girls" had been the big event; then all the cadets from the nearby military academy came in their colorful uniforms of French blue; then sweethearts, fathers and mothers from home.

Tonight the college was in readiness for that day of days—tomorrow. At her window at the far end of the second floor hall Sally Cole, teacher of English and literature, sat looking out over the rolling campus bathed in a soft silver moonlight. Twenty years ago she had been a girl of Strathmore and had been thrilled at the prospects of the annual ball. She, too, had had her party dress—a white voile with lace-edged ruffles around the bottom.

And it was twenty years ago tonight that the waltz and two-step had sounded out over the campus until the wee hours of the morning, and Sally Cole had danced nine dances with the tall blond cadet in blue; had walked with him beneath the oaks in the moonlight and eaten her ice cream and cake with him behind the palms in the gymnasium. He had liked her white dress but most of all, he had liked her jade earrings, long slender pendants set in dull gold, falling almost to her shoulders. He had said jade was his favorite color. And he had kissed her that night and said he would come back.

Sally had never left Strathmore. Following her graduation she had been placed on the faculty. And she was smilingly tolerant of the whispered consultations long after the quiet bell had rung. They were young, and only once . . . she argued to herself.

She moved to her dressing table to arrange her hair when a dark, slender girl came in, radiant in a coral chiffon frock.

Alice Wayne was the school's harum scarum and rules meant little to her. Sally knew of the happy-go-lucky father who was seldom home long enough to get acquainted with his lovely, motherless daughter. Alice showed her letters from Africa, Asia, Central America and recently, from Egypt.

"I thought I'd find you dressing for the dance, Miss Sally, dear. Alex is here, and I don't know what to do with him."

"Alex?" queried Sally. "Which one of the swains is Alex?"

"Alex is my father. He landed in New York this morning."

"Oh, I am glad he is your father. I thought it might be another admirer arriving in addition to the three already here. Aren't you happy to see your father?"

"Oh, yes," drawled the girl. "But I hardly know Alex. He is a good old scout, but such a vagabond! But I do declare, Miss Sally, dear, I don't know what I shall do with him with Bobby and Hank and Earl to look after."

"Well, my dear, do not neglect your father. You are all he has, you know. Let the boys shift for themselves."

Sally smiled, with the despairing wisdom of youth.

"Alex is lecturing me something fierce for having my hair shingled. Says he likes old-fashioned girls. Oh, Miss Sally, let me do your hair. Part it in the middle and coil it low on your neck. Please, Miss Sally. . . . And you should have earrings."

Sally Cole smiled at herself in the mirror an hour later. Her usually sleek hair was softened over the ears and coiled low on her neck. Her dress was white, a lovely soft silken thing she had bought in New York. Sally always had a white dress. For a second her hand toyed with the jade earrings in her jewel case. Twenty years ago tonight she had worn those exquisite things . . . and then she was fastening them in her ears.

As she joined the other members of the faculty Alice Wayne spied her and came across the floor holding fast to the hand of a big blond man.

"Miss Cole, Alex. And Miss Sally, this is my father."

He looked straight into Sally's eyes, a questioning gaze. He smiled at her as he took her hand in his, and with the other hand, he touched the earring that nearly reached to her shoulder.

"Earrings of jade . . . a white dress . . . Strathmore . . . and those twenty years are bridged. I would have known you anyway, but the jade really proves you are you. I came back, twenty years ago, but you had not given me your name! I couldn't find you, but I never forgot."

"For the love of Mike, Alex, what are you talking about?" demanded his daughter.

"I mean, young lady, you can save a dance for your old dad along about the last. I will be busy up to that time. Here comes your young Lochinvar in blue. Run away, my dear, and we'll see you later."

Alice Wayne came into Sally Cole's room, long after the last guest had gone. She snuggled down in the big chair beside the window.

"I don't know what it is all about, Miss Sally, but Alex and I are ever so happy. Some one to lecture us and love us. We both need you. And I'm ever so glad that every person doesn't wear jade earrings . . . If that is what made Alex fall for you tonight. Just think! What if he hadn't seen you first . . ."

"But he did, Alice. He saw them first twenty years ago . . . and he didn't forget . . ."

Rose Always Figures in Ceremonies and Feasts

In ancient times as now the rose was the adornment chosen for great occasions, religious, secular or simple and social. When Cleopatra gave her great banquet for Mark Antony roses were spread on the floors three feet thick. The most pretentious banquet the Roman Nero gave was a feast of roses, though the flowers had to be sent from Egypt in winter. On the Campagna the Roman people celebrated a rose festival; in the Middle ages there was observed in Byzantium the "Dies Rosarium," and at Epirus was kept another rose festival called "Rozalia." In times all but forgotten the "Days of the Violets" were observed to honor spring, but the "Days of Roses," held in the month of June, bespoke the coming of summer.

Pedant Ridiculed

Sir James Mackintosh (1765-1832), eminent statesman and historian, had such a pedantic outlook on things that Sydney Smith (1771-1845), contemporary divine and wit, said that a Mackintosh dissertation on pepper would probably run after this fashion: "Pepper may philosophically be described as a dusty and highly pulverized seed of an oriental fruit, an article rather of condiment than diet, which, dispersed lightly over the surface of food, with no other rule than the caprice of the consumer, communicates pleasure rather than affords nutrition, and by adding a tropical flavor to the gross and succulent viands of the North, approximates the different regions of the earth, explains the objects of commerce, and justifies the industry of man."—Exchange.

The SANDMAN STORY

HER CHRISTMAS PENNIES

MAHALIA wanted to have some Christmas presents, and she wanted to do this with her own money.

Now, Mahalia didn't have any money of her own. But she asked her daddy and her mother and her grandmother, who lived down the block, and her aunt and uncle, who lived four blocks away, if she couldn't earn some money.

"I should have lots of errands to run," said her daddy, "around Christmas time at the store. People will want small packages in a hurry—string or ribbon or tissue paper, and every time you run an errand I'll pay you just as I'd pay anyone."

"I'd like to be paid in pennies," said Mahalia.

"Pennies will be paid to you," said her daddy.

"I will pay you a penny a day if you eat a piece of bread at each meal without a fuss," said her mother, "and if you eat two pieces of bread I will give you two cents." Mahalia did not like bread.

Her uncle told her he had an old desk which he hadn't time to clean out, and he had always told her aunt that he would be doing it himself some day, so she shouldn't bother about it. But now, he said, if Mahalia would take all the papers and put them together, and all the elastic bands in another pile, and all the pencils without points in still another, and the ones with points in still another, and put everything nicely sorted and arranged on a table nearby and then dust the desk in every corner thoroughly, he would give her lots of pennies.

"I will go over the papers then and throw away what I don't want, and really have that desk in order. It would be useful to me if it were in order. As it is I don't want to put anything in it for fear it should get mixed up with all the trash there now.

"Of course, you must be very, very particular in a job of this sort."

And Mahalia promised she would be.

Her uncle told her that she could do it between supper time and bedtime, and then it would not interfere with the work she was going to do for her daddy.

Her aunt told her that when she was through with the work for her uncle she could spend several evenings fixing up work baskets about the house.

"The threads and pieces of silk are all mixed up. They're all in a tangled mass. I shall be delighted to see them in order."

Her grandmother told her that if she would come over and brush off the front steps each morning before she went up to the store she would get pennies for that.

"Of course, the snow would be too heavy for you, but it would be a great help at this time to have the steps done, for we're so busy with cooking that we haven't time."

Well, as you can see, Mahalia had a busy time of it. She had many pennies, too.

And she bought every Christmas present that year with her very own money she had earned.

She had felt so much more important, too, than if she had simply been given the money, and they all had said she had worked well.

The way those pennies she earned jingled in the little bag she carried wherever she went!

To Mahalia it seemed as though they were saying:

"Merry Christmas from Mahalia."

And maybe, after all, that was really just what they were saying, those jingling, well-earned, jolly Christmas pennies!

THE WHY of SUPERSTITIONS

By H. IRVING KING

PIEBALD HORSES

IN SOME parts of the country they say that if you make a wish when you see a piebald horse you will "get your wish." In others meeting a piebald horse simply means good luck. This superstition has its origin in mythology instead of magic and is a vestige surviving from the myth of Hippolytus, the "horse-looser," and the story of Diemedes, who built the god's sanctuary.

In the territory of the Veneti, at the head of the Adriatic, was a sacred grove dedicated to Diomedes where a horse was annually sacrificed to him. The horses of this district were famous for their speed; they associated in the sacred grove fearlessly with wild animals which lost their ferocity and were of a piebald breed—which latter fact was accounted for by the priests of the sacred grove by saying that they were "marked with a wolf," the similarity between the color of the spots on the otherwise white horses and the wolf's coat being the evidence. Naturally these horses acquired wide fame and a mystic character; and naturally it is "good luck" to meet with one of the sacred breed today.

FOR THE SEAMSTRESS

OF UTMOST importance to the woman who sews is something to hold the implements of her handiwork. The shops are full of attractive and convenient sewing cases—tables, boxes, screens and baskets. One clever screen, three-leaved, folds together and clamps to make a triangular table. The triangular top is on hinges and is folded down inside the screen when the table is not in use. The little table may be used as a stand to hold accessories of sewing, and the leaves of the screen are fitted with pockets to hold needles, pins, scissors and other articles for sewing.

The old-fashioned Martha Washington sewing table is never out of place and the various other small stands and cabinets are always useful.

Nowadays there is no reason to do all your sewing by hand even if you have no room for a large sewing machine. There are portable electric sewing machines quite as convenient as the portable typewriter. These may be carried from place to place in a comfortably handled box and then unpacked and set up for use wherever you find a convenient electric plug. The machine is placed on a stand or table of any substantial sort.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

"TO HAVE ONE'S BACK TO THE WALL"

HERE is a peculiar expression familiar to all of us—an expression used constantly during the great war and which we understand to describe the condition of standing at bay facing odds, making a last desperate stand.

Interestingly enough, if we think about it, a man in a fight will, except when he is in orderly retreat, automatically attempt to face his enemy.

This tendency seems to be a reflex reaction. And it is from this circumstance, that is, that in an encounter it is the overpowering natural desire to have one's back protected that we have the expression "to have one's back to the wall."

For Meditation

By LEONARD A. BARRETT

NATIONAL DEFENSE

SELF preservation is the first law of life. "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he is worse than an infidel." Self-protection against dangers and safeguarding one's possessions in the presence of the enemy are acts which must be considered both natural and just. It is a duty to protect our possessions not only for our own sake, but also for those dependent upon us.

L. A. Barrett.

While the basic law of self-protection is both natural and just, yet the method used to attain this self-protection may be open to serious question. The life of the jungle is perhaps the earliest application of this law. An animal will kill in order to obtain food. It will also kill for the protection of its young. It is natural for an animal to do this, because the life of the jungle knows no higher law. Such an act cannot be considered murder, for murder implies a moral element, and the jungle is bereft of all moral principles.

Nature also is just but at the same time most cruel. She will tolerate no interference with her development. Any attempt in this direction meets with extermination. The law of the jungle is nature's law in its coldest and most de-humanized form.

The question remains—is the law of the jungle the only method of obtaining self-protection or self-preservation? The very presence of a world of moral values argues in favor of a higher law. This law is Sacrifice. By sacrifice is not meant the surrender of basic principles essential to life and happiness. Life is sacred and is so regarded many times even by the most hardened criminal who will hesitate to kill if given a moment for pause. In moments of extreme danger or as acts of last resort, murder is committed. Dangerous conditions arising from an unwillingness to sacrifice personal or even national ambitions, purposes and passions create a serious menace. Territorial possession which threatens the economic life of another nation is a serious offense. No individual has a right to obtain possessions at the cost of another's honor. Anyone attempting to steal Naboth's vineyard must pay the penalty. Self-preservation and not personal aggrandizement is assured when we are willing to live and let live. National defense must choose between the law of the jungle and the law of sacrifice for the good of all. The one leads to national degeneracy, the other to peace and prosperity.

The Handsome Man

THE STORY

Returning to London, practically penniless, after an unsuccessful business trip, Sir George Sandison takes dinner with his widowed stepmother, his old nurse, "Aggy." He did not approve of her marriage to his father, but her explanation satisfies him.

"Oh, not that from you, Sir Geordie," she cried, and then stretched out a timid, pudgy, capable hand toward him. "Could we not be friends, we two? There's a heap I would like to speak to you about, and indeed there's nothing I wouldn't do for you. You were my own wee laddie when I took care of you."

Sir George looked at her with an embarrassed air. "You make it hard for me, Lady—"

"Aggy to you," declared Lady Sandison promptly. "You called me that when I was your nurse girl, and I'm still wanting to look after you."

"Aggy," he began, after a moment's hesitation.

The maid came in with the cloth and began to set the table, and Sir George watched somberly. What was it in life that caught one and drew one toward the very people one hoped to avoid? He had come, only because of the duty he owed his father's widow, to see her once and be done with her forever—and he found he had forgotten how much he liked Aggy. It was preposterous, but it was true. This was the woman he had cursed, many a day, many a night and he was dining with her!

Lady Sandison hesitated a moment when the maid left the room, and then went resolutely to where she had caused the extra blankets and sheets to be stored, and came back with a bottle of wine.

He stopped her as she was about to pour out a glass for him.

"No, Aggy, none for me, I'm too hungry, and the old man's horrible example is still before my mind's eye. I've been leaving that stuff alone."

"The Lord be praised!" said Aggy, and poured herself a generous glass. "There's no need of wasting His mercies, however. I can take it or leave it, and it has no effect. But to see you so discriminating is like an answer to prayer."

Sir George smiled and began his soup, he hoped not too ravenously. He had not dared take wine on so empty a stomach.

"This good sense you are showing will fit in well with a plan I have," continued Aggy as she took her soup spoon in hand. "How are you off?"

"Do you mean as to money?"

Lady Sandison nodded. "I do so."

"I'm broke," Sir George told her, without emotion. "The Yucatan oil scheme was a failure. I came out alive and without debt, but that's all, I have," he hesitated, then laughed, and continued, "I have exactly seven-and-six between me and the cold world."

"Michty!" exclaimed Lady Sandison.

The maid brought in the fish and served it, during a profound silence.

When she had taken her way to the elevator with the soup plates, Lady Sandison spoke:

"The estate is in an awful bad way."

Sir George nodded. "I suppose so."

"What he did with his money's past finding out." Then she looked at the young man thoughtfully. "I've had a long talk with that lawyer body, Mr. Gillespie, and he approves of what I have done. I've let the house."

Sir George stared.

"Subject to your approval, of course, for it's yours, but I wasn't going to let a chance like this slip by. Some American folk that had more money than I could count in a month of Sabbaths. They wanted Sandisbrae and wanted it that bad that they came up to my price. They are highly recommended. I could pay the servants off with the first month's rent, and get them jobs with the new folk, and the rent for the rest of the season put in bank would settle up the debts, if you agree."

"It sounds quite reasonable," said Sir George, and there was silence again as the maid took the fish plates and brought in the meat course.

It was roast beef with potatoes and cabbage but it was the food of the gods to hungry Sir George, who fell upon it.

Lady Sandison, not having his appetite, ate a little more slowly and between bites studied her stepson.

"Seven and six is all you have?"

Sir George, his mouth full, nodded.

"Where'll you sleep?" asked the practical Aggy.

"I haven't decided yet," Sir George looked at her with a smile. "But at that I'm not 'daunted' as you used to say, Aggy. I'll walk to Havilant's club and ask—"

"He's off and away," interrupted Lady Sandison. "His mother told me that, over the telephone, this very day. He was out at Mont Denys for the week-end. I doubt she sent him there when she heard you were coming back."

Sir George looked somewhat discomposed.

"Why did you—"

"I didn't," said Lady Sandison, flushing a little. She called me. It seems she'd heard that I was here and you were expected, and she telephoned me and asked when you were coming."

"She has heard of the collapse of the oil business, I suppose?"

"I expect. She seemed to know everything but the date of your arrival, and I told her that myself and said that if Lord Archibald wanted to see you he'd just have to wait, as you had things concerning the estate to settle before you were off to America."

Sir George leaned back in his chair and surveyed this extraordinary woman.

"America! Why on earth should I go to America? Where did you get that idea?"

"It popped into my head," said Aggy. "Lady Havilant was so fearfully condescending like, and so feared that you would look up Lord Archie for a loan, that I jist minded myself that the Sandisons were one of the oldest baronetcies in the kingdom and the Havilants but bare two hundred years! So I wasn't letting her try to patronize Sir Steenie's widow or his son. I told her exactly what popped into my head. Glad am I that I did, for it kept burling round and round there till it turned into as good a plan as any I could think of. So if you nothing pressing to do the night, Sir Geordie—"

He looked at her and smiled. "You go too fast for me, Aggy. I have to look for a place to sleep."

"Then that's settled," Lady Sandison declared, but the look she gave him implored him not to refuse her, "if you'll remember that I'm your stepmother and take a shakedown here at my flat. You're that tall and I'm such a shorty that I think you'll have to take the bedroom, and I'll take the sitting room couch."

To refuse, with those blue eyes, generally so hard, fixed anxiously on him, was beyond Sir George. He tried to. He protested, but finally found himself saying: "I'll accept your hospitality gladly, Lady Sandison."

"Aggy."

"Aggy, but I'm to have the couch."

Lady Sandison for the first time that evening actually smiled. "I doubt it," she said. "I doubt you can double up that small, but we'll leave that until the time comes. At present, while the lass is clearing, we'll have the coffee and cigarettes in the sitting room, and I'll tell you this America plan."

"Yes," agreed Sir George, but he set his handsome jaw. Aggy was quite all right and a splendid manager. She had always been that, but she was not going to manage him into going to America.

Aggy saw the set jaw and began calmly: "You'll have mind when you were a wee bit laddie, I was used to tell you stories of my brother, Robert, in America?"

Sir George, absorbed in lighting his cigarette, nodded.

"He's still there, and he's a big man in his way."

"What is his way?

"Some kind of contracting business. Putting up weirs and grand public buildings, bridges and they awful skyscrapers that crowd streets over there."

Sir George nodded to signify his comprehension.

'He's by way of being something awful well off."

Sir George's eyes opened.

Aggy nodded solemnly. "Him and me's been at outs for many a long year on account of a real impident letter he sent me some time before I married your father. He doesn't know I'm married. I refused to go out to America and he pampered the way he said he would pamper me. Rob let fly some awful words about 'd—n obstinate females,' so I jist didn't answer his letter. When he sent some lawyer bodies after me I jist told them to take his money and his messages back to him, I would go my own gait. You see," she added, as Sir George looked at her inquiringly, "I was badly needed at Sandisbrae then. It would have been demoralized, but for me. Your father was rarely himself, and things were not as they had been in my lady's time. You were away in France."

Sir George nodded. He did not want to remember those times.

"I couldn't see my way to leaving the place, especially as your father was making up to Jock's lass, as I told you. And she with little sense in her wee, putty head! So I judged that it would be better for you if I stayed and let your father compromise himself with me. At least that's the way I let him think," she said, with a nod at Sir George.

"I daresay there was a lot of gossip about us, but none of it was true. However, it was my chance to set things right and I took it. Jist when Sir Steenie knew he couldn't be left, I says to him: 'This is no place for an unmarried respectable woman.' 'Then d—t, marry me, Aggy,' he said, 'as I have asked you more than once.' 'Thank you, Sir Steenie,' I says, 'We'll take the night train to Gles'ga and get the license, and I'll warrant you a peaceful life and no more extravagances.' 'Plenty of whisky and peace to drink it in, Aggy, my dear, is my notion of pleasure,' he said."

She paused and sighed, "I did better for him than most, and I saved something for you, Sir Geordie."

Sir George's head was bowed on his hands. "Oh, Aggy, I'm ashamed that I thought of you as I did."

Aggy's firm lip trembled for a moment. "You might have remembered me better than that, Sir Geordie," was on the tip of her tongue, but she held it back and said: "Bless me! What does a lad remember about his old nurse? And it looked bad. But that's by and gone, if only—" and here her composure was shaken for a moment—"if only you believe me now."

Sir George leaned forward and took her fat, pudgy hand, which still bore traces of hard work, and patted it. "Would I be here, Aggy, if I didn't believe you?"

She laid her other hand on top of his—a rare caress from this most reserved person.

"That's my laddie," she said. "Sir Geordie, I have often thought if you'd come back that first year—but then, how could you? It was probably better as it was, and now we'll take stock of what's left us."

"Very little, I'm afraid. The lawyer told me that I had nothing but Sandisbrae left."

"Did he so? There was a little something left over, that your father didn't spend. I let Sir Steenie think he gambled it away one night he wasn't himself, while as a matter of fact I had it hid up the stair, in the tower."

"But that—" Sir George began.

"It's yours. It's no much, but it'll help."

"It's yours," he declared hastily. "It's all the widow's portion you have, Aggy. I'll never touch a penny of it."

Two obstinate Scots stared at each other. It was Aggy, Lady Sandison, who spoke first.

"You were ever a set laddie. There's no change in you."

"There will be no change in me, Agnes, Lady Sandison, must take her lawful share."

Grumbler Throws Away Chance of Happiness

May we be spared from the grumbler . . . And yet, if we would change his grumble into pleasure, we must exert a little patience of our own. Getting impatient and disdainful and short-tempered with him is likely to make him worse. And, after all, it isn't very hard to help these rather trying people along the road of life. The grumbling folk don't have a very easy time. Of course, they can be a positive nuisance to you. But just think what a real nuisance they are to themselves. To have always a spirit of grumbling in one's mind must be a load, the weight of which Pilgrim could never have imagined. In many ways the grumbler's burden is worse than Pilgrim's. You see, there was always a chance of his getting rid of it. He had got into some bad habits, but grumbling was not one of them.

Once you start grumbling, the worst part of your mind will seize upon it, practice upon it, develop it, until you are in the nasty, almost unbreakable meshes of it. Soon it will choke every bit of happiness out of you. Resist grumbling always. Its power cannot grow if you do that.—London Tit Bits.

JAPAN'S NEWSPAPERS

A Japanese Newsboy.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

THE recent burning in Tokyo of the plant of the Japan Advertiser, best known American daily newspaper in the Orient, arouses interest in its Japanese competitors and the way in which western newspaper methods have been adapted to conditions in the Land of the Rising Sun. That Japan should, in the very few years since her modern metamorphosis, have so speedily caught up with the van of periodical publication is less wonderful when one remembers that the Orient is the birthplace of the "art preservative," and that China possesses the oldest newspaper in the world.

There have been similar newspapers from remote antiquity in Japan; small sheets roughly struck off from wooden blocks detailing some great political fact, or describing some crime or some generally interesting event.

The first attempt at a modern journal in Japan was in 1861, when the Kuaigai Shimbun was undertaken by Joseph Hess, a picturesque character, who in 1850 was cast away in the wrecking of a junk, rescued and carried to America. Here he lived for a number of years, acquired a smattering of western ideas and methods, and, when Japan was opened after the visit of Commodore Perry, returned to his native land as an interpreter.

The first modern newspaper monthly worthy of the name was founded by John Black, an Englishman, one of the first foreign residents of Yokohama. This was in 1872. Since then Japanese journalism has grown with wonderful rapidity, both in volume and in character. There are now some eight hundred newspapers and magazines published in the empire, of which more than two hundred are in Tokyo.

Of the newspapers there are the Kuampo, which is the official gazette, containing the government announcements, such as laws, regulations, and appointments; the Kokumin, much quoted in press dispatches from Tokyo, as giving the government opinion of things international during the premiership of Prince Katsura, and the Nichi Nichi, as expressing popular sentiment of the better sort.

Of magazines there are scores of every sort and kind—literary, artistic, legal, medical, scientific—technical along all lines of modern accomplishment and endeavor.

Jiji-Shimpo Is "The Times."

The Jiji-Shimpo corresponds in a measure to our words "The Times." "Jiji" means "timely events" or "daily events." "Shimpo" is the word for journal or merely "paper."

The Jiji-Shimpo is a monument, in a way, to the memory of its founder; not more a monument than a constant reincarnation of his spirit and influence. It was founded 48 years ago by the late Fukuzawa Yukichi, who was often called the Japanese Gladstone. No account of Japan, however brief, and particularly no reference to its intellectual and literary development, would be complete without reference to the life and influence of this remarkable man.

The policy of the paper is independent. It is partisan only in that it is liberal, devoted to progress, and opposed to any retrograde policy in Japanese civilization. When it takes occasion to differ with the government, it does so with dignified and logical criticism, and not with the hysterical effusions that appear in the "yellow" journals that have developed in Japan as elsewhere.

Because of this scholarly and dignified character, Jiji-Shimpo wields a great influence and its voice is potent in shaping and controlling public opinion.

The paper emphasizes its commercial department and a staff of trained men looks after this part of the news.

A foreign department of three editors cares for the cable and telegraph dispatches and keeps in close and intelligent touch with international affairs.

Domestic news is gathered by correspondents in every city and important town of the empire, sifted, and arranged by two editors.

Twenty men compose the city staff and, in close harmony with the reportorial methods of our Occidental papers, cover the local news of Tokyo, a city of more than two million.

In common with all Oriental languages, Japanese is written and printed from right to left, and the title, therefore, is in the upper right hand corner of what would be for us the eighth page. The lines of print are vertical and read from top to bottom and from right to left. Each article is in a small square surrounded by a border.

How the Type Is Set.

Typesetting in Japanese is a tedious and laborious piece of business from an Occidental viewpoint, though the many hands employed make it rapid enough in an Oriental sense. Japanese is printed in two sets of characters—the borrowed Chinese, which are ideographic, each representing a word or a group of words; and side by side with these characters, in their vertical line, runs the transiation or explanation in the indigenous grass characters, a sort of phonetic or stenographic script easily read and understood by the common and uneducated people.

When an article or editorial is ready in manuscript, it is sent first to the ideographic composing room, where it is divided into "takes" and given to Chinese compositors. The room is filled with closely set racks, containing the thousands of varieties of ideographic type.

Each compositor goes from rack to rack looking for the character required. That he may not forget what he is looking for, he sings it over and over audibly, in a cracked, nasal sort of sing-song. A composing room is anything but a quiet place, resembling the chorus of a Chinese theater.

When the article is finished, it is placed in a sort of galley, tied together and sent to the real compositors, who untie it and proceed with a pair of tweezers to place the small grass type beside the ideograph characters. This work demands scholarship of a high order, for it requires not only an accurate and exact knowledge of orthography and language, but general information in regard to the subjects discussed, that the multimeaning characters may be interpreted.

The type thus completed is proved, the proof carefully read and corrected and taken then to the imposing stones, where it goes into the make-up of the paper.

All typesetting is of necessity hand work, as the peculiar character of the language precludes the use of a linotype.

Stereotyping and press work are along the ordinary lines required for an American perfecting machine, from which the paper comes, folded and counted as in one of our own establishments.

The day's work is similar to our own although the hours differ slightly. The editorial department begins activities about eleven in the morning and its work is completed by five in the afternoon. The typesetters are at work by eight. The business offices are open from ten to ten.

The first edition is on the press by eight, in order that it may catch the night trains for provincial circulation. The city edition goes to press at 1:00 a. m.

Christmas

The Miracle Season

By Florence Harris Wells

LET us go back over the centuries that we may see the soft Judean hills flooded with heavenly light; that we may behold the flaming star of the East guiding the three wise men, Melchior with flowing white hair and sweeping, snowy beard; Caspar, a beautiful boy, and Balthasar in the prime of life, symbolizing age, youth and middle age, bowing at the cradle in the manger.

THEY bring from afar their gifts of gold and frankincense and myrrh to the King of Kings, as the song of the heavenly chorus of angels on the plains of Bethlehem floods the air. The Master's touch worked strange miracles long ago. But let us now turn a simple dial and again a miracle has been wrought—even here as it was there so long ago.

THE room is full of sound. The air is charged with Christmas—always Christmas. Even the word is radiant with holiness. With the voices of the present are mingled those of the past. At Christmas man is at his best. It is the blest season of the year. The season of giving and receiving. The season of love reborn. It is the miracle season.

HAPPINESS is in the air. Laughter reigns. In the tongues of all nations voices are raised in greeting. The angels sang out their glad tidings of great joy above the plains of Bethlehem and as often as Christmas comes, the carols, music, bells, voices—all unite in a great singing circle sounding o'er all the world the glad words: A Merry Christmas!
